WATCHDOG GROUP RELEASES REPORT HIGHLIGHTING SEN. NELSON'S TIES TO HEALTH AND INSURANCE INDUSTRIES

Report released following Nelson's controversial statements that he will oppose a public insurance option

Nelson has taken $2 million in contributions from health and insurance industries

Washington, DC – Sen. Ben Nelson's (D-Neb.) ties to the health and insurance industries raises serious questions for Nebraska residents about their Senator's views on health care reform, according to a new report issued today by the nonpartisan campaign finance watchdog group Public Campaign Action Fund.

The report shows that Sen. Nelson, over his three Senate campaigns, ranks fourth in the Senate in lifetime contributions from insurance interests, only trailing three Senators who have run for President. Nelson has received nearly $1.2 million in campaign contributions from these insurance interests alone, according to the nonpartisan Center for Responsive Politics.

"Sen. Nelson's statement last week that he will oppose a public health plan raises serious questions regarding who he represents in Washington – insurance companies and their profits, or Nebraskans who want reform of our wasteful and inefficient health care system," commented David Donnelly, Public Campaign Action Fund's national campaigns director.

"Congress has an image and trust problem that is hard to shake when lawmakers like Sen. Nelson oppose comprehensive health reform while raising money from insurance and health care interests," Donnelly said. "To counter that, Sen. Nelson should add his name as a cosponsor of the Fair Elections Now Act. In doing so, he would ensure that he truly believes that the voices of all Nebraskans, not just the special interests, should be front and center when discussing health care."

The report details a revolving door between Nelson's staff and health lobbying interests. Three former members of his staff now work for lobbying firms and a former health care lobbyist works on Nelson's staff.

The report is at http://www.campaignmoney.org/healthcare/nelson .

The Fair Elections Now Act was introduced by Sens. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.) and Arlen Specter (D-Pa.) on March 31, 2009. It would establish a system of small dollar contributions and public financing for congressional campaigns freeing candidates from taking special interest dollars and the expectations that often accompany them.

Public Campaign Action Fund is a national nonprofit organization dedicated to improving America's campaign finance laws and holding politicians accountable for the favorable treatment they give to political donors.

KIRKPATRICK FOR ★ ARIZONA

John --

If you've already heard the news, I'm sorry for repeating myself.

Andy Tobin just accepted a MASSIVE personal check from one of the Koch Brothers -- which will no doubt be used to smear my record across Arizona.

Evidently, this is the new normal.

I know we may sound like a broken record sometimes, but we're running in one of the most competitive seats nationwide -- a pure toss up.

From now until Election Day, we're going to see group after group try and sway the outcome of our race.

John, Arizona voters -- not the Koch Brothers -- should decide who represents them in Congress. Can I count on your support?

Subject:	Re: Pushback on immigration

Miryam, also copying John and Amanda on a proposed first draft of an oped as follows:

I worked closely with Hillary Clinton on comprehensive immigration reform when we served in the United State Senate. And I also work closely with Secretary Clinton on advancing the relationship between the United States and Mexico during our service in President Obama's cabinet. While Secretary Clinton was always a leader and advocate for Latinos, Senator Sanders was no where to be seen on these issues and outwardly opposed our efforts to fix America's broken immigration system and take millions of people and their families out of the shadows of fear and despair.

In 2006, Senator Clinton and I worked closely with Senators Kennedy and McCain to pass comprehensive immigration reform. Through all the heated debates on the floor of the Senate, Hillary stood her ground in her unwavering support and we succeeded. During that time, Representative Sanders was absent from advocating for us in the House of Representatives and the bill died.

In 2007, we tried again with Senator Kennedy in the lead. This time Bernie Sanders had joined us as a colleague in the Senate. And when it came down to supporting moving forward with the comprehensive immigration reform, Senator Sanders voted against us opposing the collective efforts of Senators Kennedy, Clinton and many other Senators.

The issue then, as is now, a defining civil and human rights issue of our time. And that is why we need Hillary Clinton to be the next President of the United States so we as a Nation can finally resolve the issue of immigration which now tears our nation apart and dims the lives of over 11 million people who work in the shadows of our society.

The issue of immigration is also inextricably tied to the relationship between the United States and Latin America. On President Obama's cabinet, I worked closely with Secretary Clinton as she forged historic agreements with Mexico on matters like water on the Colorado River and the historic Gulf Of Mexico Transboundary Agreement.

Hillary Clinton knows and understands the issues of immigration and Latin America in her heart. My father used to tell me in Spanish "Dime con quien andas y te dire quien eres"...."tell me who you walk with and I will tell you who you are." Today in this historic election for President, I am proud to walk with Hillary Clinton.

John and Jake --

We have seats for you on the plane from NY to South Carolina on Saturday. Debate prep still scheduled on Saturday from 11:00am-3:00pm -- wheels up time at approximately 4:00pm.

Please plan to travel home commercially on Monday since HRC is staying in SC for events.

Our HRC RON for the weekend is the Belmond Charleston Place.

For planning purposes, we are not holding any time for any additional debate prep in South Carolina on Saturday and would expect prep would start no earlier than 10:00am on Sunday.

Please let us know if you have any questions, thank you!

November 2015 Wellness Newsletter

We know this is a busy time of year for everyone, with exams and the holidays fast approaching. Please remember to take time for yourself! Last chance flu shots are still available. See below for times and locations. Thursday, November 19th is the American Cancer Society's Great American Smokeout. Smokers are encouraged to put out their cigarettes, at least for a day. It's also a good time to share information with the smokers in our lives. November also marks American Diabetes Month as we educate ourselves about a disease that affects millions of Americans. Thanksgiving is almost here, so take the time to be thankful for the health and wellness in your life and the lives of your loved ones. We are posting a Gratitude Graffiti Wall on the wellness bulletin board, located next to Student Life, so please take a few minutes to share what your are grateful for.

I hope you have a wonderful month.

Yours in Health,

Karen

Flu Shots – Last Chance

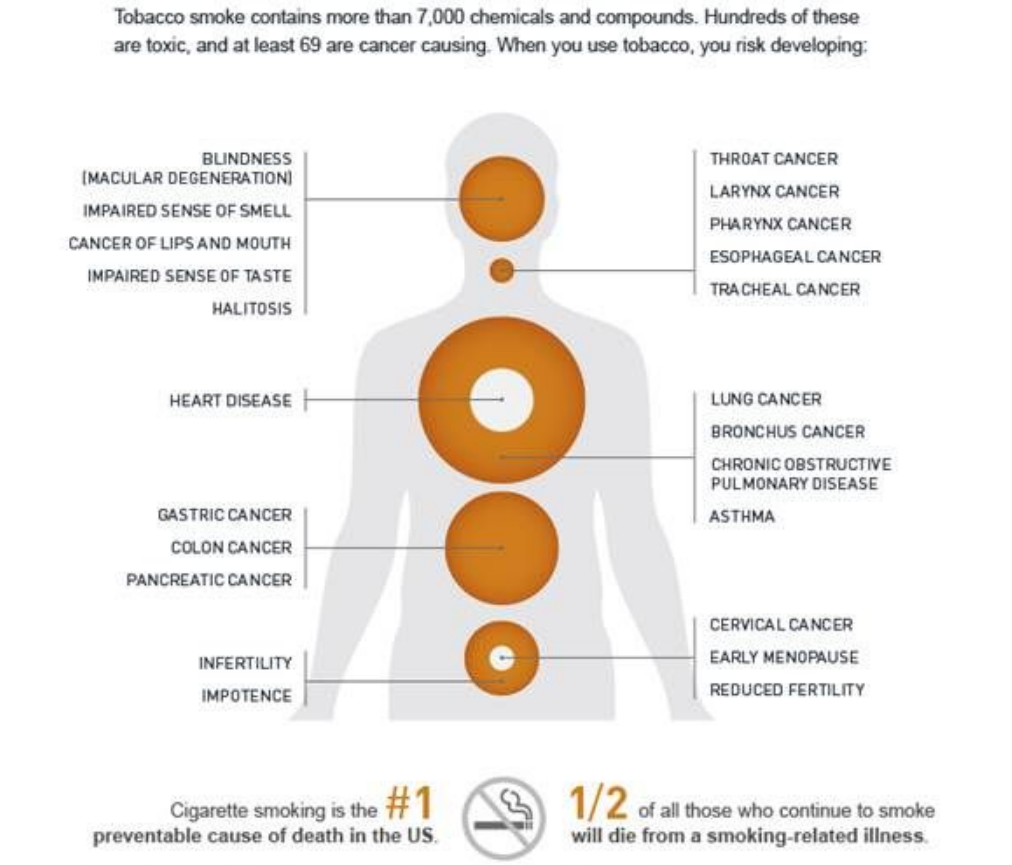

There is one more flu vaccine clinic being held at the law center: Tuesday, Nov 3rd from 4pm-7pm in the Sport & Fitness lobby. Vaccines are free of charge, but please have your GoCard with you. First come, first served. (Staff will also have an opportunity for a flu vaccine during the Nov. 10 Benefits Fair.)

Great American Smokeout

Every year on the third Thursday in November smokers are encouraged to use the opportunity to quit smoking for at least that day and to consider a plan to quit for good. By quitting — even for one day — smokers will be taking an important step towards a healthier life – one that can lead to reducing cancer risk.

Tobacco use remains the single largest preventable cause of disease and premature death in the United States, yet more than 55.8 million Americans still smoke cigarettes, according to the "National Survey on Drug Use and Health." As of 2013, there were also 12.4 million cigar smokers in the US, 8.8 million smokeless tobacco users (chewing tobacco and snuff), and 2.3 million who smoke tobacco in pipes.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Please remember, smoking is prohibited at least 25 feet from all entries, outdoor air intakes, and windows. Please don't smoke near the doors!

American Diabetes Month

American Diabetes Month is an important part of the American Diabetes Association's fight against diabetes. This year's theme is "Eat Well, America!" Below are some facts on the disease and some tips for eating well:

Diabetes Facts:

Diabetes affects nearly 30 million children and adults in the U.S. today—nearly 10 percent of the population.
Another 86 million Americans have pre-diabetes and are at risk for developing type 2 diabetes.
African Americans and Hispanics are almost twice as likely to have diabetes as non-Hispanic whites.
Diabetes nearly doubles the risk for heart attack and death from heart disease.
Diabetes is the leading cause of kidney failure.

Tips on eating well:

Plan your meals- plan shopping trips and meals ahead of time by creating shopping lists; this will reduce the temptation to buy junk food when you're at the grocery store.
Watch your portions- controlling portion size during mealtime is important. Eating smaller amounts but at regular intervals will help you feel fuller for longer periods.
Look up healthy recipes- sticking to healthy recipes will help you incorporate good food choices and cut out unhealthy foods when preparing your meals.

Go to http://www.diabetes.org/in-my-community/american-diabetes-month.html to stay up to date throughout the month.

Stress Management

Below are a few techniques to manage stress:

Get moving- Physical activity plays a key role in reducing and preventing the effects of stress. Go to the gym or walk outside, just get up and move.
Try deep breathing- Take a 5-minute break and focus on your breathing. Sit up straight, eyes closed, and slowly inhale through your nose, feeling the breath start in your abdomen and work its way to the top of your head. Reverse the process as you exhale through your mouth.
Try meditation- Sit up straight with both feet on the floor. Close your eyes. Focus your attention on reciting -- out loud or silently -- a positive mantra, while letting your thoughts float away. Speaking of meditation…..

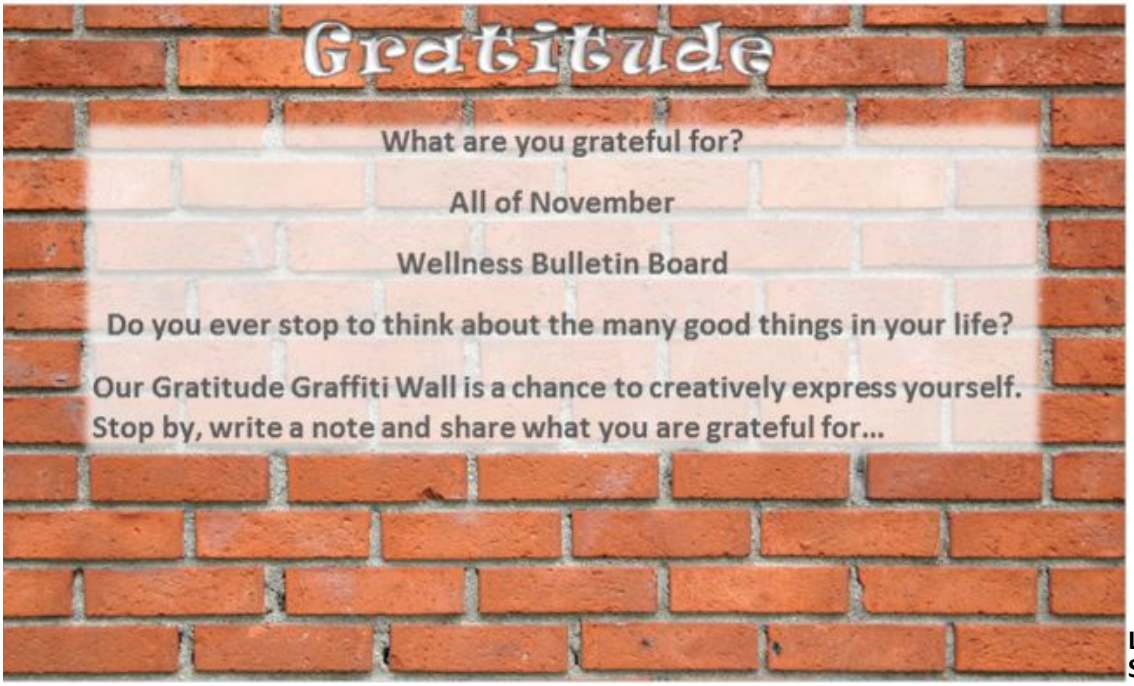

The Contemplative Law Society offers daily meditation. Monday-Thursday, from 12:45- 1:15 (Doors open at 12:45, the meditation starts at 12:50), in Gewirz 109. Sign up on the Orgsync page to gain access to some meditations tips and stay in touch with what CLS is up to!

Annual AHA Heart Walk

Saturday, November 7, 10am, National Mall

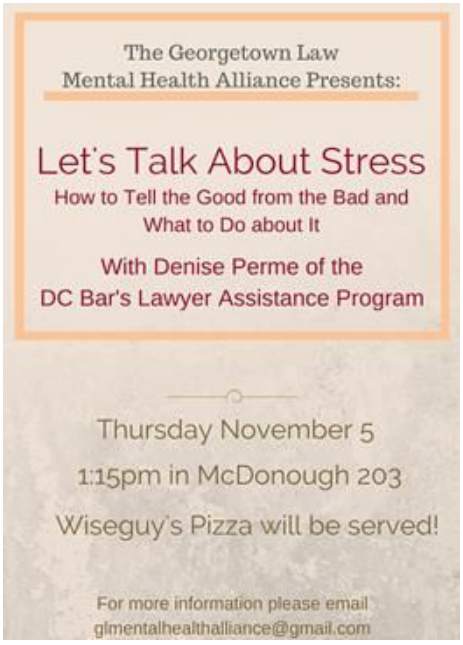

The Heart Walk is the American Heart Association's premiere event focusing on saving lives from America's No. 1 and No. 5 killers - heart disease and stroke. Designed to promote physical activity and heart-healthy living, the Heart Walk creates an environment that's fun and rewarding for the entire family. Walk with friends, family, coworkers or strangers you'll bond with along the way.

One and three Mile Routes are available at the walk. Get involved, get moving and click here to join the GU team or start your own team. Georgetown University will be competing against other local schools for the title of Top University at the Heart Walk.

I am telling my California friends who are interested in what's going on with the weather (and that's all of them!) to sign up for Daniel Swain's weather blog. Daniel is a brilliant young PhD student here at Stanford who coined the "ridiculously resilient ridge" moniker that had the state in the grip of drought for 3 years. His monthly blog is always insightful and interesting.

Here's the link of his latest post, which came out yesterday: http://www.weatherwest.com/archives/3478

P.S. Daniel's blog has nice graphics too; check out his Pacific water termperature graphic!

BTW, Daniel is part of Noah Diffenbaugh's group at Stanford. Noah collaborated with Chris Field to write yesterday's terrific NYT op-ed that explained how climate change is exacerbating California's weather (drought and floods): nyti.ms/1LnFVN1

Subject:	Standing up to Ro Khanna's recent distortions

Dear John,

I woke up this morning to an email from Ro Khanna — which I've attached below — complaining about one of our emails. It seems Mr. Khanna didn't like that our campaign told the truth.

You see, Ro is a good man, but in his quest for power he's aligned himself with Republicans locally and nationally. If you don't believe me, just look at what he says. He reads from the same script of pre-planned attacks on our campaign as the Republicans, and he even once attacked Mike Honda for being "too liberal" — not unlike a Republican would.

Make a contribution of $17.88 — our average online contribution this month — to tell Ro Khanna that you're standing with Mike Honda, not the Republicans, in 2016 >>

In comparison, Mike Honda is a lifelong Democrat who would never align himself with the Republicans in this way to win an election. He takes on the right-wing to bring justice and peace to everyone in this country. That's what makes Mike Honda a great Congressman.

Ro Khanna may not be able to admit this — even to himself — but Mike Honda has been the leader we need in Washington, and he's the leader we need now as the voices of intolerance and fear grow stronger across this country. I'm all-in to stand with Mike Honda and make sure he's standing with people like us, and not the Republicans, in 2017. Are you?

Make your contribution of $17.88 before the FEC fundraising deadline expires tonight >>

In solidarity,

RO KHANNA FOR CONGRESS

Hi Michael --

I now am convinced that there is nothing Mike Honda will not do to hold on to political office. Yesterday, he sent out an email to raise money misrepresenting my party affiliation, and failing to mention that I worked for President Obama for two years. A copy of his email is below. Mike Honda actually had the gall to imply that Donald Trump's supporters were behind my candidacy.

Everyone knows that I am a Democrat, inspired by my grandfather who spent years in jail under British colonialism in India. I have stood up against racial profiling and for human rights my whole life and in our community.

Let us send a message to Mike Honda. Your politics based on lies and distortion will not work. We are sick of it. We want change and a politics based on fact and reason.

Please support my campaign for change so we have the resources to fight back against the establishment and old guard. I need everyone's help to get our message out.

I promise you I will never resort to ad hominem attacks and will work to solve issues for our district and country.

Click here to support our vision for change.

Thank you for taking a leap of faith in my candidacy.

Sincerely,

Ro Khanna

MIKE HONDA for CONGRESS

Dear Friend,

I'll cut to the chase:

Mike Honda has spent his career fighting for justice and equality in Washington — and the Republicans can't stand it. That's why they're aligning themselves, again, with our opponent, Ro Khanna, in attacking one of the nation's leading progressive champions.

It's shameful — and we can't let Donald Trump's Republican Party get away with.

Contribute $3 or more to our campaign before tomorrow's deadline to help us fight back.

At a time when fear is rising again in American politics, we cannot afford to lose Mike Honda's voice in Congress. Can you speak up today to support our campaign?

Thanks,

Subject: [big campaign] Halperin: McCain agrees with Obama on inflating tires

Anyone have the audio?

OOOPS — He Did It Again

McCain displays his normal “discipline” at a Tuesday tele-town meeting, undermining days of (questionable, desperate, and — apparently — effective) attacks by his campaign and the whole Republican Party on Obama’s call for tire inflation to save fuel.

McCain: “And could I mention that Senator Obama a couple of days ago said that we ought to all inflate our tires, and I don’t disagree with that. The American Automobile Association strongly recommends it.”

Subject:	Hello and Hillary Clinton 2016

Hi, John:

Congrats on doing an amazing job for Barack Obama during the last year or so. The Dems will be in much better shape as we head into the 2016 race because of your efforts. I hope you can now get some respite before your next chapter commences!

You may recall that we spoke back in May 2013 as I was heading to Georgetown to participate on an alumni panel about President Obama's Second Term Legacy about my passionate interest in becoming involved in Hillary's 2016 presidential campaign should she decide to run. Having been very involved in her 2008 race when we came up short, I would like to help her achieve a victory this time. You connected me with Craig Smith at Ready for Hillary who I have been keeping in touch with since. And, after my trip to Little Rock for the 10th Anniverary Celebration of Bill Clinton's Presidential Center, I met with Burns Strider at Correct the Record who put me in touch with Capricia Marshall and Minyon Moore with whom I have also spoken to express my interest.

I understand from them - and from the press reports, including this week's very complimentary NYT story about you - that you will be spearheading her presidential campaign effort. So, I thought I would get in touch with you again now to re-iterate my interest in committing my efforts to help elect Hillary as our 45th - and first woman - President should she decide to run. And, I am willing to be considered for any staff/advisor role in which you and others believe I can be of most help to the campaign team.

I have attached two documents: one, my biography and, second, my Linkedin Profile Resume which will provide you with my more detailed professional experience. You can also view my on-air television interviews and my political writing on my Straight Scoop Politics blogsite at www.StraightScoopPolitics.com . Although I realize that you have known me since I was a young 19 year old volunteer in Joe Duffey's Senate campaign in Connecticut, if you would like any further information or have any questions, please let me know.

John, given my campaign, political and media experience, the campaign areas that come to mind where I might be the most useful in a prospective Hillary Clinton presidential campaign are:

* communications and media outreach/on-air interviews;

* principal and/or surrogate scheduling and advance;

* state director or political director; or

* senior advisor floating in the campaign as needs arise.

But, as I mentioned earlier, I am happy to be considered for any role which you and others believe is a good match for my experience and fills a need for Hillary Clinton's campaign. And, my location here in Fairfield County, Connecticut would make my transition to her campaign very easy as I would not need to move, at least not initially, should she decide to run and establish her campaign headquarters in New York City or Westchester County.

John, I look forward to the opportunity to have conversations with you and others in the weeks ahead as you and Hillary Clinton and other close advisors formulate a campaign structure and staffing for campaign positions. I welcome the opportunity to come to Washington - or New York - to meet with you and others at any time.

Many thanks for your consideration.

My best,

Chris

We've recently met with McCaskill and Casey, and will be doing more meetings with Senators and hopefully a few Governors post-election. Our message to them is to support the proposed regs and not do anything that would weaken them.

If that's right, does that argue for making the final rules tougher: a) because a veto will be required regardless, so there is little added political cost from making them stronger; and b) If there is in the end a negotiation, and if the Prez feels he must give something, there would be something that could be traded away without going to the core of the big difference that the rules as proposed accomplish. I'm reachable most hours at my mobile below, but also would be glad to schedule a time to talk if that's best for you.

AMERICA RISING: ANTI-AMERICAN BUSINESS AND ANTI-GENEROSITY, ROUND TWO

ATTACK: The right-wing attack group, America Rising, is at it again today, attacking Hillary Clinton and General Motors for their involvement with the Clinton Global Initiative, which is holding its annual meeting this week in New York.

KEY POINTS:

• America Rising came out swinging today against two core American values – American-owned businesses and the virtue of generosity.

• America Rising wants to defile the work of the Clintons so badly that they are willing to make fun of the America n value of generosity and criticize General Motors, an American-owned company, for its support of the Clintons' charitable work.

• The Clinton Global Initiative has helped improve the lives of over 430 million people in more than 180 countries and has worked to secure $103 billion to spur innovative solutions to make the world a better place.

• The Clinton Global Initiative is nonpartisan and brings together the best minds from the government, business, nonprofit and academic sectors throughout the globe to find solutions to the world's most pressing challenges.

• America Rising is led by Mitt Romney's former 2012 campaign manager, who must have forgotten that Romney himself has praised the Clinton Global Initiative for its "astounding impact" and for demonstrating "the effectiven ess of entrepreneurship and social enterprise."

• This is just like when America Rising attacked Bill Clinton for buying watches from Shinola, a Detroit-area start-up that makes their watches in America using American-made products. Our response is the same as it was then : Made in the USA is the way to go. So is kindness. It's a sad day when America Rising has to be reminded of th at.

BACKGROUND:

Romney: "I have watched the astounding impact of this Initiative from afar." "Since serving as President here in America, President Clinton has devoted himself to lifting the downtrodden around the world. One of the best things that can happen to any cause, to any people, is to have Bill Clinton as its advocate. That is how needy and neglected causes have become global initiatives. It is that work that invites us here today. As I have watched the astounding impact of this Initiative from afar, I have been impressed by the extraordinary power you have derived by harnessing together different people of different backgrounds, and different institutions of different persuasions. You have fashioned partnerships across traditional boundaries -- public and private, for-profit and nonprofit, charitable and commercial." [Romney remarks to CGI, Wall Street Journal, 9/25/ 12; Video]

Romney: "The Clinton Global Initiative has also demonstrated the effectiveness of entrepreneurship and social enterprise." "The Clinton Global Initiative has also demonstrated the effectiveness of entrepreneurship and social enterprise. You endeavor to not only comfort the afflicted, but to also change lives [through] freedom, free enterprise, and the incomparable dignity of work. Free enterprise has done more to bless humanity than any other economic system not only because it is the only system that creates a prosperous middle class, but also because it is the only system where the individual enjoys the freedom to guide and build his or her own life. Free enterprise cannot only make us better off financially, it can make us better people." [Romney remarks to CGI, Wall Street Journal, 9/25/12; Video]

The Spirit of King: Urgency and Hope from the Birmingham Jail

In 1963, Martin Luther King was not being celebrated with a national holiday. He was a controversial figure who found himself in the Birmingham jail.

While he was incarcerated, he wrote one of the most remarkable letters in American history.

It was written during a critical campaign of civil disobedience, in response to another letter published in the press from moderate clergy who urged restraint on the civil rights movement. The letter is an eloquent argument explaining "Why we can't wait". But it is much more.

King dispatches all of the "moderate" arguments for inaction and "patience." He clearly paints the picture of what it is to be the subject of discrimination and oppression. He says, "We know through painful experience that freedom is never voluntarily given by the oppressor; it must be demanded by the oppressed….For years now I have heard the word 'Wait'! It rings in the ear of every Negro with piercing familiarity. This 'Wait' has almost always meant 'Never.' We must come to see with one of our distinguished jurists, that 'justice too long delayed is justice denied.'"

But then toward the end of his letter, after cataloging the horrific treatment of African Americans, he does something quite remarkable.

King could easily have written a letter that was nothing more than condemnation of hypocrisy and inaction….he could have focused on the horrific record of European settlers in the New World—exterminating the Native Americans, enslaving African Americans.

Instead he calls on all Americans to live up to the values inherent in the other set of American traditions…the traditions that celebrate equality and freedom.

King believed that everyone has within him both a potential for good and a potential for evil. Rather than simply decrying the potential for evil, or the evil itself, he sought to reawaken the potential for good. That is a key lesson that is absolutely necessary to make America successful today, just as it was in the 1960's.

He closes his letter:

"….I have no fear about the outcome of our struggle in Birmingham, even if our motives are at present misunderstood. We will reach the goal of freedom in Birmingham, and all over the nation, because the goal of America is freedom. Abused and scorned though we may be, our destiny is tied up with America's destiny. Before the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth, we were here. For more than two centuries our forebears labored in this country without wages; they made cotton king; they built the homes of their masters while suffering gross injustice and shameful humiliation—and yet out of a bottomless vitality they continued to thrive and develop. If the inexpressible cruelties of slavery could not stop us, the opposition we now face will surely fail. We will win our freedom because the sacred heritage of our nation and the eternal Will of God are embodied in our echoing demands… "

"…Let us all hope that the dark clouds of racial prejudice will soon pass away and the deep fog of misunderstanding will be lifted from our fear-drenched communities, and in some not too distant tomorrow the radiant stars of love and brotherhood will shine over our great nation with all of their scintillating beauty."

"Yours for the cause of Peace and Brotherhood."

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE CONTACT: Lauren Weiner, 202-470-5870

New Poll Released Showing 60 Percent of Americans Back President Obama's Financial Reform Plan

Poll Finds Independent Voters Particularly Receptive to Reform Measures Included in Sweeping Wall Street Reform Bill Debated This Week in the U.S. House

Click Here to Download Summary Polling Memo from Anzalone Liszt Research ***

Washington D.C. – As the U.S. House of Representatives begins debate today on the Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2009, Americans United for Change released a new poll finding strong support for President Obama's plan for responsible financial regulatory reform, which will stabilize the financial system and spur job creation. On behalf of Americans United, Anzalone Liszt Research conducted 1,000 live telephone interviews with likely 2010 voters across the country between November 30 and December 3, 2009. Among the key findings:

- Overall, 70% of voters believe that the country's financial system needs either major reforms or a total overhaul.
- When voters learn about President Obama's plan, support increases dramatically. Once voters hear a description of the President's financial reform plan that focuses on increasing oversight over big banks, protecting consumers, and cracking down on corporate abuses, support rises by 25 points to 60%.
- Independents are particularly receptive to the plan. Among Independents, the increase in support for the plan following the description was particularly large (31 points), leading them to support the plan by a 19-point margin (56% to 37%).

Tom McMahon, Acting Executive Director, Americans United for Change: "The American people resoundingly agree it is time for a new era of accountability in our financial system. And when it comes to the President's plan to bring about long-overdue change on Wall Street, the people on Main Street like what they hear – from preventing future government bailouts by increasing oversight of big banks, to banning financial incentives that encourage Wall Street employees to take risks that threaten people's savings, and closing the loopholes that allow banks to avoid regulation. The American people also back the creation of a Consumer Protection Agency to crack down on abuses committed by credit card companies and mortgage lenders."

"It's unfortunate but not at all surprising that the Republican Party of No intends to once again stand in the way of reform at the behest of the over 100 Wall Street lobbyists they met with this week," added McMahon." "By opposing financial reform, Congressional Republicans are sending a clear message to the American people: we don't want to know what Wall Street is up to and don't care if they keep taking the same kinds of risks with your money that got us into this mess."

Roll Call: House Republicans Huddle With Lobbyists to Kill Financial Reform Bill

By Anna Palmer
Roll Call Staff

In a call to arms, House Republican leaders met with more than 100 lobbyists at the Capitol Visitors Center on Tuesday afternoon to try to fight back against financial regulatory overhaul legislation.

House Minority Leader John Boehner (R-Ohio) kicked off the 4 p.m. meeting, along with Minority Whip Eric Cantor (R-Va.) and GOP Reps. Kevin McCarthy (Calif.), Scott Garrett (N.J.) and Jeb Hensarling (Texas).

"The message was [House Financial Services Chairman Barney] Frank and the Democratic majority are ruining America, ruining capitalism, and stand up for yourselves," said a lobbyist who attended the meeting. "They said, 'Look, you all oppose this bill, but only a few of you have come out publicly.'"

In addition to asking trade associations to get their members in Congressional districts to write letters opposing the legislation, Republicans asked for companies and trade associations to use their Democratic consultants to gather intelligence on where members of the Congressional Black Caucus and the Blue Dog Coalition are in supporting the legislation.

Subject: Re: MEMO re: Trumka Mtg from Nikki

There have been 8-10 IBEW locals that have endorsed Bernie in the NE. They have a new President that is still trying to get a handle on his office and is up for reelection next year. Lonnie Stephenson the new President succeeds Ed Hill who was well respected and the Grandfather of the Building Trades. Lonnie has big shoes to fill.

I think we will struggle to motivate them to move before the IA caucus.

I am privately meeting Liz Shuler on Friday for drinks. She is out of the IBEW to pick her brain. Sherrod is also very close to IBEW.

Dear John,

Pizza night is a tradition Cheri Bustos shares with her family. The family gathers at Frank's Pizza in Silvis almost every week to eat pizza and spend time together. Our first TV ad highlights "Pizza Night" and introduces voters to the Cheri her neighbors know- and we wanted you to be one of the first to see it.

CLICK HERE TO WATCH "Pizza Night" and contribute $10, $25, or $50 to keep it on the air!

Like many women across Illinois, Cheri is a working mom. She and her husband Gerry, a Sheriff's Deputy in Rock Island County, have three grown sons and two grandchildren. They started out working opposite shifts to make ends meet and, after 21 years still live in the same house.

Cheri is running because Washington has its priorities wrong. In Congress she will fight for what's right, be a voice for the middle class, protect Social Security and Medicare and work to get our economy back on track.

We need your help to keep our ad on the air! Can you contribute $10, $25, or $50 to help tell Cheri's story?

Thank you so much for all you do. We couldn't tell Cheri's story without generous contributions from generous people like you.

With appreciation,

Obama Expected To Send Strong Message to Big Banks: No Longer Business as Usual

Financial Reform Needed To Set the Country on the Road to Recovery

Latest NBC/WSJ Poll says Americans want stronger regulations to rein in Big Banks: "Nearly three-quarters say that not enough has been done to regulate Wall Street and the banking industry"

Washington, DC – Americans for Financial Reform released the following statement ahead of President Obama's State of the Union address.

Heather Booth, Director, Americans for Financial Reform: "Tonight we expect the President to reinforce his ambitious agenda for financial reform, which includes powerful measures to hold banks accountable for the recklessness that led to our financial crisis and the loss of millions of jobs. We anticipate that the President will again make clear that the cornerstone of this agenda must continue to be creation of a strong, independent Consumer Financial Protection Agency that will crack down on exorbitant fees and deceptive practices of credit card companies, mortgage brokers and others who prey on hard-working Americans."

Nancy Zirkin, Executive Vice President, Leadership Conference on Civil and Human Rights : "We expect the President will use the State of the Union to draw very clear lines: Either you are with the big banks, or you are with the American people. We have certainly seen in the last month, as bailed-out banks pay themselves outrageous bonuses, what's good for the banks is not what's best for this country. Those who oppose this reform are standing with the Wall Street lobbyists who are trying to keep the system rigged so that it benefits them, not us."

John Taylor, President, National Community Reinvestment Coalition : "Tonight, the American people will look to President Obama for ideas and leadership to create jobs and grow the economy. To do so, he must restore confidence in the integrity of the financial system and enact strong measures to purge the reckless and irresponsible activities of the Wall Street banks that brought the economy down. Reform of the financial system is change the American people can get behind."

Dear Mary,

Hot enough for you? The heat waves, along with the overheated political rhetoric, plaguing much of the U.S. this summer have me thinking more and more about our water and our health and how we protect them. And we need your help to do that.

For forty years we've been making sure our waterways are protected, our drinking water is safe, our lakes are swimmable, and our streams are fishable. In that time, we've never seen a Congress as hostile to environmental protections as this one. Polluters and their allies in Congress are relentless in trying to undermine the laws that have cleaned up our rivers, lakes, and communities. They are putting our health at risk and jeopardizing hundreds of thousands of jobs that depend on clean water.

We need Clean Water members like you to join us as we fight back !

Before you head to your favorite swimming hole or fishing spot--before you eat those fresh vegetables grown with clean water--before you have a beer brewed with clean water at that barbeque--take a second to support Clean Water Action to ensure those things are still here for future generations to enjoy.

It's simple: Clean Water Action needs you. We can't fight polluters and their deep pocketbooks without you. Threats to our waters would largely go unnoticed without your support for our work to shine a light on these abuses. Help us make sure Congress protects our water, communities, and health with a generous gift today .

Thanks for your support!

Subject: Congressman Toomey and the "Slaughterhouse-Five"

Dear John,

An ideologue is defined as a "blindly partisan advocate."

A demagogue is defined as "a leader who makes use of popular prejudices and false claims/promises in order to gain power."

But Congressman Toomey – both an ideologue and demagogue – is in a class all by himself.

According to the Daily Beast, Congressman Toomey is the "original Tea Partier." According to Former Rep. Dick Armey (R.,Tex.), whose Freedom Works organization has helped the Tea Party grow, Congressman Toomey is the "father of the Tea Party movement"!

We've surged in the polls … as our Get-Out-The-Vote ("GOTV") operation (lead by our army of volunteers) … is marshaling our resources (your resources) and exposing Congressman Toomey's extreme views through-out the state.

We are rapidly EXPANDING our winning GOTV operation … please make a contribution in support of that operation that is working!

The arc of Congressman Toomey's extreme views mirrors those of other GOP candidates running for the U.S. Senate ... what we call the "Slaughterhouse-Five" (based upon the 1969 novel that explored the "illogical nature of human beings").

With all the "extreme GOP candidates" running this election cycle, Congressman Toomey has been "hiding in the weeds" … a "sheep in wolf's clothing" … BUT … that's all changing! In the last few weeks … "the bark has begun to be peeled back" ... and Congressman Toomey's extreme, radical views are being exposed … as Pennsylvanians are turning into the race!

Even Congressman Toomey's hometown newspaper, McCall, exclaims on its front-page:

- "Does Toomey Have An 'Extreme Problem?'

 Democrats' claim of extremism suddenly seem to be working."

"It is working" … that is why we are quickly EXPANDING our GOTV operation … and asking you to please fund that expansion by making a contribution!

Congressman Toomey and the "Slaughterhouse-Five" hold such radical views as:

- Congressman Toomey believes corporations should pay no taxes, while this past Monday said he won't rule out eliminating the Departments of Labor, Commerce, Energy and Education.
- Alaskan Joe Miller said that Social Security is Unconstitutional and something our government shouldn't have gotten into; Congressman Toomey agrees that we should transition away from Social Security, writing, "We cannot change the history of Social Security, but we can change its future," because Social Security checks are a fundamental rejection of personal responsibility.
- Delaware's Christine O'Donnell refuses to acknowledge that there is a human role in global warming; Congressman Toomey agrees and thinks it "is still very much disputed".

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- Kentucky's Rand Paul opposes the Civil Rights Act and the Americans with Disabilities Act; Congressman Toomey said, “I think hate crime legislation is wrong.”

- Nevada's Sharron Angle wants to phase out Social Security; Congressman Toomey wants to privatize it.

- Colorado's Ken Buck wants a 30% national sales tax on everything, including groceries, rent and doctor visits; Congressman Toomey agrees and also wants a national sales tax, which would raise taxes on the middle class.

Congressman Toomey and the “Slaughterhouse-Five” really do hold beliefs that are “illogical to the nature” of Pennsylvanians and the rest of the nation. (It's one reason why Pennsylvania's leading newspapers have endorsed Joe, dismissive of Congressman Toomey's extreme views that are “out-of-sinc” with Pennsylvanians).

We are quickly EXPANDING our GOTV operation to continue exposing the “illogical nature” of Congressman Toomey's beliefs.

Please make a contribution of $5, $15, $25, $50, $100 – whatever you can afford – to fund that expansion and to sustain our momentum!

It's all “coming together” … we are going to win this race … help us “bring it on home”!

Thank you

Subject: BREAKING New Poll, Sestak 46% - Toomey 45% ... "Sestak is Closing Strong" !!

Dear John,
We are on the move ... MOMENTUM is our our side!

A just released poll (and second poll in a row to do so) confirms we've taken the lead!

Public Policy Polling's ("PPP") Poll has the race:

- Sestak 46% - Toomey 45% !

Here are PPP's main findings:

- "Joe Sestak leads Pat Toomey 46-45 in our newest poll of the race...

 Toomey's support has remained stagnant over the last 2 months while Sestak's has gone up ...There are three main factors driving the increased competitiveness of the race:

 -- Democratic voters are getting more engaged as election day moves closer.

 -- Sestak has wiped out what was an enormous deficit with independents. In August Toomey led 50-27 with them ... Sestak ...now trails only 49-48 with that voter group. Most Democratic candidates across the country are down double digits with independents so for Sestak to be running even with them is a good sign for him.

 -- The Democratic base is unifying more around Sestak.

Here is what's being said upon the release of this breaking poll:

Talking Point Memo says:

- "The shift in independents could spell doom for Toomey's campaign. The ultra-conservative Republican has been relying on dissatisfaction with the economy to turn Pennsylvania's swingy electorate his way -- now it seems, that plan has run aground."

Pennsylvania's Morning Call is reporting:

- "The political winds are continuing to shift in Sestak's favor."

Washington Independent says:

- "Sestak … he's been making real strides … And having followed Sestak around on the campaign trail during his primary run, I can testify to the fact that the man is tireless and seems to possess the magical ability to finish strong in a long and grueling race."

Huffington Post is reporting:

- *"A new poll and high-profile prognostication have heightened the electoral prospects of Pennsylvania Senate Democratic candidate Joe Sestak and spurred talk of another dramatic campaign comeback. … It also jarred loose a sense of déjà vu for those who watched the congressman close the gap against Senator Arlen Specter (D-Penn.) during the closing days of the Senate primary.

"This is his shtick," said one high-ranking operative.

While the ultra-conservative, National Review (who has been supporting Congressman Toomey), is now reporting:

- "Is Pat Toomey Losing Pennsylvania?

 Strange things seem to be underfoot here in Pennsylvania. After a week of optimistic rhetoric from Joe Sestak's campaign about "closing the gap" — according to internal polling — and generating enthusiasm to squelch Pat Toomey's senate bid, a new Public Policy Polling survey seems to confirm their optimism.

 The PPP poll, out today, shows Joe Sestak leading Pat Toomey by one point.

 This troubling news comes on the heels of optimistic talk from the AFL-CIO about the power of union members to close ranks and boost Sestak on Election Day, and news out yesterday that Sestak actually has more cash on hand than Toomey, despite being consistently out-fundraised."

And, Politico is reporting that PPPs President said:

- "[j]ust as he did in the primary Joe Sestak is closing strong. Whether he continues that momentum right through Election Day or Pat Toomey can turn things back in his favor will be the ultimate determinator of who wins the race."

We are "closing strong" … its what we do!!

You've gotten us this far … and WE ARE SO GRATEFUL! Now we are asking you to please provide the additional "fuel" – $15, $25, $50, $75, $100, $250 – even if its just a few dollars – to continue our momentum and "bring this race on home"!

As PPP said, "Joe Sestak is closing strong".

The battle these last 14 days is "whether we continue our momentum right through Election Day or whether Congressman Toomey can turn things back in his favor."

We really do need your generosity. Our closing, operational strategy of "Bring It On Home " is working.

Please make that contribution to support that winning strategy, and to prevent Congressman Toomey from "turning things back in his favor".... every dollar is making a difference!

Thank you … you are all tremendous supporters!!

Best regards,

Rich Sestak

> > Families are stretched in a million directions. So are their budgets. Costs keep rising but most people's paychecks haven't moved in years – but corporate profits and CEO pay keep rising. Quality childcare costs more than college tuition in many states. The minimum wage is a poverty wage. Millions of Americans are held back by student debt. And at a time when more women than ever are their family's main bread winner, too often, they still don't get equal pay. Women of color earn least of all. And just yesterday, the Department of Labor released new data showing that, as our economy gets stronger, men's pay is going up more than twice as fast than women's pay.

I think it would be good to add a line that says, "Yesterday, the US Department of Labor released new data showing that our economy is getting stronger, but that increases in pay for men and women are not growing at the same rate. Men who work full-time saw their pay increase at more than double the rate of women. With more than 2/3rds of our families relying on the income of women to keep their families afloat, this unequal pay growth hurts women, our families and our economy. Equal pay must be a priority if we are going to have a strong economy and strong families."

Hi John,

I'm planning on doing a trail run this weekend at Algonkian Park in Sterling VA and wanted to see if you would like to join?! It's the same course as the Northface 1/2 held in the spring.

Otherwise hope you are enjoying the holiday season! Hugs, Marguerite

Hey John,

I'm walking into my next debate with Congresswoman Hayworth. I'm not worried about that. What really bothers me is that, while I'm in there, voters will be bombarded by Karl Rove-funded attack ads.

Here's the problem: These lies will stick if we don't answer. And if the lies stick, we will lose. It's that simple.

These right-wing groups are spending more than $1 million to go after me. We can't fight back without your help, right away. We need to up our TV buy tomorrow morning, which means we need to raise another $11,325 by midnight tonight.

My Tea Party opponent has Karl Rove. I have an army of grassroots supporters. Let's show them which is stronger. Click here to rush $20 or more so we can immediately get more ads on the air combating the right wing lies.

I promise to take the fight to my Tea Party opponent in this debate - but I'm counting on you to stand with me.

Thanks for everything, I really appreciate it.

First-as we begin this historic year I want to congratulate you, Robby, Dennis and the rest of the campaign team that has designed and built a comprehensive enterprise that will undoubtedly support the election of HRC as our President later this year. I stand ready to take on any assignment that you send my way this year to assist. I will continue to work on fundraising and plan to assist Charlie and Capricia in convention planning as discussed, but am fully prepared to help in any other fashion that would be useful.
Second, I would like to ask a personal favor of you- on March 10 there will be a State Dinner honoring the Prime Minister of Canada. It would mean a lot to me to be invited to that dinner. Frankly, I do not have close ties to the WH staff and am hoping that you might intercede on my behalf in the right spot to advocate for me. The last time there was a State Dinner was 1997 and I was invited-before I was named as ambassador. As an aside, I grew up in Canada (came to US for university), my Dad was born in Canada, and I still spend and enormous amount of time there. I would hope that on the merits it would make sense. Thanks for considering this.
2016 will without doubt be a roller coaster with peaks and valleys, however I look forward to celebrating an historic election in November. All the best.

What happens to gay culture after marriage equality?

Dear reader,

For years, marriage equality has been the rallying point for LGBT activists and allies. Gay culture–whether that means Pride parades or the increasing numbers of openly gay politicians and celebrities–is going mainstream. As television representations of happy gay partnerships have flourished, political momentum has grown. It's been an uphill battle since Hawaii first ruled in 1993 that banning same-sex marriage was unconstitutional. The Supreme Court only struck down all state sodomy laws in 2003. The Defense of Marriage Act, passed in 1996, was overturned in 2013. This month, with Obergefell v. Hodges, the Supreme Court legalized same-sex marriage across the nation. The question is now what next?

Novelist Alexander Chee examines the ways in which marriage equality might be smoke and mirrors, a way to make progress more palatable while pressing issues such as an AIDS cure flounder. He imagines multiple gay futures, good and bad, times when today's reality is as distant as Chee's closeted past.

Delving into the past, Michael Lindenberger visits his childhood home of Louisville, Kentucky. Starting in the 1950s and building through the AIDS epidemic in the 1980s, Louisville boasted a robust—but secret—gay community, which enjoyed a culture exclusive to itself in gay bars, house parties, and activist meetings. Today, gay bars in Louisville don't have to blacken their windows anymore, so what of that exclusive culture? Should it be a relic, too?

Dear National Board and Key Advisors,

I wanted to share with you the great news. Progress Florida launched this week and check out this update from Mark our Florida ED below of all the great coverage as well as their online success.

The hit against Governor Crist on a critical issue comes at the same time McCain is considering him for VP.

Thank you to each of you for your continued support and advice and have a nice Memorial Day weekend.

Re: Update on our launch week

On Wednesday the 21st, Progress Florida was publicly launched and we're just now getting a chance to catch our breath and provide a quick update. I know many of you are looking forward to starting your Memorial Day weekend so I won't get between that with a long report. Instead, here are the top FIVE highlights:

1) Our first Blast Email, a petition to Gov. Crist urging him to stand up to big developers that threaten the Everglades, has been a phenomenal success. The Email was sent to 9,500 Floridians. Forty Eight hours later, the results are as follows:
 a) 34.5% of recipients opened the Email (nationally, the non-profit organization open rate is 17.6%)
 b) 10.2% clicked on the take action link (national average click through rate is 3.8%)
 c) Just under 1,000 people have signed the petition so far (still climbing so go sign if you haven't!)
 d) We've generated 525 NEW sign-ups to our network.
 e) Less than 50 people unsubscribed.

 When you consider that no one knows (or should I say knew,) who we are, that our list was put together like Frankenstein and comprised entirely of people who didn't actively sign-up, we are very pleased with these results. (see attached report for more details on Email action performance)

2) On the earned media front, the launch of Progress Florida received great coverage from many of the state's largest daily newspapers' websites and blogs, including the Miami Herald, Orlando Sentinel, Tallahassee Democrat, and Daytona Beach News-Journal. Additionally, Capital News Service, which feeds TV stories to 10 local news stations across the state, did a package on our Everglades campaign. We know it ran on the Pensacola TV station and we are waiting for tracking reports to see where else it aired. On the radio front - Progress Florida was also featured in a long piece on WMNF public radio in Tampa Bay and Damien, Ray and I were all guests on a 30 minute radio talk show on Florida Progressive Radio, an internet radio station broadcasting statewide.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Upcoming coverage on Progress Florida and our initial campaigns is expected to run in a weekend story in the South Florida Sun-Sentinel on ballot initiatives and possibly the St. Petersburg Times (kudos to Damien, our political director.)

3) Our Steering Committee and Senior Advisory Board at time of launch is already comprised of many of the top progressive movers and shakers in the state, including our indefatigable Chair - Alan Farago (who's quoted in today's NY Times on Everglades– yay.) Leaders in the following organizations are also on board (see attached one-pager for full list of names): SEIU, Florida Education Association, PFAW, Clean Water Action, Progressive Future, ACORN, NAACP, Civic Concern, Center for Fiscal And Economic Policy, and Florida AFL-CIO.

4) Our website is feature packed , "living and breathing" with constantly renewing content and our network is growing fast. Our daily political clips delivery service is up and running and getting great feedback. Our Web 2.0 efforts are well underway with MySpace and Facebook communities expanding exponentially. We already have a corps of Bloggers, including three of the state's most prolific and respected progressive bloggers. (kudos to our online staff – Ray and Jon.)

5) The Blogosphere and Net Roots have been "a buzz" with the launch of Progress Florida. Not only is Kenneth Quinnell, (the God Father of Florida's Net Roots and progressive blogger community,) on our senior advisory board, he's blogging on our site, creating a network of activists using our tools and helping us engage the Florida blogosphere. We've already received great coverage on blogs including OpenLeft, FLaPolitics, FPC Blog, Flablog and others.

So that's a quick update on the launch and some highlights. On behalf of the Progress Florida staff, our thanks to all of you who have helped in making the launch a success, whether it was your input and advice or lending us your name to help establish our legitimacy, we appreciate it and look forward to working with you in building a more progressive Florida.

Hillary,
Just a two-liner, but I'm reading the new QDDR and all I keep thinking is how now it is NATURAL to talk about diplomacy AND development together as part of foreign policy, when NO ONE would have done that before 2008. You changed the frame. Over time that will be as consequential as anything else you did.
All best,
AM

Moose

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: I've eaten moose, too. I've had moose stew.

NEW YORK TIMES: Really?

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: Yeah, in Alaska, moose stew.

So that's why I always got a big kick out of Sarah Palin with all of her, "We're cooking up some moose stew here." (Laughter.)

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: And I'd get up and I'd wash the dishes.

But then, you know, it's like 2:30 in the morning, what are you going to do? So we'd go for a hike. And we would hike up these -- you know, these sort of foothills of the mountains. And the guides told us the most dangerous animal in the park, more than the grizzlies, because the grizzlies will basically ignore you, were the moose.

NEW YORK TIMES: Really?

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: And particularly --

NEW YORK TIMES: Why?

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: -- the mother moose.

Well --

NEW YORK TIMES: I'm sure. I understand, particularly the mother moose. But still the mother grizzly is in the -- you know --

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: But you don't get -- I mean, the mother grizzly's habitat is, you know --

NEW YORK TIMES: It's more --

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: You have to work to get there.

NEW YORK TIMES: You have to work to get there, right.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: Yes. I mean, I saw a grizzly. When we would go out early in the morning, we would -- I mean, you know, we would see these kind of brown humps, and they were the grizzly, and they would be leaning over drinking in the stream, and, you know, then we wouldn't get any closer.

But the moose, so I'm going -- you know, so we're hiking up this trail, and we turn up, you know, on a slight little bend, and there is a huge moose.

NEW YORK TIMES: So you have seen moose?

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: Oh, I mean, like --

NEW YORK TIMES: You've seen many a moose, okay.

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: -- between you and me, Mark, I mean, not that far from where I saw it.

NEW YORK TIMES: Do you -- see, if I were Barbara Walters, now I would ask you if you saw yourself more as a mother moose or a mother grizzly? And I'm not Barbara Walters, so you don't have to answer it.

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: I never thought about it.

NEW YORK TIMES: It's the kind of thing that if you were --

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: She made a lot of money asking those questions.

THE BLIND DATE

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: No, and okay, so from where I stand, and I look out -- you know, first of all, it's wonderful like being in Hanover yesterday, and being in that beautiful grove filled with people, and so many of them so young and thinking, as I sort of just said to them, first time I went to Dartmouth was on a blind date. You know, so --

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON:

No, the only good thing that happened when I went to that conference (at Dartmouth) is that I met this young man who was really charming, and he was a photographer and he was just great. And I had a roommate -- and he was very tall -- and I had a roommate who was very tall. And so he said, "Well, can I come down to Wellesley and see you sometime?" I said, sure. Sure.

And we had a system at Wellesley where -- this is ancient history -- but you would show up and there was a desk and they had bells. And one bell was you had a female visitor, two bells was a male visitor. So we got the two bells, and I knew it was the guy, because he told me he was coming.

So I said to my roommate, I said, "Oh my God, I'm so -- and I've got so much to do. Will you go down and keep the guy company?" And it was like magic.

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: So this is a serious point on that. Anyway, they got married. They've been married for, you know, 50 years or something.

NEW YORK TIMES: Really?

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: Literally. I just knew it. It was one of those things where when I met him, he was artistic and he was kind of poetic and in those days, you know, you were choosing between anguished young men over art and anguished young men over Vietnam, and those were the choices.

NEW YORK TIMES: Right.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: And he was anguished over art and all that came with it.

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: And, in fact their daughter, one of their daughters came to my fundraiser in Philadelphia. I love these stories.

MENTAL HEALTH

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: So the -- you know, I talk a lot about mental health and substance abuse. And I'm doing it because of what people have talked to me about. And I say that, especially in the small groups that I'm speaking to.

I said, you know, three months ago, when I decided, okay, I'm going to do this, I did not think I'd talk about substance abuse and mental health. And then people started talking to me about it.

I had a meeting with some of the youngest, brightest tech minds, and there was a woman there who -- and there were several people there. They started health programs online. And this woman said to me, she said, "One of the biggest trends will be how to undo the damage that the Internet has caused young people."

NEW YORK TIMES: That's interesting.

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: The insidious, pernicious comparisons, the desire to put on an identity before it's ever formed.

And I've talked to college administrators who have told me that they have such an increase in depression, anxiety, panic, just disconnectedness. And it is related to this online life before you're ready.

And I spoke at the American Academy of Pediatrics last fall sometime. They just came out with a very strong recommendation, do not let a child under two watch TV, do not give a screen to a child under two.

FEELING BETTER PREPARED

NEW YORK TIMES: Im curious to know whether it's actually easier to do this having lost before.

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: You know, I don't know if it's just having lost or being older. (Laughter.) And being more -- more just centered about everything, to be, you know, shorthanding it.

I do think having lost was for me an incredible forced learning experience about so much. Moving, you know, immediately into the Secretary of State job, which was all consuming and gave me a whole different set of experiences, becoming a grandmother. I mean, there are all these milestones over the last seven, eight years that I feel have better prepared me for this campaign.

And I have no doubt that I would be a better president.

“RELATING”

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: And we know -- I mean, look, we've just been talking about how do you relate to people in today's political environment? And a lot of it is, you know, the one-liners, the Instagram photo, whatever, the personal stories and all of that.

I don't discount that, I mean, because you're giving people a chance to sort of find in you something that they can connect with. And, you know, I've historically done it more on -- you know, I have a fought for better education. So a teacher will say, "You know, you're my kind of person because I want better education for my students." Or substance abuse or whatever.

So I've more traditionally done it through issues and then built connections. Like when I ran for the Senate -- this campaign, to me, is much more like my first Senate race than my '08 presidential race.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

NEW YORK TIMES: Interesting.

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: Because I had to introduce myself to the people of New York apart from being the First Lady of the United States of America.

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: And it was really hard. And it was slow going and it was bumpy and, you know, I got up every day. And I didn't have -- I had never lived in New York, so I couldn't talk about how this -- I mean, I had been a lifelong Yankees fan, which caused a lot of -- yeah --

NEW YORK TIMES: (Inaudible, mumbles.)

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: Yeah, a lot of flashback on that. So I had to connect with people around things they cared about that I also cared about.

So traveling around Upstate New York, small towns, dying industrial cities, farms, you know, what could I do to help?

And over that campaign, which was a -- you know, was an up and down roller coaster, I was able to do that. And it wasn't because I stood up and said, "You know, I'm like you." Or, you know, "I come from a middle-class family. I have the same, you know, concerns you did. I had to borrow money to go to law school." I didn't do that in that campaign.

Fast forward, I'm trying to both simultaneously now. I am trying to both connect with people on a level of, you know, fighting for them, being their champion, never quitting on the, which is something I don't do, and letting them know more about me.

"NORMAL PERSON"

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: Yeah, well, see, that's what I've learned. I have to -- you know, for me, it is –
I've always felt like just a normal person. I've always -- yeah, did I work hard all my life? Did I, you know, fall in love with a guy who had the greatest political skills ever and become President of the United States? Yeah. I raised my daughter.

You know, so for me, yeah, it is a difference of, you know, degree rather than just this "sui generis" experience. And so I'm always amazed -- it's like, you know, it's like in US Weekly, celebrities are just like you. They go to the grocery store, they put gas in their car, they take their dogs for a walk.

NEW YORK TIMES: And they don't look as good in these pictures, either.

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: And I was always, like, well, yeah, they're people. But I realize that the celebrity culture, principally entertainment, but also to an extent in politics, is a way people are desperate to get information to feel like they know something about you.

NEW YORK TIMES: Exactly.

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: And you can't resist it to the extent -- I've always found it to be --

NEW YORK TIMES: Or control it.

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: Or control it. I always found it to be, you know, just bewildering. Like, really? Well, why do people want to know that? And I get it much more now.

Running as a Woman

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: Well, I've thought it through, and I do get it. Here's my dilemma -- and this is the thing that, you know, we've talked about. Because there's a huge amount of research now -- when I ran the last time as a woman, the research was pretty clear that there was a resistance to a woman President not just among Republicans and Independents, but among Democrats -- like I can't remember the exact numbers, but it was better 15 and 20 percent who said they wouldn't vote for a woman. They didn't think a woman was qualified, could do the job, didn't see a woman as Commander in Chief.

And part of my dilemma in that campaign was how do I deal with this? If, you know, I mean, I'm damned if I do, I'm damned if I don't. If I am too, like, you know, take charge, I can do this job, I understand this job, and here's what I will do for you, that doesn't necessarily attract people who are excited about the idea of the first woman President because it may be a little off-putting.

If I'm, quote, unplugged, if I am so tired and a woman asks me in New Hampshire, "How do you do this?"

NEW YORK TIMES: Portsmouth.

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: And I get tears in my eyes, then people think it's, you know, contrived, but women love it. And I have no reason to have known that, but --

So what I'm finding now is slightly different. And maybe it's because I did run and I did come close and so people have kind of pocketed that. And maybe it's because I did serve as Secretary of State. So it's interesting, when I was introduced in Hannover yesterday, a woman who had supported President Obama introduced me. And she basically said, "You know, last time we wondered about her experience." The old meme came back.

So I'm trying to do something nobody's ever done before, and I think I'm doing it better now, but I think an unplugged woman candidate --

NEW YORK TIMES: It's maybe a little --

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: It's really hard -- hard --

NEW YORK TIMES: That's interesting.

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: -- to deal with. And so, you know, I'm trying to --

NEW YORK TIMES: (Inaudible, crosstalk.)

SEC. HILLARY CLINTON: -- I'm trying to expose more of myself. You know, yesterday I started off saying the first time I went to (inaudible) was a blind date, you know, and big laugh about that and all the rest of it.

They think, oh my God, she went on blind dates. I've gone on blind dates. So, you know, but I don't think I have as much leeway. And it's very subtle, Mark.

It's very subtle. And so I'm trying to let people into my life, I'm trying to relate to people -- not relate to them, you know, talk about being a grandmother --

Talk about, you know, the experiences I had growing up and all that. Talk about my own mother. And in that way, kind of make connections.

But for a woman seriously running for President, if -- you know, you can take either extreme.

I'm not the kind of person who just sort of, lets it go, but for me, I'm much more relaxed. I'm having a much better time.

Subject:	Formal Invitation to Event Honoring Brown v. Board of Education

Dear Mr. Podesta,

I am writing to formally invite you to an event that Poolesville High School's Black Student Union is putting on in honor of the 60th anniversary of Brown v. Board of Education. The purpose of the program is to motivate minorities to close the achievement gap through personal responsibility.

You are a very accomplished and powerful figure in the United States. In addition to being chief of staff to the President of the United States, you have written several powerful pieces on education for The New York Times, establishing yourself as an expert on the subject. In speaking at Poolesville High's event this spring, I expect your expertise and influence to move the minorities of Montgomery County, Maryland to act.

Lending your name to this program would mean a lot. This topic is one that I have adopted personally. Through my experience, success in the classroom is something in our individual control. I maintain a 4.0 GPA at a nationally ranked high school (Poolesville High School), I am the president and founder of its Black Student Union, and an active member of its debate team. I feel strongly that if I can do it, others can too. I am committed to taking all opportunities to motivate youths to perform at their very best, especially minorities. To date, I have tutored 22 young people in my community and wrote a book, A Kids Guide to Getting Accepted into Magnet Middle Schools. Those things were very satisfying and impacted the community positively, but this program is a way to reach more people.

For this event, we plan to reach a large audience through both traditional and social media. It will also be open to all students in the area. I have already secured the location and we are flexible to accommodate any of your needs.

> What: How Young People Can Honor Brown v. Board of Education: Motivational Words and Practical Advice for Ambitious Students
> When: April-May 2015 (Your schedule will dictate the exact date.)
> Where: Poolesville High School Auditorium (17501 W Willard Rd, Poolesville, MD 20837)

With this event, I want make a positive impact on my community. The first step in doing so is securing a speaker, and you are my top choice. I sincerely hope you consider this invitation very seriously as your presence will mean a lot to my community and to myself. This is an opportunity to motivate hundreds of students from the best county in Maryland. I would absolutely love to hear back. Thank you very much.

Sincerely yours,
Nina Todd
Founder and President, Poolesville High School Black Student Union

JOSH GOTTHEIMER
★ FOR CONGRESS ★

Dear Friends --

As Josh's finance director, I have had the opportunity to see first-hand the kind of Congressman Josh would be: dedicated, determined, smart, passionate and indefatigable. His commitment to this district and his country is inspiring and his common sense approach to government would make him a logical choice in this district. I have the great fortune of not only working on the team, but I will also be one of Josh's constituents and it will be comforting to know that someone like him is fighting for the issues that matter.

Running for office in the New York media market is not easy. Getting Josh to Congress will only happen if he has strong financial support from those who believe in him. Can you help Josh by making a $250 contribution today?

We are facing down a critical quarter right now that will end TOMORROW. I know Josh wrote to you last night about being slightly short of his goal. Many of you heeded his call, but can we count on more of you today to push him over the line?

And while I have been very impressed by Josh and his commitment to the district and the country, I am also in awe of the people helping build this groundbreaking movement, his friends, who are willing to get involved and continue the tremendous momentum building. We hope you, too, will decide to be apart of Josh's campaign!

Thank you in advance for enduring the onslaught of emails. We wouldn't push if it weren't important and we hope that you will help us make history!

Thanks,

Kristin Heidkamp

Dear John,
FM Gentiloni's meeting with Amb Susan Rice on Tue Dec 9 has been moved to 2 p.m.
This makes our proposal to meet over a quick lunch at the Embassy not doable any more.

HOWEVER, Minister Gentiloni is really looking forward to meeting with you – even briefly - during his stay in Washington, so he asked me to explore with you two additional options, both of them at the WH since both of you will be there that afternoon:

- Either, immediately BEFORE his meeting with Susan Rice, eg Tue at 1:30 pm;
- Or, soon AFTER his meeting with SR, that is to say Tue at 2:30, or 2:45, or 3 pm.

John, I really hope one of these two options work, this is really important for me, I count on your personal friendship on this.

Grazie!
Hope to see you soon, Claudio

I have talked to Mary Pat and it isnt a priority because we are doing these one on one personal meetings and who we are approaching. And I am fully behind not being proactive with the press.

To play devils advocate- the only concern I have is the negative press Obama is giving re: the 527's and his resistance to them. If this could be a problem that would be my only ask about should we try and move something ourselves, otherwise I am for not getting something out there. Would like to hear thoughts on that.

I talked to Leslie and they will file sometime today. We will let you know as soon as that happens you are prepared.

Thank you all...

Wanted to let you know that we replaced the sheets and towels--wasn't sure if you usually use a cleaning service but we did the laundry and replaced them all so should be good to go for your next weekend away!

A little present on its way to your DC house.

I wanted to make sure everyone had our background on HRC's work for the Children's Defense Fund that took her to South Carolina.

1973: Hillary Clinton Went To Work For The Children's Defense Fund. "That would take us back to 1973, the year she graduated from Yale law school and went to work for the Children's Defense Fund, interviewing juvenile offenders and dropouts." [CBS News Transcript, 2/29/08]

Hillary Clinton "Participated In A Project To Find Out Why 2 Million U.S. Children Were Not In School. The Activists Knocked On Doors In Selected Census Tracts Across The Country.' "One of the group's first staff lawyers was Hillary Rodham, who participated in a project to find out why 2 million U.S. children were not in school. The activists knocked on doors in selected census tracts across the country and concluded many public schools were excluding children who either were not Anglos, did not speak English, were too poor to pay for books or needed medical help." [Los Angeles Times, 4/7/93]

Subsequent Report "Led To A Federal Law Guaranteeing Education For Disabled Children." "The group's subsequent detailed report (now a standard CDF strategy) led to a federal law guaranteeing education for disabled children as well as lawsuits challenging some schools' practices." [Los Angeles Times, 4/7/93]

Hillary Listed As CDF Staff In The Children's Defense Fund Report "Children Out Of School In America." [Children Out Of School In America, CDF, October 1974]

Knocking Doors In New Bedford, Hillary Clinton "Found Children Who Weren't In School Because Of Physical Disabilities Like Blindness And Deafness." "In New Bedford, Massachusetts, I went door to door trying to identify the source of a troubling statistic. At CDF, we took census figures of school-age children and compared those numbers to school enrollments. We often found significant discrepancies, and we wanted to determine where these unaccounted-for children were. Knocking on doors was revelatory and heartbreaking. I found children who weren't in school because of physical disabilities like blindness and deafness. I also found school-age siblings at home, babysitting their younger brothers and sisters while their parents worked. On the small back porch off her family's home in a neighborhood of Portuguese-American fishermen, I met a girl in a wheelchair, who told me how much she wanted to go to school. She knew she couldn't go because she couldn't walk." [Living History, pg. 79]

Children Out Of School In America Was The First In A Series Of Reports From The Children's Defense Fund, Followed By A Report On Children In Adult Jails. "Children Out of School in America" is the first in a series of reports we will issue during the next several months on conditions of children which urgently require recognition and correction. These include problems of (1) children in adult jails; (2) children of women prisoners; and (3) school and other children's record keeping practices." [Children Out Of School In America, CDF, October 1974]

Children Out Of School In America Included Reporting On Children In Adult Jails. "There are other children who have tried to enroll at some time but who were not accepted by the school system. They want to be in school, but are told by school officials that it is not the place they should be. These are excluded children, such as: --children who register too late in the school year -incontinent children or those with spina bifida1. --children whom school officials deem "immature" -older children who try to enroll for the first time in a new school district --children on waiting lists for special programs -special needs children for whom there are no appropriate programs, particularly the physically, mentally, and emotionally handicapped, and non-English-speaking or bilingual children -children who are beyond normal transportation routes in remote rural areas -children in jails2." [Children Out Of School In America, CDF, October 1974]

Children Out Of School In America Found 38,000 Children Under 16 Are In Jail On Any Given Day. "These children are, in fact, totally out of school during the period of their jail detention. About 38,000 children under age 16 are in jail on a given day. This figure does not include city jails and lock-ups. A subsequent CDP study of children in adult jails will show that the figures used do not tell the whole story: it is likely that between 250,000 and 400,000 children are jailed annually. There is no education provided in jail." [Children Out Of School In America, CDF, October 1974]

In South Carolina, Hillary Wrote She Helped Investigate The Living Conditions Of Juvenile Offenders Held In Adult Jails. "Bill was coming home to Arkansas and taking a teaching job in Fayetteville, at the University of Arkansas School of Law. I was moving to Cambridge, Massachusetts, to work for Marian Wright Edelman at the newly created Children's Defense Fund (CDF). I rented the top floor of an old house, where I lived alone for the first time. I loved the work, which involved a lot of travel and exposure to problems affecting children and teenagers around the country. In South Carolina I helped investigate the conditions under which juveniles were incarcerated in adult jails. Some of the fourteen- and fifteen-year-olds I interviewed were in jail for minor transgressions. Others were already serious offenders. Either way, none of them should have been sharing cells with hard-core adult criminals, who could prey on them or further educate them in criminality. CDF led an effort to separate out juveniles and provide them with more protection and faster adjudication." [Living History, pg. 79]

Subject:	Ebola and Global Health Security

John --

I hope and trust you are doing well! I am glad you found the UAC backtground paper to be useful.

On a different topic, over the past six weeks, we at Georgetown have held three events on the Ebola crisis, and I want to pass along three observations, if useful, in your work:

1. Ebola Response. Congratulations on the Administration's ramped up response to Ebola - it is courageous and necessary to deploy US military assets, for the first time, in a global health crisis with all the attendant risks. From what I had heard via CDC and epidemiologists in the affected countries, the virus spread is out of control in the ciites. It is imaginable that Ebola could become endemic in West Africa -- which would be a tragedy.
2. New Global Health Security Structure. Our experience with H1N1 pandemic influenza and Ebola confirm that WHO currently does not (and may never) have the response capacity we need. The situation calls for considering new global mechanisms (including a standing, properly-funded outbreak response capacity, as recommended in the H1N1 after-action report, to address emerging infectious diseases in at least all low-resource countries.
3. Global Health Security Summit. I also hear that the Administration is considering calling for a global summit on global health security in 2015 or 2016. This sounds like a great idea to (1) maintain momentum following the Global Health Security Agenda meeting on Friday; (2) keep attention focused on Ebola and other emerging infectious diseases over the next couple years; and (3) allow the President to have a signature international meeting that reinforces his legacy as a leader building coalitions to address truly global challenges such as infectious diseases.

As always, please feel free to call upon me.

All the best!

John

Bettendorf set to reopen downtown fire station

Bettendorf firefighter Tom Payne assists during a medical call Tuesday. Payne works out of the System Hills Fire Station, currently the only fully staffed station in Bettendorf. By July 1, the State Street station again will be staffed with firefighters.

Council unanimously approves decision to staff State Street site

Jack Cullen
jcullen@qctimes.com

After an eight-year vacancy, Bettendorf's State Street Fire Station is set to reopen July 1.

The Bettendorf City Council unanimously approved the change Tuesday night. The vote included seven promotions within the department and a revised, one-year collective bargaining contract that includes wage restructuring between the city and the firefighters' union.

During Monday's discussion at the council's committee-of-the-whole meeting, City Administrator Decker said the city and firefighters union reached an agreement with the Bettendorf Professional Firefighters Association after 2½ months of "fruitful negotiations."

"We all rolled up our sleeves, and think we've found a cost-neutral way for this to happen without hiring any additional personnel," Phelps said.

The city plans to staff the station at 1809 State St. with three firefighters and either a captain or a lieutenant by July 1 at the latest.

In January, Phelps said the current budget did not have room for another full-time employee.

Under the city's current contract with the firefighters union, if the department's captains is on vacation or unavailable, the city must call a lieutenant to step up for the day, also known as out-of-rank pay. On average, the department pays $71,000 for out-of-rank pay every year, Phelps said.

He added that the newly negotiated wage scale is less than the current contract that ends June 30. Firefighters who would have been promoted under the current contract would be paid less.

"It's been a long project in the making, but this time we had a council that truly did stand behind us and made this a priority."

Sensors keep watchful eye on the elderly

SAN FRANCISCO — Each time 83-year-old Bill Dworsky or his 80-year-old wife Dorothy opens the refrigerator, closes the bathroom door or lifts the lid on a pill container, tiny sensors in their San Francisco home make notes on a digital logbook.

The couple's 53-year-old son, Phil, checks it daily on his smartphone. If there's no activity during a designated time, the younger Dworsky gets an automated email, so he can decide whether to call or stop by. "This is peace of mind, really," he says of the system he installed last year.

Branstad defends fertilizer plant amid layoffs

Erin Murphy
Times Bureau

DES MOINES — As one Democratic state legislator railed against layoffs during construction of a $1.6 billion fertilizer plant in Lee County, Republican Gov. Terry Branstad defended the project, which was awarded a half-billion dollars in local, state and federal tax breaks.

Eggrt-based Omaxon Construction Industries is building a plant in Wever that will produce 2 million tons of urea ammonium nitrate, according to the company. The plant is slated to be up and running late this year.

Bolkcom

The company in April changed contractors on the project and laid off workers. Recently, the company has advertised for workers in other states.

Sen. Joe Bolkcom, D-Iowa City, on Tuesday criticized the layoffs and deployments at the fertilizer plant.

"Most of the fired workers are Iowans. These Iowans helped pay for these jobs on the front end by providing the tax incentives Gov. Branstad handed over to Orascom in the worst economic deal ever," Bolkcom said Tuesday on the Senate floor. "And now they are paying again on the back end by finding employment in Lee County without a job."

But Branstad's office defended the fertilizer plant, saying it has a payoff of $24 million per month and has reduced Lee County's unemployment by 44 percent.

"This project, which was named the best investment in the world in 2013 by Site Selection magazine, has brought thousands of jobs to Iowa and increased Iowans' family

Gore: Make CLIMATE an issue in 2016

By Orion Love, The Gazette

CEDAR RAPIDS — Iowans can help make climate change an issue in the next presidential election cycle, former Vice President Al Gore said Tuesday during a presentation in downtown Cedar Rapids.

"More and more Iowans care about the climate crysis, Iowa is a leader in renewable energy. And Iowans can exert influence in their conversations with candidates" leading up to the state's first-in-the-nation presidential caucuses, Gore said during a leadership training event at the DoubleTree by Hilton Hotel.

"We've got to put a price on carbon in the marketplace and put a price on denial in politics," he told about 400 people attending a three-day Climate Reality Project event intended to increase their advocacy skills.

Gore, who served under President Bill Clinton, brought his program to Iowa as presidential aspirants are rallying throughout the state.

The 2006 Oscar-winning documentary film, "An Inconvenient Truth," featured his campaign to make global warming an issue. He founded the Climate Reality Project, which seeks to mobilize action among volunteers.

At his presentation, Gore ticked off a succession of recent climate-related disasters, and presented climate scientists' projections of future conditions by the end of the century.

He also expressed confidence that wider understanding of the issue, coupled with increasing cost effectiveness of alternative energy sources, "can turn our most serious challenge into our greatest opportunity."

Linn County prosecutors vote on joining labor union

Their salaries lag too far behind bosses, official says

By Rick Smith, The Gazette

CEDAR RAPIDS — Fifteen assistant Linn County prosecutors are voting to see if they want to unionize, in large part because they believe their salaries have fallen too far behind those of Linn County Attorney Jerry Vander Sanden and his two top deputies.

Matt Fischer, assistant business manager for IBEW Local 204 in Cedar Rapids, said Tuesday the vote by the assistant county attorneys and investigators takes earlier by 21 Linn County Sheriff's Office sergeants who similarly disliked the widening salary gap between themselves and the sheriff and his top deputies.

Jerry Vander Sanden
Linn County Attorney

"They're of the opinion that there has been significant increase in the salaries of Jerry's office and his top two deputies, Fischer said. "Those wages have continued to go up more significantly than the folks who are actually in the trenches doing the work every day and presenting the cases for the county."

Fischer said the assistant prosecutors voted Local 204 in the last couple of months to have the union set up a vote to organize.

They also have expressed concerns about work schedules that can include weekends and holidays, he said.

Ballots will go out at the end of this week and will be collected May 26.

Carson wants to get to know Iowans

At Cedar Rapids rally, candidate decries 'purveyors of division'

By James Q. Lynch, The Gazette

CEDAR RAPIDS — When presidential candidate Ben Carson says he's not a politician, he seems to be distancing himself from the "purveyors of division" who try to "separate us, to make us into enemies."

"We have a war on women, age wars, income wars, race wars, religious wars. Every kind of way you can imagine to divide us, recognize there is strength in our unity," Carson told more than 200 people at a rally Tuesday afternoon in Cedar Rapids.

The rally was part of the retired neurosurgeon's first day on the Iowa campaign trail, which also will reportedly see him meeting the rest for the 2016 GOP presidential nomination Monday in his hometown of Detroit.

Carson won frequent applause during his 25-minute speech that touched on his life experiences, approach, taxation, replacing the health care law, policing and the military.

However, his audience wasn't sure how to take Carson when he talked about his childhood and running from the police "back in the days before they would shoot you."

Branstad seeks to drop abortion-payment role

Governor received power to OK, deny Medicaid funds for procedure in 2013

TONY LEYS TLEYS@DMREG.COM

Gov. Terry Branstad is ready to relinquish his unique power to decide whether Iowa's Medicaid program should pay for individual abortions.

Legislators voted in 2013 to require the governor's approval before the public insurance program would pay for any abortions. A national expert said Iowa is the only state to have such a rule. The governor's spokesman confirmed this week that Branstad has not asked legislators to remove the rule, because he never has been asked to invoke it.

The rule was passed as a compromise between House Republicans, who wanted to limit abortions, and Senate Democrats, who oppose such limits.

Iowa allows Medicaid reimbursement for abortions only in certain circum-

VIETNAM ANNIVERSARY

PETERSON DOUGLAS T.

'BRINGING MY BROTHER HOME'

Veteran finds healing by adding fallen soldier's name to memorial

MIKE KILEN MIKE@DMREG.COM

His name is Douglas Peterson. He was forgotten. Go through the 866 names on the Iowa Vietnam War Monument at the Iowa State Capitol grounds. Go through the "P"s on the list. Not there.

Yet on Oct. 1, 1969, Peterson suffered war wounds in Vietnam so grave that he later died from them.

His parents, Darrell and Fredrica Peterson, had never mentioned the omission to family long ago, after the monument was dedicated in 1984, but nothing came of it.

Then Dan Gannon of Ankeny showed up. He fought in Vietnam the same year as Peterson but didn't know him.

But Gannon knew that a couple of years ago that Peterson's name was missing and started his research. This is why: He made a promise in 2003 that if he survived the war — and in many ways he was still fighting the war, Gannon has — he would do everything he could to help other veterans.

"Because I've gotten to know suffering," he said. "Because I had friends who didn't come home."

Douglas Peterson entered boot camp at age 18 in 1967 and served in Company D, 1st Battalion, 505th Infantry Regiment of the 82nd Airborne Division.

In July 1969, as a rifleman in Long An Province in Vietnam, he faced a hostile force in a fierce ground battle. His unit ambushed the enemy in an intense firefight from only about 65 feet. Pfc. Peterson continued heavy fire, despite the barrage aimed at him, and killed a North Vietnamese soldier and recovered valuable documents.

He was awarded an Army Commendation Medal with a "V" for heroism.

Peterson's sister Julie Glueck of Kossuqua remembers him as a "caring, fun guy."

Peterson was determined to fight for his country, proud to wear the uniform. But in the 40 years since, she mostly remembers him suffering in the years after he returned.

On Oct. 1, 1969, he suffered wounds to his lungs, spleen, and spine from enemy small-arms fire. He died from those and for more than five years he fought for his life, transferring to several hospitals, the last in Houston, Texas. Ghaesh helped care for him until he knew his time was short. Peterson wanted to see his home state to die, which he did at the age of 23 on March 9, 1975.

His family has not forgotten his sacrifice. Gannon was determined that Iowans shouldn't, either.

Gannon didn't plan on going into the military. He grew up on a farm with 11 siblings and planned to return there after graduating from Iowa State University in 1969. But then his brother was severely wounded in the Vietnam War, and he wanted to avenge

Former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee officially announces his plans to seek the GOP's presidential nomination Tuesday in Hope, Ark.

Activists: Huckabee will need new focus

During this White House run, ex-governor will face higher expectations

JOSH HAFNER JHAFNER@DMREG.COM

Mike Huckabee made it official Tuesday: He's running for president again.

If he wants to win Iowa again, however, GOP activists said Huckabee will have to adapt to higher expectations than he faced as a relative unknown ahead of his 2008 Iowa caucuses victory. He will be one of the best-known in a field of candidates looking for a chunk of the conservative bloc that carried him to victory in 2008.

"He's not viewed as an underdog," said Danny Carroll, Huckabee's Iowa co-chair from 2008. "I would say he's not."

Carroll, a former Iowa legislator, recalls struggling to get a dozen people to show up to see Huckabee at a diner in 2007. This year, a pre-campaign stop by Huckabee at a Sioux City restaurant in March drew nearly 70.

Huckabee, the former Arkansas governor, is a favorite of Fox News host, is back in Iowa for several campaign stops Wednesday and Thursday.

What remains up for debate:

Terri Van Hagen, extended learning program teacher

Terri Van Hagen, the extended learning program teacher at the Burlington elementary school, was asked by the Black Hawk PBIS committee to make a video promoting and showcasing positive behavior at school.

Van Hagen introduced the idea to her school last year because those expected, she contacted Wood at SCC.

She said the partnership between the elementary school and college has been "a great opportunity at Black Hawk and students at SCC."

"This is their final project, so they will get a grade," Woodside said about her students. "There's a lot of pressure, and they know that."

Woodside said SCC's animation department will create an animated heart to reinforce the elementary school's motto, "Black Hawk Has Heart," which will be included in the video.

On Monday, SCC freshman Katie Nelson, sophomore Trevor Cooper and third-year student Isaac Ivory videotaped Black Hawk staff members strutting bad behavior.

The teachers did their best impersonations of students behaving badly — they threw wood chips on the playground, in the hallways, at the cafeteria, at their lockers, in the library and at an assembly.

Last week, students demonstrated appropriate behavior for the video.

"What we're going to do in the video will show the appropriate behavior, the inappropriate behavior, then end with the appropriate behavior again on every segment," Van Hagen said.

The other man from Hope

Mike Huckabee announces second run for White House.

By BILL BARROW and ANDREW DARELLO Associated Press

HOPE, Ark. — Mike Huckabee declared his presidential candidacy Tuesday in the tiny Arkansas town where he was born, casting himself as a conservative populist who could be second White House bid more successful than his first. In 2008, he capitalized on evangelical Republicans but couldn't build wide support to win the Republican nomination.

The former Arkansas governor announced his 2016 bid in the Iowa town he shares with Bill Clinton, Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton, becoming the sixth Republican to enter the campaign, with more to come.

"Every country and political era does have left a lot of Americans behind," Huckabee told supporters in a speech ruling against "big government and big business" and a nod to the GOP's "birthplace" role in America.

A populist but no Democrat, he did not endorse a minimum-wage increase, instead calling for policies encouraging a "minimum wage" for workers. He also criticized Democrats and Republicans in criticizing "unbalanced trade deals" and describing President Barack Obama's investigation policy as a way to "import low-wage labor, undercut American workers and drive wages lower than the Dead Sea."

The ordained minister — he was Arkansas Baptist Convention president before getting into politics — speaks to the cultural conservatives fostered in the small town where several relatives — and a few Clinton relatives — still live.

Workers' comp spurs debate

Gov. pushing cutting costs, while Dems say plan hurts workers and their families.

By DAVID PITT Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. — Business groups and injured employees weighed in Tuesday on a proposal to reduce skyrocketing whether to revamp the state's workers' compensation insurance program to reduce costs for employers.

Democratic House Speaker Michael Madigan has called for the General Assembly to hear testimony on the issue, which Republican Gov. Bruce Rauner said is one of his top legislative priorities.

Rauner has said Illinois' costs are among the highest in the country, making them will help lure companies from other states and create jobs.

But Madigan and other Democrats said Rauner's proposals would hurt working people and the middle class.

For several hours Tuesday, workers who were hurt at work told legislators about their injuries and how of income had forced them to sell homes, leave land they had worked for decades and are permanently disabled.

John Cofflell, who was hurt on the job in 2008 when a 2,000-pound piece of steel fell on him, said he has three children in love with who lives because Oklahoma had cut workers' compensation benefits.

"There are people just like me here in this room that believe that it's even important to go down the same path that my state did," Cofflell said.

Republicans criticized the hearing as unbalanced, saying there wasn't enough time for business representatives.

They also said they weren't even proposing some of the changes Democrats were criticizing, such as cutting the amount of benefits workers with legitimate workplace injuries receive.

"I don't believe there's anybody in this room that would not want someone that is hurt on the job to be taken care of the rules and who works hard not to be made right," GOP Rep. Michael Unes said.

"It appears like there's maybe some in this room that believe that it's even important to have a good theater than good policy."

History on display in Israel

Oldest complete copy of Ten Commandments will be shown.

By DANIEL ESTRIN Associated Press

JERUSALEM — The world's oldest complete copy of the Ten Commandments is going on rare display at Israel's Supreme Court, where it is an exhibit including civilization's most treasured [illegible] period manuscripts, the 2,000-year-old Dead Sea Scroll, from a collection of [illegible] ancient biblical manuscripts, discovered near the Dead Sea in the Jerusalem, never before has been publicly displayed in Israel and has been shown only in brief exhibits abroad, said Pnina Shor of the Israel Antiquities Authority.

The Commandments scroll will only be on display at the Israel Museum in Jerusalem for two weeks before it is returned to a secure, pitch-black, climate-controlled storage facility there.

Subject:	Swing a Senate race -- here's how

LCV VICTORY FUND

Donate to LCV Victory Fund. Our canvassers in battleground Senate races are breaking through and mobilizing tens of thousands of voters. Help them reach thousands more with a donation today.

John,

I'm the National Field Director for LCV. I just arrived here in Massachusetts and I wanted you to know that we have a real shot to swing this Senate race.

In Massachusetts – where Elizabeth Warren is running against Senator Scott Brown -- LCV is running the largest field operation in the state. So far we've knocked on the doors of nearly 100,000 voters – and our goal is to hit half a million by Election Day.

With both candidates agreeing to a pledge to keep outside groups from advertising in the race, we're focusing our efforts on this massive field operation to help Elizabeth Warren win on November 6th. Because Scott Brown was first elected in a low-turnout special election in early 2010, many of the voters we're targeting will be seeing his name on the ballot for the first time – which means our field program is poised to have a significant impact on the outcome of this race.

These efforts could be the margin of victory in November - but we need your help to do more.

Donate before the September 30th FEC deadline!

We can win tight Senate races in Massachusetts, Virginia, Montana, Wisconsin, Nevada, New Mexico, and Connecticut – but only with your support.

Help LCV Victory Fund reach our $120,000 goal>>

Donate to LCV Victory Fund. We're just $38,565 away from our $120,000 goal by the September 30th FEC deadline. Will you chip in to help us reach hundreds of thousands of voters in battleground Senate races?

Contrary to his campaign ads, Scott Brown has been anything but independent or moderate on environmental issues. He earned a zero on LCV's National Environmental Scorecard during his first year in the Senate. After two years, his lifetime score on LCV's National Environmental Scorecard sits at a paltry 22 percent, nearly matching Senator Rand Paul of Kentucky score of 18 percent.

Given Scott Brown's disappointing environmental record – and Elizabeth Warren's fierce commitment to fighting for the values that you and I share – the stakes in Massachusetts are high. Warren has been rising in the polls the past few weeks - and LCV's on-the-ground work is contributing to that momentum. A massive ground game is how we win in Massachusetts – and in Senate races across the country. But more importantly, a massive ground game is how we ensure that we have leaders in the Senate who will champion laws that protect our air, land and water and hold polluters accountable.

We're getting close to our goal. There are just five days left. Will you help us reach $120,000 by making a donation today?

There's still work to get done. Luckily, we're getting a lot of incredible encouragement from voters in Massachusetts. And the momentum isn't just here in Massachusetts. I'm hearing the same level of enthusiasm from my colleagues in Virginia, Montana and many other battleground states – races that are just as close, where the choices we make now may decide who wins.

By October 1st, we need to make the final decisions about our field plans and where we are going to spend our resources. We want to make sure that we expand the playing field as much as possible and we don't miss a single opportunity.

Please don't miss this opportunity. Too much is at stake. Chip in with a gift to LCV Victory Fund today.

Thanks for all your support.

Best –

Fellow CAPer's –

Four years at an organization as dynamic as CAP goes by quickly. There are way too many thank yous to list everyone individually, but let me just say, it's been a privilege to lead Generation Progress and work with you all.

The team at Generation Progress (both past and present) is truly amazing. GP, your tenacity, creativity, passion, commitment and work ethic are an inspiration, thank you.

If you ever feel a little frustrated with politics or the challenges of moving good progressive policy, just take a look around at the young people in this organization. Again and again they rise to the occasion, and they will change our country and our world for the better.

I do want to thank Winnie, Carmel and Neera for your support, leadership and guidance. What an amazing opportunity to work for a team of kick-ass women.

My first job in politics was working for Paul Wellstone, and he said, ""Politics is not about power. Politics is not about money. Politics is not about winning for the sake of winning. Politics is about the improvement of people's lives." It's been on honor to work for an organization that embodies those words.

My personal email is anne.n.johnson@gmail.com , please keep in touch!

New Coca-Cola Vending Machine Card Readers

Dear All,

I wanted to reach out to make sure you knew that by October 22nd all Coca-Cola beverage machines should have credit card readers that will accept debit/credit/ GOCards/Apple Pay/Andriod Pay.

We will be working to do the same to our snack machines soon and hope to have them done by the end of November.

The refund process remains the same. Refunds for GOCard transactions should go through the GOCard Office (202-662-9915, GOCard@law.georgetown.edu); all other refund requests should be sent directly to Coca-Cola (1-800-647-2653).

Please feel free to email me at ld333@law.georgetown.edu with any questions or concerns.

Sen. Clinton's Campaign:

CLINTON OUTLINES WORLD HEALTH AGENDA AT CONSERVATIVE CALIFORNIA CHURCH. The AP (11/30, Blood) reports Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton "used an appearance at one of the nation's largest evangelical churches Thursday to sketch a broad agenda to take on disease around the globe, calling it 'the right thing to do.'" The "centerpiece of a speech laced with Biblical references and reflections on her own faith was a call to spend billions of dollars to combat HIV/AIDS and other infectious diseases at home and abroad. She said she would try to stamp out malaria deaths in Africa within eight years." With the "presidential campaign intensifying in Iowa, New Hampshire and South Carolina, Clinton was alone among leading candidates to fly to coastal California to appear at Saddleback Church in Orange County, where pastor and best-selling author Rick Warren convenes a conference each year to highlight the global threat posed by HIV/AIDS." This article was published by at least 77 papers and websites, concentrated heavily in California. These included the San Francisco Chronicle, the San Jose Mercury News, the Contra Costa Times, the Miami Herald, the Charlotte Observer, the Benton Crier, the Albany Times Herald, the Los Angeles Times, the Boston Globe and Newsday.

The Politico (11/30, Ressner) reports, "Speaking at Rick Warren's Saddleback Church in Lake Forest, California, today, Hillary Clinton used a forum on AIDS and religion to burnish her spiritual faith credentials, dropping in verses from James, citing Isaiah, and relating how Jesus 'never asked why someone was sick.'" The Politico notes that some conservative Christian groups had protested Clinton's having been invited to speak at the third annual Global Summit on AIDS & the Church, since it was being held at an evangelical church, given her pro-choice position, but adds that "the protests facing her at the site were minimal." Clinton, the only presidential candidate to attend, praised the social progress that has allowed AIDS to be addressed openly in communities of faith and pledged to fight diseases like AIDS and malaria throughout the world.

The CBS Evening News (11/29, story 6, 0:35, Couric, 7.66M) reported, "Late today, Hillary Clinton made a rare appearance before a Christian evangelical congregation in Southern California and spoke about the fight against AIDS. Getting the support of evangelicals may not be easy because of her support for abortion rights and gay rights."

The San Francisco Chronicle (11/29, Marinucci, 395K) reported on its website portrays Clinton's speech within the context of Democrats having become more able to move in evangelical circles, noting that she "did just that today with a visit to one of the country's most influential megachurches that dramatized the new Democratic efforts to win support from evangelical voters the party once considered out of reach." The Chronicle notes that in Clinton's "unusually personal, often emotional speech," she said "that action goes hand in hand with faith. She won applause when she proposed $50 billion for AIDS treatment and prevention and vowed to 'set a goal of ending all deaths from malaria in Africa' - where 1 million die annually from the disease - by the end of a second term." Clinton also trod such "controversial ground" as women's rights and sex trafficking.

BILL CLINTON SAYS WIFE'S FIRST LADY SCHEDULES TO BE RELEASED IN JANUARY. The Politico (11/29, Allen) reports former President Bill Clinton "told C-SPAN this week that he believes the long-inaccessible first lady schedules of Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton (D-N.Y.) will be released in January - in the heat of the first presidential nomination contests." In an interview with C-Span's Brian Lamb, Clinton said, "I want to push the release of more, including the request for documents about Hillary's time in the White House. They'll show how hard she worked on a wide variety of issues, and what she did in her travels around the world to advance America's cause. So I'd like it if the records got out there." The Politico adds the interview, "recorded Monday during a tour of the Clinton Presidential Library in Little Rock, Ark., is set to air at 8 p.m. Friday as part of C-SPAN's Presidential Library Series."

ROBERT KENNEDY JR. ENDORSES CLINTON. The AP (11/30) reports Clinton "was endorsed for president Thursday by Robert F. Kennedy Jr., an environmental activist and scion of one of the nation's most prominent political families." In a statement, Kennedy said, "Hillary Clinton has the strength and experience to bring the war in Iraq to an end and reverse the potentially devastating effects of global warming."

Quad-Cities Online (11/29, Harris) reported that in Davenport, IA on Thursday, Kennedy "kicked off his first official day of stumping for" Clinton, meeting "with volunteers at the Davenport Field Office for Hillary Clinton for President. ... 'The largest issues facing our country today are energy and the environment and Hillary's got the strongest plans for dealing with those things,' said Mr. Kennedy, a 25-year environmental advocate himself. Mr. Kennedy pointed to Sen. Clinton's goals of getting Americans off all oil - not just foreign oil - and rescuing them from 'our carbon addiction.'"

REPORTERS FRUSTRATED WITH LACK OF ACCESS TO CLINTON. The Washington Post (11/30, C1, Kurtz, 723K) reports on "life spent trailing the Clinton juggernaut, where reporters can generally get close enough to watch but no further, as if separated from the candidate by an invisible sheet of glass." National correspondents "are increasingly frustrated by a lack of access to Clinton. They spend much of their time in rental cars chasing her from one event to the next, because the campaign usually provides no press bus or van." Clinton "blames an overtaxed schedule for the arm's-length approach, but something more fundamental is at work here. She, like her rivals, wants to deliver a daily message, usually framed around some policy prescription, while reporters want to ask her about the latest polls, tactics or blast from Barack Obama or John Edwards. And answering questions off the cuff always risks the possibility of a blunder."

CLINTON, EDWARDS WRESTLE TO DEFINE PERCEPTIONS OF 1990S. The Raleigh News & Observer (11/30, Christensen) reports that Sen. Hillary Clinton and John Edwards are pushing conflicting perceptions of the 1990s, with Clinton painting the era of her husband's presidency as "the good old days" of a surging economy and relative peace, while Edwards says "the 1990s were the days when disastrous trade deals, such as the North American Free Trade Agreement, were passed. Health-care reform failed. Democrats learned to challenge the Republicans in raising huge amounts of corporate money from Wall Street to K Street and thereby -- in Edwards' opinion -- lose their way." Clinton "recalls that 22 million jobs were created, the federal budget showed a projected $5.6 trillion surplus instead of today's projected $9 trillion deficit, and the middle class was doing better." However, "Other Democrats remember the 1990s as the time when Republican Newt Gingrich became House speaker and the country was consumed with the Monica Lewinsky scandal and the subsequent impeachment efforts."

TRANSIT UNION ENDORSES CLINTON. CNN (11/29, Byron) reported on its politics blog yesterday Sen.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton gained a new endorsement from the Amalgamated Transit Union. "The ATU represents 180,000 bus drivers, light rail operators, maintenance workers and other transit employees in 46 states. In a written statement, the ATU said it would work to educate its members about the New York Senator's campaign and 'mobilize its U.S. members and their families in the early primary states in support of her nomination.'"

GAYS HEAVILY BACKING CLINTON. The Washington Post (11/29, Agiesta, 723K) reported on its 'The Trail' blog that a new Hunter College poll shows that 63% of likely gay voters support Sen. Hillary Clinton, with 22% backing Sen. Barack Obama and 7% behind John Edwards. "Clinton's lead is cushioned by wide advantages in favorability and perceptions of her support for gay and lesbian rights. Nearly twice as many gay, lesbian or bisexual (GLB) likely voters say they view the New York senator 'very favorably' as say the same of Obama (48 percent to 26 percent). ... But some of her advantage on this question comes from familiarity. Nearly four in 10 say they don't know enough to rate Edwards or Obama; 24 percent say so of Clinton." The Washington Post (11/30, A7, Agiesta, 723K) runs a brief print article based on this coverage.

CLINTON TOPS OBAMA BY 30 POINTS IN FLORIDA. CNN (11/29, Steinhauser) reported on its politics blog that a CNN/Opinion Research Corporation Poll released Thursday shows Sen. Hillary Clinton leading the Democratic presidential field by a wide margin in Florida. According to the survey of likely Democratic primary voters, Clinton is on top with 51%, followed by Sen. Barack Obama with 21% and John Edwards with 11%. However, CNN Polling Director Keating Holland is quoted as saying, "Six in ten likely Democratic primary voters say they have not made up their minds and a quarter admitting that they will wait until the first primaries to decide who to vote for, so the outcome in the Sunshine State is difficult if not impossible to predict. Most Democrats have not campaigned in Florida, so it's possible that Clinton's big lead is due to name recognition. If that's the case, the early primaries may provide instant name recognition to one or more of her rivals and make the Florida primary very competitive." The survey has a margin of error of +/- 3%.

OBAMA HOLDS FIRST FUNDRAISER IN HARLEM. The New York Times (11/30, Williams, 1.18M) reports Barack Obama "held a fund-raiser in Harlem last night, his first event in the historic seat of black cultural and political power since he announced his Democratic presidential candidacy and a place where Senator Hillary Rodham Clinton enjoys wide popularity." After "hearing from a gospel choir, a jazz combo, the comedian Chris Rock and others, the racially mixed audience of more than 1,500 people at the Apollo Theater broke into loud applause when Mr. Obama appeared from behind the theater's red curtain." Obama's "address had a familiar topic: the need for change." Though he "did not mention Mrs. Clinton by name," Obama "appeared to refer to her several times. 'I'm not running to fulfill some long held plans,' he said. 'I'm not running because I feel it's owed to me.'"

The White Plains Journal News (11/30, Blain) reports that at the Apollo, Obama "sent a message to his chief rival,...seeming to be referring to Clinton when he spoke of the need for political leaders to give honest answers instead of ones that are driven by opinion polls. 'In this election, it is not the time to run out the same old textbook Washington campaign,' said Obama." Moreover, "While Clinton has locked up the support of most of New York's top Democratic leaders - including the influential Rep. Charles Rangel of Harlem - Obama's Apollo event seemed at least partly intended to show that his campaign has appeal in the Empire State."

TUMULTY SAYS OBAMA RALLIED FROM CLINTON'S LACKLUSTER DEBATE PERFORMANCES. In an article in the Dec. 10 issue of TIME (12/10, 4.03M), Karen Tumulty writes about Sen. Barack Obama's success in courting Iowa caucus precinct captains, observing, "As the contest for the Democratic nomination moves into the last weeks of exhibition season, it appears that Obama is turning this into a race. ... For months...it looked as if that turning point might not happen." Obama "had seemed for most of the year to be unable - unwilling, actually - to put much of a dent in Hillary Clinton's trajectory of preordination and inevitability." Tumulty suggests that it appeared that Clinton would steamroller Obama's innovative campaign with a boilerplate approach. But after "Clinton turned in a couple of unsteady debate performances," it seemed "as though someone had thrown a switch in Obama. Suddenly for Obama, as Lincoln wrote of his own presidential aspirations in 1860, 'the taste is in my mouth.'"

OBAMA TOUTS "CIVILITY" OF DEBATE WITH CLINTON. TIME (12/10, 4.03M) offers "highlights" of a "conversation" TIME managing editor Richard Stengel had with Sen. Barack Obama during a "flight to New York City." Asked about his criticisms of Sen. Hillary Clinton, vis-à-vis his "new politics" theme, Obama replied, "If you look at every public statement I've made over the past two months, you'd be hard-pressed to say that at any point we've been gratuitous, nasty, personal. We've had some policy differences that we described. We're running for the presidency of the United States of America, not for student-council president. This has been a relatively civil campaign." He continued to challenge Clinton to a "fruitful debate" about foreign policy in response to her criticism of his perceived inexperience and called for "making government and public service cool again."

CNN DEFENDS VETTING OF QUESTIONS FOR GOP YOUTUBE DEBATE. The Politico (11/30, Vogel) reports the "retired general who quizzed Republican presidential candidates about gays and lesbians in the military was not the only person linked to a Democratic presidential candidate who got to ask a question at Wednesday's CNN/YouTube debate. CNN also aired questions from supporters of Democratic candidates John Edwards and Barack Obama." That is "fine by the network, which is standing by its question selection process and lashing out at critics who say the debate demonstrated CNN's liberal bias." CNN political director Sam Feist said, "We're focused on the questions, not the questioners." The questions included one from a "20-year-old student from Texas who asked the candidates about criminalizing abortion" who "openly backs Edwards," and one from "a Florida man who asked why a gay Republican group should support each candidate and whether the candidates would accept its support" who is "a backer of Obama."

The Washington Post (11/30, A6, Kurtz, 723K) reports CNN "expressed regret yesterday for allowing a Hillary Clinton adviser to ask a question at Wednesday's Republican presidential debate, even as controversy swirled about two other questioners who have declared their support for Democratic candidates." Retired Brig. Gen. Keith Kerr, "who asked why gays should not be allowed to serve openly in the military, is a member of Clinton's steering committee on gay and lesbian issues, something her campaign disclosed in a news release in June." CNN Washington bureau chief David Bohrman said, "Had we known that, we probably wouldn't have used the question." USA Today (11/30, 4A, 2.28M) also reports the story.

Here is an update of recent activities and writings of Peter Swire, Professor of Law at the Ohio State University and Senior Fellow, Future of Privacy Forum.

1. Do Not Track. In late November, Swire was named as co-chair of the Tracking Protection Working Group of the World Wide Web Consortium:

http://www.nytimes.com/2012/11/29/technology/mediator-appointed-in-do-not-track-efforts.html (press coverage)

http://www.w3.org/2011/tracking-protection/ (home page for the Group)

2. Two books. This fall the International Association of Privacy Professionals published two books that Swire wrote with Kenesa Ahmad, formerly at the Future of Privacy Forum and now an Associate with the Promontory Financial Group:

a. Foundations of Information Privacy and Data Protection: A Survey of Global Concepts, Laws, and Practices. This book is the official text for the Foundations course for the Certified Information Privacy Professional.

b. U.S. Private Sector Privacy: Law and Practice for Information Privacy Professionals. This book is the official text for the U.S. private sector privacy course for the Certified Information Privacy Professional.

3. Two law review articles.

a. "Why the Right to Data Portability Likely Reduces Consumer Welfare: Antitrust and Privacy Critique." This article, co-written with FPF Legal and Policy Fellow Yianni Lagos, will appear in the Maryland Law Review.

b. "Finding the Best of the Imperfect Alternatives for Privacy, Health IT, and Cybersecurity." This article will appear in the Wisconsin Law Review.

CONFERENCE CALL

Budget Subcommittee of the Committee on Finance

The Budget Subcommittee is holding a Conference Call to review financial information with Keith Archer. All trustees are invited to call in and participate in the discussion. This conference call is the equivalent of an executive session and will allow questions to be raised that might not be appropriate in an open session with observers present. Keith will update us on the status of this year's budget and discuss relevant details of the budget that the administration is considering for the next fiscal year. A long range projection, based upon several assumptions, will be included so that trustees are aware of what will be required to return the College to a balanced budget.

The conference call is on:

- Tuesday, February 16th from 10:30am until 12noon (Galesburg Time)

So that we have sufficient capacity to handle all of the callers, please email Vicky Jones (vsjones@knox.edu) indicating that you intend to participate. The call in numbers and access code are as follows:

Subject:	What are you waiting for?

Friends,

This is a remarkable day.

USAToday has released a poll of Iowa voters showing the Governor's race at Branstad 47%, Hatch 35.5% – an 11.5% gap. It comes on the heels of a PPP poll released Tuesday with a similar 13% margin: Branstad, 48%, Hatch, 35%.

We can win this election with your help. Contribute $15, $30 or $50 today.

Of course we'd prefer to be ahead in the polls. But take a minute to think about where things stand for Terry Branstad only 69 days before election day:

- served in office for 20 years;
- longest-serving Governor in the nation;
- trying to become the longest-serving Governor in history;
- raised more than $8 million and counting;
- traveling to get money from Jeb Bush, Donald Trump and Chris Christie;
- spent more than $3.3 million on television so far this summer;
- assembled the largest campaign operation he's ever had
- using false, misleading, negative campaign ads to attack Jack;

And what are the poll numbers for the Branstad campaign? 48% and 47%.

After all the records broken, all the boasts about job creation, all the happy talk about Iowa doing well – Terry Branstad is still under 50% in the polls.

That's what's remarkable. Help us keep the momentum going to push past Branstad with a contribution of $50, $30 or $15 today.

It means fewer than half of Iowans are ready to say they will vote for him. You'd be right to ask: "What are the rest of the voters waiting for?"

They're waiting for a fresh start. And Jack Hatch has all the momentum in this race right now. He's taken Branstad's hardest punch. He's weathered a summer of lies. He's beaten Branstad in the first televised debate. And many Iowans are still just getting to know him.

Branstad under 50 means the Governor's race is far from over: for many Iowans, it's just beginning. When our campaign has the resources to introduce Jack to every Iowan in every corner of the state, Branstad will not only continue to be under 50 percent, he'll stay there right through election day.

With your help, we can win this. Please contribute what you can today.

Yours,

Brenda Kole

Yeah -- THAT Paul Ryan. The architect of the Republican plan to kill Medicare.

But here's the thing: in a poll this week, only 46% of Americans even had an opinion of Ryan (38% had never heard of him). These next hours are critical. We need to contact key voters immediately and make sure they know about the Romney-Ryan plan to put millionaire tax cuts over Medicare for seniors.

John,

It's been quite a while since we've had a chance to catch up.

It's JJ, and I hope you are doing well.

I wanted to reach out to you regarding the next step in my career.

I recently ended my relationship with New Signature, where I focused on client retention and growth. My position was Director of Strategic Accounts, and I managed their biggest, most critical clients. These clients included AARP, Lowy Institute for International Policy, Direxion Investments, Albright Stonebridge Group, and Inside Higher Ed.

I don't want to take too much of your time so here are some quick highlights to consider:

- I was the Director of Strategic Accounts for almost three years, and in my final year mostly focused on sales, outperforming all other sales employees.
- My goal, no matter whom I'm interacting with, is to always provide the best possible experience. I do this by listening, communicating, education, accuracy, quality, and an ethical approach to business.
- I managed a team of four designers and engineers. We operated in a highly collaborative environment. At separate times all New Signature engineers approached the chief operating officer to ask if they could report to me directly.

It is my intention to find a new position as an Account Director, or something similarly aligned with these skills.

If you have time for lunch or just a coffee in the next couple of week I would greatly appreciate the time.

Attached is my resume for your review.

Yours,

JJ

John --

I have shared this with folks on the policy and communications teams, and I hope it is helpful.

This one-pager makes the case that now is the time for HRC to define her campaign as a call to redefine the American Dream for today's economy and for today's families. The American Dream should be about making hard work create opportunity for all.

This also enables HRC to re-frame her detailed policy agenda as three promises that make good on the American Dream: (1) If you put in the time, we will invest in you; (2) If you work hard, you can make it; and (3) When you retire or get sick, you can be secure.

Good luck tomorrow in Michigan!

John

SURCHARGE ON MILLIONAIRES

Tell me about YOUR new tax proposal.

As you know Chris, right now, the super-wealthy and big corporations use every trick in the book to game the system and avoid paying billions of dollars in taxes. It's not right.

So today, I proposed adding a new "fair share surcharge" on multi-millionaires and closing loopholes to make it harder to game the system. (I'm also pushing for the Buffett Rule, which sets a minimum rate for those at the top, and other reforms like closing the carried interest loophole that allows some hedge fund managers to pay a lower rate than teachers or a nurses.)

I'm proposing every idea I can to finally make those at the top actually pay their fair share.

That's going to be a big difference in this campaign. When you look at what the Republican candidates are proposing – it's unbelievable. Trillions of dollars in new tax breaks to those at the top. Trickle down economics all over again.

On the Democratic side, I am the only candidate who has committed to raising middle class incomes, not middle class taxes.

How is this different from what other Democrats are proposing. They tax the rich too, right?

Well, I am the only candidate who has proposed a surcharge on multimillionaires and the only one committed to NOT taxing the middle class.

Senator Sanders, Governor O'Malley, and I share a lot of the same values and goals. But we do have differences.

I'm a progressive who likes to get things done. I've laid out how I'm going to pay for everything I'm proposing.

I'm concerned that Senator Sanders has taken a different approach. His agenda would add 18 to 20 trillion dollars in new federal spending, but he hasn't explained how he'd pay for it. That's a big risk, because it's hard to make the arithmetic add up any other way than a big tax increase on middle class families. I don't think that's the right choice .

Should we add the 1.62 a week line Podesta suggested?

Small thing but, I might say "he hasn't been able to show how he's gonna pay for it" rather than explained because didn't they put out a whole chart showing how they pay?

Otherwise I'm good.

Subject: Tax hit for Chris Hayes

HRC is going to call into Chris Hayes' show this afternoon to do her tax hit. How does this look to you guys?

Right now, the super-wealthy and big corporations are using every trick in the book to game the system and avoid paying billions in taxes. It's wrong, and it's bad for our economy. We can't have one tax system for those at the top and another one for everyone else.

So today, I proposed adding a new "fair share surcharge" on multi-millionaires and closing loopholes to make it harder to game the system. I'm also pushing for the Buffett Rule, which sets a minimum rate for those at the top, and other reforms like closing the carried interest loophole that allows some hedge fund managers to pay a lower rate than a teacher or a nurse.

When it comes to taxes, there's a clear choice in this election. Republicans candidates are promising huge new giveaways to the wealthiest Americans. And on the Democratic side, I am the only candidate pledging to raise middle class incomes, not middle class taxes.

You know, Senator Sanders, Governor O'Malley, and I share a lot of the same values and goals. We both want to make the economy work for everyone, not just those at the top. And the differences between us pale compared to what we see on the other side. But we do have differences.

I'm a progressive who likes to get things done. I measure every policy by whether it's going to actually make life better for working families. And I've laid out how I'm going to pay for everything I'm proposing by making the wealthy pay their fair share.

Senator Sanders has a different approach. His agenda would add 18 to 20 trillion dollars in new federal spending, but he hasn't explained how he'd pay for it. That's a big risk, because it's hard to make the arithmetic add up any other way than a big tax increase on middle class families. I don't think that's the right choice when incomes for most people have barely budged in years.

I like and respect Senator Sanders quite a lot, but I'm concerned that some of his ideas run the risk of hurting rather than helping. So I look forward to debating these differences in the campaign.

Attached is a revised draft infrastructure memo that seeks to take into account conversations I have had with Justin and Doug but more my frame trying to capture theirs so mistakes are mine as opposed to theirs.

In terms of who might be the kitchen cabinet besides doug and justin advising, I welcome suggestions -- as written now, they are two who are compensated to do that with the opportunity for expansion with the personal office cos/ceo serving as the hub (this will make sense when you read memo).

Please review and advise on suggested edits.

Sorry to be offline for a bit, have a family issue today.

I think we should hold and put the statement out in the am so as to not jam the committee and also not look like burying on Friday night.

Two issues:

1) I think we should add an opening sentence that restates the fact that she fully complied with all record keeping requirements, make clear she has always acted within guidelines. Nick -maybe you can just use language we have used before.

2) David - do you we need to give the Committee a heads up tomorrow am before we release the statement and letter?

Thanks all

My response to Gowdy's staff has been: she'll come once, in public—you can ask her about emails then, if you want. I attach a draft of the Gowdy letter, but it's very near final. Please don't send outside the group.

I await advice on release. Philippe has raised a concern about sending it to Gowdy, then immediately releasing it to the public. Since Gowdy released his server request last Friday very quickly, he may release our letter as soon as he gets it. I'm agnostic.

John -

I had a good discussion with Jeff today - thanks for making that happen.

It's great that the President weighed in today. If there is no EU/Greece deal, it's important that there be a Plan B to stabilize Greece --e.g. humanitarian assistance, efforts to provide some level of stability for a new drachma, etc.

We may be putting together a group of key Greek American (as well as non-Greek American economic and national security leaders) to advocate for/support any Administration efforts if a Plan B becomes necessary. I would like to get some feedback on this front -- I may call tomorrow or Thursday. Hopefully, a credible deal comes together -- but just in case.

Last item: it would be great if Secretary Clinton could weigh in in the appropriate manner - perhaps a statement in support of the Administration's efforts to help achieve a positive resolution and emphasizing the economic, humanitarian, and geopolitical importance of a good resolution. But I'll leave it to you as to whether or not this make sense from your/the Secretary's perspective.

Best,

Phil

John -

I hope all is well with you. I tried to call you today, but apparently the number I had for you is inoperative.

I wanted to speak with you briefly re: Greece - given the restrictions on the ELA lending to the Greek banks, the financial (and thus civil/political) system may dissolve quickly.

I know that you are very busy, but if you have a moment, I can be reached at 916-919-1177 .

Eryn -

For future reference, what is the best number to reach John or to leave a message? - if via you/your number, that's more than fine.

Thanks.

Cybersecurity & Innovation: It's the States, Stupid

Governor John Hickenlooper will give a special talk about efforts in Colorado to address a rise in cyber threats while also driving innovation and creating jobs. As Federal support for cyber incidents begins to focus on the most high-level targets, leaving states and their businesses and non-profits to fend for themselves in the event of a breach, new solutions are necessary.

The Governor will describe his state's initiatives, including a new National Cybersecurity Intelligence Center, which will provide training, incident response and serve as a resource for business, non-government organizations, and Colorado government officials. Why does it matter and what will it do?

Hi guys. I was just about to do an email, but Susan beat me to the punch. I talked to David Ogden (leading the DOJ transition) a couple weeks ago and then again tonight. Also talked to Jim Steinberg earlier tonight.

David's team is working hard on these issues as is Mary. David and co. were working with Mary during the pre-election phase, and will link up with her again. The DOJ side and the nat sec side should work together with a view toward identifying the key issues (gitmo, torture memos, potential prosecutions, "truth and reconciliation" idea, etc.) and preparing options. At least some of these issues will need to be ready for Day One action, so the ball will need to move forward as promptly as possible.

David and Mary, please keep me in the loop so that I can track progress on this and report back to John, Chris, etc. Thanks.

Thanks, Chris.

Mary De Rosa is doing these issues from nat sec side and is already plugged into DOJ team as I understand it.

Is there more we should do, in your view, to ensure appropriate lash-up?

Todd et al.,

I'm writing to ask where we stand with respect to working through the national securities law and civil liberties law concerning the topics above. I believe we agreed that some cross-talk between the National Security team and the DOJ/Domestic team is required, but I don't recall getting to closure on which individuals have the lead.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The exchange I had with Susan Rice at the last Board meeting is illustrative of the difficulty. There can be an inherent tension between the national security perspective and the Rule of Law perspective. As we know, this played out in the Bush Administration rather tragically, and the vast majority of legal observers believe that the DOJ participants acted in a manner that -- at a minimum -- violated fundamental ethical and professional principles, if not the Law. As a formal matter, whatever course of policy and action the Obama Administration adopts on these issues, clearance by OLC and the Attorney General will be required, as well as review by White House Counsel.

So, I believe the Transition should likewise get the right set of perspectives around a table sooner rather than later.

There is another, related issue that deserves some attention: The role of OLC in relation to the State Department Legal Adviser (L). The Bush Administration broke with precedent by shifting more authority to OLC for definitive resolution of questions of international law and treaty interpretation. L was consulted, but the formal lead rested with OLC. Earlier administrations allowed the State Department to have the lead. What will be the practice in the Obama Administration? There are arguments in both directions. It would be good to get this resolved before the appointees are selected.

I am interested in these issues, having taught National Security Law. But I know there are several terrific lawyers who could contribute a lot: Eric Holder, Jamie Gorelick, Larry Tribe, Cass Sunstein, Alex Aleinikoff.

Subject:	Someone you should know

Dear John,

There is someone I want to introduce you to, Montana Superintendent of Public Instruction Denise Juneau.

I first met Denise last October, when she agreed to moderate a panel that US Senator Michael Bennet (D-CO) and I were serving on regarding public education. Superintendent Juneau stole the show with her insights into the challenges facing students and educators in rural America and her common sense approach on what we need to do to improve educational opportunities for all children.

To be quite honest, as impressed as I was with Denise then, it was nothing compared to how I would feel after spending several days in May traveling across Montana with her.

Superintendent Juneau and I traveled to the Flathead and Blackfeet Reservations visiting with students, educators, and community leaders. These are the places that many Americans have forgotten, but not Denise. It was clear what a difference her leadership and commitment to these students and communities was making – everywhere we went she was embraced with gratitude and reverence.

To truly understand why Superintendent Juneau is so effective in her role, you need to get a full picture of everything she brings to this office. Denise Juneau is the first American Indian woman elected to a statewide position in Montana and in the country. She is a member of the Mandan and Hidatsa Tribes and a descendant of the Blackfeet Tribe. As a matter of fact, she grew up on the Blackfeet Reservation in Browning, Montana – one of the many places we visited.

Denise followed her parents' footsteps into the education profession and was a classroom teacher before working in the state education agency on state curricular and academic policy.

Denise was first elected MT Superintendent of Public Instruction in 2008, and now is facing a tough re-election. Republicans realize that Denise is a rising star, not only in Montana but nationally too, and they are determined to stop her.

That is why I am writing to you; I want you to join me in supporting Denise's re-election efforts by making the maximum contribution of $310 to her today.

In just four short years, Denise has already built an impressive record of leadership and accomplishment – just imagine what she could do with four more.

· Denise is moving Montana schools in the right direction. She has turned around low performing rural schools with a unique model, raised the bar for all students by establishing new learning standards in English and math, and created community-based drop-out prevention strategies through her Graduation Matters Montana initiative.

· Denise secured a significant level of grant funding for Montana schools, including$450,000 in private funds for Graduation Matters Montana and $15.2 million for preschool through high school reading programs.

· Denise created strong partnerships with Montana's lowest performing schools. As a result of these school-community efforts, all participating high schools saw increases in scores in reading, math, and science.

· Denise has also received national recognition for being one of the first Superintendents to push back against the federal requirements of No Child Left Behind that prioritize testing over learning.

I could go on and on about her record – but what I really wanted to share is this – it has been a long time since I have come across an elected official like Superintendent Juneau. She is a public servant in the truest sense, someone that puts the interests of Montana's students and families at the center of her decision-making every day.

Your contribution to her re-election effort is an investment in a leader we can all be proud of and that we so desperately need in these challenging times. It is critical that we continue to invest in and support leaders like Denise.

Please click here right now to make the maximum contribution of $310 to the Denise Juneau campaign.

Denise is someone you should know, please visit her website to learn more and I hope you join me in supporting her.

Warmest Regards,

John Stocks

P.S. – The next campaign fundraising deadline of August th is quickly approaching, so please join me in supporting Denise and make the make the maximum contribution of only $310 today.

The campaign is able to accept a maximum of $310 from individuals and political action committees. The campaign may not accept contributions from corporations.

I think we will set a bad precedent if we respond to each and every urgent request without the benefit of an overall plan/strategy for infusing issue, character and values messaging into the current political context. How do these requests fit into the overall paid and earned media plan? It would be helpful for us to have an articulation of the desired outcomes, targeted audiences, messengers, messages, mediums, geography (if appropriate) in the context of a ranking of states in priority order based upon a set of strategic objectives. A Special Invitation

Tour Ghana with Knox!

Knox alumni and friends are invited to join Associate Professor Jennifer Smith and current Knox students on a trip to Ghana.

The trip begins in the capital city of Accra. While there, the group will attend a private performance at the National Theater, and visit the workshop of master drum maker David Amoo for a hands-on lesson in drum making.

From Accra, the group moves on to the small coastal village of Kopeyia for a five-day learning intensive in Ghanaian art and culture at the Dagbe Cultural Center. Each day includes a two-hour dance class and drumming class. No need worry about experience -- the classes are designed for all levels! Private lessons are also available in singing, cooking, language, kente clothing weaving, and basket weaving. The five-day intensive ends in a performance.

After leaving Dagbe, the group travels up the coast to the canopy walk at Kakum National Park and ends with a visit to Cape Coast Castle, one of 44 historic slave forts that dot Ghana's coastline.

The fee includes round-trip airfare to/from Chicago; all hotel/rooms for all nights; all meals and water while at Dagbe; $150 for meals not included; all ground transportation; all cultural excursions; all group classes at Dagbe; international travel insurance; use of an international cell phone.

The fee does NOT include passport and visa fees; cost of immunizations for travel; private lessons at Dagbe.

Travel dates: December 7 - 21, 2015

Cost of Trip is $3,875 per person. Only five spaces are available. If interested in attending, contact Professor Jennifer Smith no later than August 3, 2015 (jlsmith@knox.edu or 309-361-8180).

Great, so:

This vote on a fast-track procedure does not address the merits of the trade deal itself, which is where her focus lies. As she has said before, she believes the administration should drive the hardest possible bargain with our trading partners. Any final deal must protect our workers and wages, and if that standard is not met, we have to be prepared to walk away. In addition, she believes it is absolutely essential that Congress act quickly to extend trade-adjustment assistance, which expires soon. Trade adjustment assistance has to be an integral part of TPP.

I know, John. We keep emailing. But that's because we have a critically important number that's worrying us: $100,000.

That's our year-end fundraising goal -- exactly how much we need to raise together before tomorrow's MIDNIGHT fundraising deadline. We're so close, but still short:

We're running out of time, John. Will you chip in $5 or more right now to help us hit this landmark goal? >>

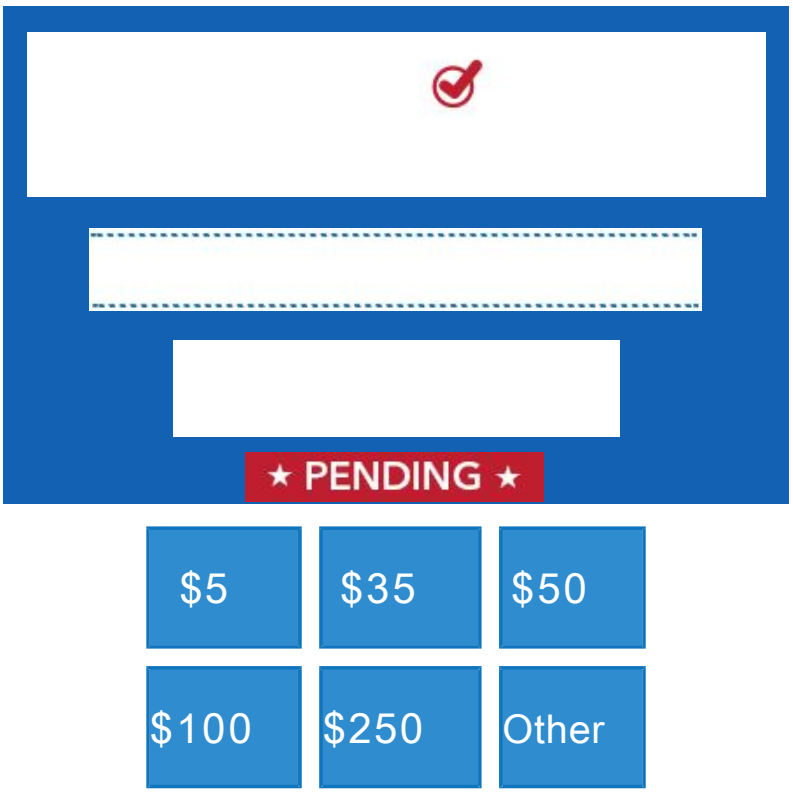

After the clock strikes MIDNIGHT tomorrow , we'll submit our FIRST ever public fundraising report, and the world will see how much we've raised together to boost Democratic voter turnout on Election Day.

But we're up against the toughest opposition we've ever seen. The Koch Brothers are funneling millions into their own turnout machine. They have billions. We don't.

We do have a team of supporters like you who've pitched in average of $14.25 this month. And our strategy hinges on reliable supporters who donate through emails like this.

MIKE HONDA for CONGRESS

Dear John,

Have you read the news lately? This election is something else:

-- Donald Trump is very likely to be the Republican nominee for President
-- Washington Republicans are taking obstructionism to historic levels
-- My opponent in this race is taking money from Republican billionaires

And here I am trying to promote justice and equality in Washington while helping millions of working Americans thrive in this economy. I know this is a dangerous time in our history, but that's what makes it more important than ever for me to return to Congress and keep fighting for people like you.

We have a fundraising deadline this Monday, and you have the opportunity to put us one step closer to victory in November. Will you donate $3 now, so I can keep fighting for you in Congress?

DONATE $3

Yes, winning this election will be hard -- but it is possible to overcome the odds if we come together right now to build a stronger campaign. If you're with me -- and I know you are -- please take a moment to show your support by making a contribution before the deadline.

Go here to make your contribution to our re-election campaign today.

Zazi Case: Protecting America, Depleting Conservative Credibility

Washington, D.C. - Yesterday, a New York City court brought the suspect of the biggest terrorism plot since 9/11 to justice, as Najibullah Zazi pled guilty. His plot involved training in Pakistan and homemade explosives intended to be set off on the New York City subway. The disruption of the plot, its investigation, and interrogation all came about through the coordination of law enforcement and intelligence. Now, he is cooperating with civilian authorities and providing information to military, intelligence and law enforcement agencies.

From the start, the Obama administration utilized a crucial tool in combating terrorism: the rule of law. The Zazi success is the latest in a string of terrorism cases where the use of the criminal justice system has worked to thwart attacks and gain important intelligence. Yet conservatives in the media and Congress still continue to ignore these successes by insisting on sticking to what they see as an opportunistic political strategy: attack the Obama administration on national security regardless of the facts. Conservative critics have specifically focused on criticizing the use of America's tried and tested criminal justice system in combating terrorism. But as the former FBI terrorism interrogator who discovered that Khalid Sheikh Mohammed was the 9/11 mastermind said: 'This shows that law enforcement can be [a] strong tool at our disposal.'

Obama administration brings terrorist behind largest domestic terrorist plot since 9/11 to justice. As the Washington Post reported, "An airport shuttle bus driver who plotted to detonate potent explosives in New York's subway system pleaded guilty Monday for his role in a 'martyrdom operation' that authorities called one of the most serious terrorism plots on American soil since Sept. 11, 2001." Najibullah Zazi was born in Afghanistan, raised in Pakistan, and later attended high school in Queens. The AP detailed the foiled plot, explaining, "Zazi admitted using notes taken at an al-Qaida training camp in Waziristan, Pakistan, to build homemade explosives with beauty supplies purchased in the Denver suburbs and cooked up in a Colorado hotel room. He then drove the materials to New York just before the eighth anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks. His plan was to assemble the bombs over the weekend and detonate them within days. While entering the city, Zazi was stopped by police for a routine traffic violation on the George Washington Bridge, which connects New Jersey and New York. Suspicious officers allowed him to go free but kept a close watch on his movements. 'The plan was to conduct martyrdom operation on the subway lines in Manhattan as soon as the material was ready,' Zazi said. Sometime after the traffic stop, Zazi realized authorities were investigating him. 'At that point, we threw away the detonator explosives and other materials,' he said."

Zazi was arrested in Colorado on September 19, 2009. The New York Daily News reports that "Zazi, who was arrested Sept. 19 after he returned to Denver, pleaded guilty to three charges: conspiring to use weapons of mass destruction, conspiring to kill U.S. soldiers abroad and giving support to Al Qaeda. He faces life in prison." [Washington Post, 2/23/10 . AP, 2/23/10 . NY Times, 2/23/10 . NY Daily News, 2/22/10]

Zazi case vindicates the Obama administration's counterterrorism strategy. Not only did Najibullah Zazi confess to his crimes, but he is "share[ing] information about confederates overseas," according to the Washington Post. This case clearly vindicates the Obama administration's approach to combating terrorism by utilizing the power of the rule of law. As Attorney General Eric Holder said, "Were it not for the combined efforts of the law enforcement and intelligence communities, it could have been devastating... This attempted attack on our homeland was real, it was in motion and it would have been deadly." Holder said that the civilian court system is "an invaluable weapon for disrupting plots and incapacitating terrorists... [it] contains powerful incentives to induce pleas that yield long sentences and gain intelligence." And the Washington Post reports that certain tools for gaining intelligence and cooperation were open to the criminal justice system, but would not otherwise be available: "Law enforcement sources, speaking on the condition of anonymity because the investigation continues, said Zazi began to accelerate his cooperation after authorities charged his Afghan-born father with crimes and threatened to charge his mother with immigration offenses -- options that are not available in the military justice system." Adam Serwer of the American Prospect comments that "as with Umar Abdulmutallab, the government found where it could apply leverage and did so. As a result, Zazi has been providing intelligence -- and he will still spend the rest of his life in prison. Again, the only reason Republicans are insisting on using military courts in all circumstances is because they 'sound' tougher. In practice, civilian courts hand out harsher sentences and are better equipped to handle terrorism cases. They also provide better incentives for providing accurate information on the part of the defendants." [Washington Post, 2/23/10 . NY Times, 2/22/10 . Adam Serwer, TAPPED, 2/22/10 . Washington Independent, 2/23/10]

The Zazi case is most recent case in a trend of law enforcement successes in combating terrorism. Ali Soufan, the former FBI terrorism interrogator who discovered that Khalid Sheikh Mohammed was the 9/11 mastermind, told Newsweek's Michael Isikoff that: "This shows that law enforcement can be [a] strong tool at our disposal." Isikoff outlines a number of recent cases where the use of the criminal justice system has proven fruitful: "Since last summer alone, the terror suspects who are publicly known to have cooperated with the FBI include Bryant Neal Vinas, a former Long Island, New York truck driver who has acknowledged providing Al Qaeda with information about New York area transit systems; David Coleman Headley, a Chicago resident who had contacts with a high level Al Qaeda linked figure in Pakistan and conducted scouting runs for the November, 2008 terror attacks in Mumbai, India, and Omar Farouk Abdulmutallab, the Nigerian suspect who tried to blow up the Northwest airlines flight on Christmas Day. Officials say Abdulmutallab began cooperating about his contacts with Al Qaeda in Yemen after the FBI reached out to two members of his family in Nigeria-one of them his mother-and brought them to Detroit to persuade the suspect to begin cooperating. 'These are major flips. This is huge information that these guys are giving,' said Ali Soufan." [Michael Isikoff, Newsweek, 2/22/10]

Conservative politicization of terrorism runs smack-dab into the Obama administration's track record of success. News that the Obama administration is successfully winding down the break-up of the most serious domestic terror plot since 9/11 has been largely ignored by conservatives, who instead have chosen to politicize terrorism for their own gain. After recounting the details of Najibullah Zazi's guilty plea on MSNBC First Read, Mark Murray observed, "Interestingly, we barely heard a peep from Republicans on the Zazi guilty plea." Media Matters noted the deafening silence from conservative media corridors: "On February 22, the hosts of Fox News' three top-rated programs -- Glenn Beck, Bill O'Reilly, and Sean Hannity -- did not mention the guilty plea on terrorism charges in U.S. District Court in Brooklyn by Najibullah Zazi, who was at the center of an alleged plot to bomb the New York subway system. Beck, O'Reilly, and Hannity have all previously criticized President Obama's desire to prosecute suspected terrorists in the U.S. legal system rather than in military tribunals." Sadly, it appears that conservatives are bent on pursuing a strategy of craven politicization. According to Roll Call, a messaging memo from the House Republican Conference encouraged Members to attack the Obama administration on their counterterrorism record, including such policies as the use of Miranda rights on domestic terrorists, and civilian trials for terror suspects. At the Conservative Political Action Conference this weekend, Minnesota Governor Tim Pawlenty appeared to echo this memo, saying delivering "a message for President Obama...no more giving Miranda rights to terrorists." The Washington Post noted that Florida Senate candidate Marc Rubio did the same, promising to "get useful information" from terrorists before bringing "them to justice in front of a military tribunal in Guantanamo!" Despite the successes of an experienced and tested court system, Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-SC) is reportedly pressing "to establish a new national security court that would keep most Guantanamo detainees out of the federal courthouse." As the guilty pleas of Najibullah Zazi underscore, these political attacks run straight into a record of success in thwarting plots against the U.S. and bringing terrorists to justice. [Mark Murray, MSNBC, 2/23/10 . Media Matters, 2/22/10 . Roll Call, 2/16/10 . Gov. Tim Pawlenty, 2/19/10 . Washington Post, 2/19/10]

A few minutes ago on MSNBC, AHIP spokesman Robert Zirkelbach claimed that the glaring lack of competition among insurance companies is “a problem that doesn’t exist.” (Watch the clip here, at about 2:10: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=mBhZaFSFHzs)

Of course, nothing could be further from the truth:

- AMA Study: 94% of health insurance markets in metro areas are “highly concentrated.”
- CAP/HCAN study: In 21 states, one carrier alone controls more than half of the market – and in at least 39 states, two carriers together control more than half the market.
- AP: “Competition Lacking Among Private Health Insurers... Even lawmakers opposed to a government plan have problems with the growing clout of the big private companies.”

How can the insurance companies be trusted to solve the problem when they claim it "doesn't exist"?

Troops Deployed Abroad Give 6:1 to Obama

Published by Luke Rosiak on August 14, 2008 9:52 AM | Permalink | Comments (0)

During World War II, soldiers crouching in foxholes penned letters assuring their sweethearts that they'd be home soon. Now, between firefights in the Iraqi desert, some infantrymen have been sending a different kind of mail stateside: two or three hundred dollars -- or whatever they can spare -- towards a presidential election that could very well determine just how soon they come home.

According to an analysis of campaign contributions by the nonpartisan Center for Responsive Politics, Democrat Barack Obama has received nearly six times as much money from troops deployed overseas at the time of their contributions than has Republican John McCain, and the fiercely anti-war Ron Paul, though he suspended his campaign for the Republican nomination months ago, has received more than four times McCain's haul.

Despite McCain's status as a decorated veteran and a historically Republican bent among the military, members of the armed services overall -- whether stationed overseas or at home -- are also favoring Obama with their campaign contributions in 2008, by a $55,000 margin. Although 59 percent of federal contributions by military personnel has gone to Republicans this cycle, of money from the military to the presumed presidential nominees, 57 percent has gone to Obama.

Contributions from U.S. Troops Deployed Abroad

Recipient	Total	Number
Obama, Barack	$60,642	134
Paul, Ron	$45,512	99
McCain, John	$10,665	26
Huckabee, Mike	$7,950	10
Thompson, Fred	$6,350	7
Romney, Mitt	$5,550	10
Clinton, Hillary	$3,240	6

With the latest campaign finance filings, detailing June fundraising, McCain has overtaken Paul among all military donors, though Paul still leads with contributors listing an overseas address. Financial support from military personnel for anti-war candidates Obama and Paul is a trend that the Center for Responsive Politics first observed last September.

Individuals in the Air Force, Army, Navy and Marine Corps have all leaned Republican this cycle, but the only branch in which that ideology has carried over to the presidential race is the Marine Corps, where McCain leads Obama by about $4,000. In each of the other branches -- including the Navy, in which McCain served when he was taken prisoner during the Vietnam War -- Obama leads by significant margins.

"That's shocking. The academic debate is between some who say that junior enlisted ranks lean slightly Republican and some who say it's about equal, but no one would point to six-to-one" in Democrats' favor, said Aaron Belkin, a professor of political science at the University of California who studies the military. "That represents a tremendous shift from 2000, when the military vote almost certainly was decisive in Florida and elsewhere, and leaned heavily towards the Republicans."

In 2000, Republican George W. Bush outraised Democrat Al Gore among military personnel almost 2 to 1. In 2004, with the Iraq war underway, John Kerry closed the gap with President Bush, but Bush still raised $1.50 from the military for every $1 his Democratic opponent collected.

A former West Point professor, Jason Dempsey, noted that the small set of contributions from deployed troops at this point in 2008 -- just 323 donations -- should not be extrapolated to form conclusions about military personnel overall. "If, on a bad day, a guy gets that letter that says [his tour has been extended] from 12 to 15 months, that could spur a quick donation and expression of anger," he said. "Donating helps members of the military express their political views privately."

Seeing political activity of any sort among soldiers is notable, Dempsey added. "It's hard to describe how apolitical a lot of the enlisted ranks are. He's worried about other things than following the news."

Obama, who opposed the war in Iraq but was not in the Senate when it was authorized, has said that as president, he would withdraw most troops from Iraq within about 16 months. McCain, the ranking Republican on the Senate Armed Services Committee and a staunch proponent of the Iraq war, has resisted setting a timeline for withdrawal.

CRP's totals based on employer are limited to donors contributing more than $200, since information is not provided to the Federal Election Commission for smaller contributions. So these figures are likely to disproportionately represent the mood of officers, who have more disposable income to spend on politics than do the lower ranks. But because young people tend to be more liberal than their elders, the total dollar figures could lean even more in Obama's favor.

"One possibly mundane explanation (for the tilt in contributions from deployed soldiers) is that the Obama campaign has just been so much savvier with web-based donors. It may be a logistical question," Belkin pointed out.

Army Specialist Jay Navas contributed $250 while deployed in Iraq, but it wasn't over the Internet. "It took some effort to get that check. I had my mom send me my checkbook and I walked to the post office in Camp Liberty in Baghdad with an envelope addressed to Barack Obama in Chicago, Illinois," he said. "He was right on Iraq long when others were jumping into the sea like lemmings, and that's hard to do. We're soldiers and we respect courage."

Only the Coast Guard prefers Democrats across the board, with 78 percent of employees' total federal contributions going to members of that party, and Obama beating McCain $7,795 to $250. Navas anecdotally confirmed that soldiers are often conservative but that many are making an exception in the presidential race. "Most of my friends are conservative Republicans and they say, 'I'm voting for Barack.' McCain does not have a lock on the military vote, that's for sure," he said. "We'll complete our duty -- I'm deploying next year -- because it's a commitment I made to the nation, not to a president. But we all know that Iraq was a big mistake."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The decisions of the U.S. government affect Navas more than most Americans, he said.

"What happens politically in America affects us immediately," he said. "As soon as the surge was ordered, my tour was extended, just by a pronouncement from the president. For very few Americans can the president say something and your lives are changed."

President Obama's birthday is TODAY!

He's had to deal with so much recently: a lawsuit from John Boehner and the threat of impeachment looming from the Tea Party - it's time we give him something nice. We need to get 32,000 more signatures on his birthday card before he sees it.

Can you click here to sign the card?

To all those who stood with us the past few weeks as we've stood up against Speaker Boehner's lawsuit and the pending threat of impeachment from the Tea Party, we wanted to say THANK YOU.

You're why we are able to fight back in places like Minnesota, Florida, and California to elect more Democrats and kick the Tea Party out of Washington once and for all.

Thanks for standing with the president,

Subject: Update: 2016 Tax Policy Issues

Mike & Co. --

The economy added 292,000 jobs last month, up from 252,000 in November. Unemployment was 5 percent, unchanged, with scant evidence of wage growth. Labor force participation remained low, 62.6 percent, unchanged from November's 62.5 percent, close to its lowest level since the 1970s.

Spring doesn't feel around the corner but at least primary politics is the season when a hundred policy flowers bloom. This is true especially in tax policy, where all the campaigns' struggle to get a proposal noticed often ends up with novel ideas or a race to the bottom, or top, but usually away from the middle, a vulnerable place to be standing when policies are compared in the primary marketplace.

We can ignore the flora and fauna since they are mostly for show and focus instead on what tax issues you can expect Congress will have, or may agree, to act on.

Best,

Dana

Almost everyone on the political landscape will have something to say about tax policy and priorities in 2016 but for now it is more about ideological positioning and image definition than how to get all the revenue we need to pay for the $3.5 trillion in total annual USG spending.

Republican Tax Proposals

The tax theme for the GOP again in 2016 is simple: cut, cut, and cut. Most GOP presidential candidates are touting plans which, to a varying degree, cut taxes drastically. Of the three leaders in Iowa: Trump, Cruz, and Rubio, two promise to both simplify and lower the existing tax bracket system, while the other (Cruz) is pushing to establish a national income flat-tax. The Republicans have all laid out their tax plans so far; the Democrats not so much yet.

The tax policy debate over the next twelve months is likely to revolve around the proposals set forth by each party's nominees. What does that mean for tax policy debate in general? Expect partisan lines to be drawn on any comprehensive tax reform proposals. There will be little room for sweeping bipartisan legislation.

It's possible progress will be made in piecemeal fashion, with proposals and legislation focused on specific tax policies with support on both sides of the aisle.

A bipartisan base have waxed and waned in strength on international tax reform in recent years. Could this be the year?

Senate Finance Chair Hatch: "I think it's more likely that we could work out an international tax bill because there are a number of us that want to get rid of the inversion problem. We are working on that, to be honest with you. Both Democrats and Republicans ought to want to get rid of the inversions of our larger corporations over to other lower tax jurisdictions. . . I would have it done. We have some ideas that are pretty hard to beat."

Speaker Ryan has a reputation as an ardent supporter of tax reform but both he and Ways and Means Chair Kevin Brady are saying they believe comprehensive tax reform is only possible if the GOP can take the White House.

Legislative Prospects for 2016

Senate Finance in 2015 set up a series of working groups to discuss potential tax reforms in a variety of areas. The working groups are listed below:

International tax reform: The working group proposes ending "the lock-out effect" by adopting a dividend exemption system. This and minimum tax proposals are expected to help end base-erosion and tax inversion activities. The Finance Committee will continue to hold hearings on international tax reform in 2016, but no legislation has been introduced yet.

Business income tax reform: This group has put forward proposals to lower business income taxes. The group's report also catalogued recent legislation proposals, including the cash method of accounting, a pass-through entity business deduction, the research credit, publicly traded partnership rules, and corporate integration.

Individual tax: The working group calls for tax simplification and the adoption of incentivizing tax policies, such as those that encourage charitable giving and saving for education.

Savings and investment: The group's report lists three goals for policymakers to pursue: (1) increasing access to tax deferred retirement savings; (2) increasing participation and levels of savings; and (3) discouraging early withdrawals from retirement accounts.

Community development and infrastructure: The working group has proposed creating an alternative for funding the Highway Trust Fund. Proposed solutions are meant to increase available funds to "... fix America's roads and bridges, while also overhauling our broken tax code."

Tax Extenders: The passage of the tax extenders package through to the end of 2016 could give Congress some breathing room to pursue comprehensive tax reform legislation in the coming year.

Democratic Presidential Candidates

Neither of the Democratic presidential hopefuls have laid out their tax plans in full. Each has promised to release their plan before Iowa caucuses. Sen. Sanders has been tight-lipped about his tax plan, promising only to release his proposals "before the Iowa caucuses." What we do know is that he plans to raise the estate tax rate to 65% while lowering the estate tax inclusion level to $3.5 million. He has also said he will raise the net investment income surtax by 10%.

Without having released a comprehensive tax plan, HRC has painted some details of the whole: tax rates on medium-term capital gains (investments held for fewer than six years) will be taxed between 24% and 39.6%. Tax cuts to companies with profit-sharing programs, lower income taxes on "hard-working families," and a $2,500 tax cut per student in those families. HRC also proposes to end the "carried interest" loophole.

Speaking recently, Secretary Clinton said ""As President, I'll do what it takes to make sure the super-wealthy are truly paying their fair share. The Buffett rule is one idea that would help achieve greater fairness in our tax system, and in the coming weeks, I will be laying out additional proposals that go beyond the Buffett rule." With a promise to set out her plans sometime in the coming month, it's a solid bet that we will have her full proposal before the Iowa Caucuses.

A Brookings paper released in November studied potential key areas of tax reform to be addressed in 2016, laying out proposals covering five aspects of tax policy, a short description of each, along with their political potential are laid out below.

Raising long-term revenue

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

• Increase revenue by looking past increasing income taxes; enact a VAT tax or reduce specialized credits and deductions in the tax code.

• The passage of the Protect Americans from Tax Hikes (PATH) Act of 2015 extended for two years, and in some cases indefinitely, a number of tax credits and refunds;while a VAT tax may find some support from Republicans, some Democratic lawmakers will consider such a tax to be regressive.

Increasing Environmental Taxes

• Environmental advocates, not to mention economists, have long pushed for a tax on the use of carbon, since President Obama's "cap and trade" program's failure there has not been a significant push for legislation of this type.

• While many are in agreement that a carbon tax is an especially efficient way to make up for the externalities which arise from fossil fuels, that does not mean the idea has widespread political appeal; this is also considered a regressive tax, it would face strident opposition from the Oil & Gas sector, and it would need to be packaged with some sort of international agreement from other highly polluting countries to be seen as fair and effective.

Reforming the Corporate Tax

• Beyond lowering the corporate income tax to levels which either match or beat other developed countries, policy-makers might also consider changes to the tax structure which avoids so-called "double taxation" (taxing both corporate income and shareholder dividends) or even to change the corporate income tax to a corporate cash-flow tax.

• This is one area of tax reform that may be moved on in 2016, with Senate Finance Chair Orrin Hatch speaking favorably of its chances. Don't expect a change to a cash-flow tax, look for policies against inversion deals and which favor repatriation of profits at low tax rates.

Treating Low- and Middle-Income Earners Equitably

• This group lies in the gray area in which increased earning can trigger a reduction in government support payments; potential fixes for this problem include making more government assistance programs "work-based," expanding eligibility for the EITC, and changing the Child and Dependent Care Credit into a refundable benefit.

• Republicans have long supported an increase in the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC) and at least two presidential candidate (Sen. Rubio and HRC) have voiced support for increasing tax credit amounts for either the parents of children or families with students in college; it's possible for these proposals to gain a footing in 2016.

Appropriately Tax High-Income Households

• The simple argument is that taxes against the wealthy are lower now than since the 1970's, while their share of the national income has risen. Thus, any increase in incomes will disproportionately benefit the wealthy, leading to an even greater difference in effective tax rates than now exists.

• This is a non-starter for Republicans, and is the least likely of any of the above categories to see any movement throughout 2016. HRC and Sen. Sanders have hinted that their tax plans will include increases in the tax burdens faced by high-income earning Americans.

Keeping in mind both the current political climate and the probable environment for legislation in 2016, Brookings concludes that "comprehensive tax reform is easy to talk about, but hard to do. The pursuit of sweeping tax simplification is a noble goal, but quixotic." Senate Majority Leader McConnell put the point bluntly, saying at the National Multifamily Housing Council annual luncheon this week, saying "The chances of this Congress doing tax reform with this President is zero."

For better or worse, there have been few repercussions thus far among electeds or the media regarding the recent exchanges on financial regulation policy from the campaign trail this week (see photo below). The differences in the nature of the candidates' proposals doesn't appear to be clear and sufficient to generate much momentum one way or the other.

But as relevant legislative activity on the Hill hasn't geared up quickly yet, we have time for a closer look below at the financial regulation discussion. Tomorrow, the road ahead on tax policy on the Hill.

Best,

Dana

The proxy pas de deux this week featuring New York City Mayor De Blasio and Sen. Elizabeth Warren on financial reform has passed for now but drew some notice. Tie goes to the front runner, for the moment.

The Mayor had not endorsed, governs in the heart of the nation's economic capital, and has street cred when it comes to progressive community and Wall Street. So his clear preference for the HRC financial regulatory reforms plan over that of Sen. Sanders was dispositive and the comments of Gary Gensler at the outset had blunted Sanders' salvo and provided enough coverage for now.

Sen. Warren hasn't endorsed a Democratic candidate for president yet either. She may have had a preference for the Sander's package of reforms but did not endorse and named HRC in a tweet praising all the Democratic presidential candidates alike on "fighting for Wall St reform."

The discussion may well move back to the wayside in short order but it is thematically significant enough to the premise of the Sanders campaign that it is likely to be revisited. So though this round -- a muted draw -- is done, another engagement on the front can be expected before the finish line.

Where will it likely come from? A quick look here at two leading possible policy trigger areas that have been central to the discussion, Glass-Steagall and Too Big to Fail" (aka Break up the Banks).

- Reinstating Glass-Steagall --

Asked to identify the biggest policy problems and industry practices that resulted in the financial crisis of 2008 and the deep recession that followed, few laymen would put the evisceration of Glass-Steagall at the top of the list. Nothing akin to restoring Glass-Steagall came up for a vote in the immediate post-crisis years. The Obama administration has come under occasional criticism for opposing its reinstatement in some form.

On Tuesday, Sanders embraced "a 21st Century Glass-Steagall Act, introduced by my colleague Senator Elizabeth Warren, [which] aims at the heart of the shadow banking system... In my view, Senator Warren, is right. Dodd-Frank should have broken up Citigroup and other 'too- big-to-fail' banks into pieces. And that's exactly what we need to do. And that's what I commit to do as president."

At the end of the day, Glass-Steagall is probably MEGO material to all but the most activist voters. What does it matter if it doesn't make as a consumer better or get rid of TBTF -- which has spread much further into the lexicon than G/S while "break up the banks" is a rallying cry for some in the base.

The more proximate causes include some other problems identified by Sanders in his speech, such as getting a grip on systemic risk, which gets attention.

- TBTF/Break up the Banks --

A less-defined but more resonant concern is the faith of most Americans that Dodd-Frank will prevent post-2008 bailouts at their expense. It is small solace that TARP returned a profit for taxpayers who will never see the return and whose paychecks haven't grown similarly. No one wants to make another reverse transfer of wealth on that scale in the teeth of a recession again.

So it matters whether Dodd-Frank's Titles I and II governing systemic risk work or not. Thankfully, they remain untested. Opinion on their efficacy in the face of a crisis is diverse but it is admittedly a minority that believes the procedures in place should be given a chance to work in the absence of some better design.

The most popular view in almost all quarters is that maybe Dodd-Frank's operations would handle a one-off, single-firm liquidity crisis but would be overwhelmed by a full-blown simultaneous sectoral contraction. So there is probably a policy that can address this ambient but legitimate concern without undermining the essential structure of DFA Titles I and II.

Quick postscript on the discussion that got some notice. In his speech, Sanders said: "Shadow banks did gamble recklessly, but where did that money come from? It came from the federally insured bank deposits of big commercial banks—something that would have been banned under the Glass-Steagall Act."

It is false that Glass-Steagall banned commercial banks from lending to investment banks. Many academics and analysts agree with HRC that Glass-Steagall wouldn't have prevented the crisis, because it wouldn't have directly addressed the activities of problem firms such as insurer AIG and the investment banks Lehman Brothers and Bear Stearns.

Two additional perspectives...

Independent Community Bankers of America: Glass-Steagall did not ban commercial banks from lending to investment banks, but I don't think that was Sander's point. The repeal of Glass-Steagall made lending to investment banks moot. The repeal of Glass-Steagall made commercial banks and investment banks one and the same. So all those relatively cheap insured deposits were there for the taking and for use in high risk and speculative trades. Lending became unnecessary.

Americans for Financial Reform: Big commercial banks like Citibank and JP Morgan provided all kinds of support to shadow banking after the repeal of Glass-Steagall. They had massive exposures to 'toxic assets' and to failing investment banks through the securitization, repo, and derivatives markets, not through conventional lending. Preserving the original Glass-Steagall would have prevented some of those exposures, and the modernized 21st Century Glass-Steagall Act that Sanders has endorsed would ban almost of them.

- Re-impose Glass-Steagall, separating commercial banking and investment banking
- Cap ATM fees at $2 and credit card interest rates at 15 percent
- Turn credit rating agencies into non-profit group
- Enact a tax against speculative investment

A brief drill down on these proposals:

Too Big to Fail -- The idea, in the first 100 days, is to direct the Treasury Department to make a list of "too big to fail ... commercial banks, shadow banks, and insurance companies whose failure would pose a catastrophic risk to the United States economy without a taxpayer bailout." Within one year, break these institutions down to size or otherwise resolve them, using Section 121 of Dodd-Frank. Section 121 allows the FSOC to direct the Fed Board to vote to resolve a financial institution deemed a systemic risk to the national economy. This requires a two-thirds majority of the Board to vote and only applies to bank holding companies with assets exceeding $50 billion, or Fed-supervised non-bank financial companies.

No explanation was provided as to how to deal with inaction or unwillingness by the Fed to force these institutions into resolution. It's a little hard to see what improvement, if any, the props makes to the resolution Title 1 and 2 process provided in Dodd-Frank except by adding an option to streamline it marginally. Note that several pieces of legislation to break up large banks have been introduced in Congress since the crisis, but none have won much support by either Democratic or GOP majorities.

Reinstatement of Glass-Steagall -- This was initially proposed by Sens. Elizabeth Warren and John McCain last year. Sanders co-sponsored. Sanders today: "Shadow banks did gamble recklessly, but where did that money come from? It came from the federally-insured bank deposits of big commercial banks, something that would have been banned under the Glass-Steagall Act."

HRC has repeatedly indicated wholesale support for Dodd-Frank, has proposed a robust set of systemic reforms to improve it, and has argued that restoring Glass-Steagall would not have prevented the crisis of 2008.

Credit Rating Agencies -- The plan calls for turning for-profit ratings agencies (including Moody's, Standard and Poor's, and Fitch) into not-for-profit institutions.
"No longer will Wall Street be able to pick and choose which credit agency will rate their products," said Sen. Sanders.

Reform the Federal Reserve -- Sanders alleges the Fed suffers from "regulatory capture," and is now run by the same sector that it is supposed to regulate. The plan would, "structurally reform the Federal Reserve to make it a more democratic institution responsive to the needs of ordinary Americans, not just the billionaires on Wall Street," by reforming the practice of setting aside some Board seats for representatives of large financial institutions. The Fed would be restricted from active banking industry executives, ending what Sanders calls, "the foxes … guarding the henhouse."

Reform the Federal Reserve -- The Fed suffers from "regulatory capture," and is now run by the same sector that it is meant to be regulating. The Fed would be restricted from active banking industry executives, ending what Sanders calls "the foxes … guarding the henhouse."

The HRC campaign had called on Sen. Sanders yesterday to endorse her plan to regulate shadow banking. But Sanders' piecemeal proposals on shadow banking barely scratch the surface. Credible reformer Mayor Bill de Blasio calls her plan "the toughest, farthest-reaching plan of anyone running for President." The conversation is probably too bogged down in verbiage about recondite legislation like Glass-Steagall to resonate outside the core of the base but HRC's proposals easily stand up to scrutiny so it is welcome.

After the GOP captured the Senate in the midterm elections, the main question in the financial regulatory world as 2015 began was whether Congress would rollback key parts of Dodd-Frank Act (DFA) as the GOP-controlled House had been voting to do over the previous four years.

How did the two sides fare? What issues were at play? What have we learned and what can be expected in 2016?

These questions are answered below as the Shelby bill is considered both as standalone legislation and as a rider on the omnibus appropriations bill, and the other major financial regulatory legislation of 2015 is reviewed.

(NB: some of you may have received a draft version of the below yesterday; you can disregard that draft.)

Best,

Dana

In the tug-of-war between the financial industry and supporters of Dodd-Frank, the gains and losses were marginal on both sides in 2015. Once again, the struggle resulted in another stand off between the industry's efforts to ease the regulatory burden of DFA and advocates' bid to expand its protections for workers, investors and increase resources for regulators. Republicans blame leading Democrats in Congress and in the administration. Financial reformers who spent all year trying to block regulatory rollbacks are crediting them.

The financial industry urged Congress to soften several DFA regulations and sought to do this first through Senate Banking Chair Richard Shelby's bill entitled The Financial Regulatory Improvement Act of 2015. The bill, more than 200 pages and consisting of eight wide titles, addresses wide-ranging areas of reform from changes to a key DFA threshold for enhanced prudential standards to the CFPB's qualified mortgage rule.

Sen. Sherrod Brown, the top Democrat on Senate Banking, said Shelby's bill went too far: "Democrats are ready, willing, and able to work with Republicans to get community banks and credit unions the regulatory relief they need right now... Rather than focusing on issues that enjoy broad bipartisan support, this draft bill is a sprawling industry wish list of Dodd-Frank rollbacks. This sweeping proposal holds Main Street financial institutions hostage to a partisan effort to dismantle Dodd-Frank's consumer protections and sensible rules for the large banks and nonbanks that played central roles in the financial crisis."

The main provisions of the Shelby bill:

• Community Bank Reg. Relief -- Comprising 25 different measures loosening regulations on the country's smallest banks: relief from privacy disclosure requirements; permission for privately insured credit unions to become members of the Federal Home Loan Bank system; an exemption for banks under $10 billion in assets from the Volcker Rule; and a requirement that the National Credit Union Administration hold public hearings and receive comment on its budget.

The opening title also included several provisions criticized by Democrats, such as a change to the CFPB's QM rule allowing all loans held in portfolio to be eligible for the rule's safe harbor provisions -- a controversial measure altering how certain "points and fees" are calculated under the QM rule, it removes language regarding affiliated title companies that spurred much of the earlier criticism. It further makes changes banning certain types of loans, such as "no-doc" loans that helped spur the financial crisis.

• SIFI Threshold -- The bill would have multiplied the DFA threshold mandating tougher capital and oversight on banks by ten times to over $500 billion in consolidated assets, though regulators would have the discretion to examine any banks over $50 billion to be considered systemic. The Fed Board could make a recommendation to the FSOC to consider a particular bank holding company, though the FSOC would have the ability to launch its own evaluation as well. The FSOC would be able to vote to change the list of criteria over time, and the $500 billion threshold would also be indexed for GDP growth. Shelby was willing to narrow the $50-$500 billion window for deregulation he had first proposed. Democratic aides involved in the discussions said Shelby was willing to go as low as $250 billion. Democrats weren't willing to go above $200 billion.

• FSOC Process for Non-Banks -- This title would have codified changes to the FSOC process for designating nonbanks as systemically important, to provide additional transparency to the process. Some in Congress have criticized FSOC's designation process as being too opaque. The FSOC would be required to give detailed explanations for why regulators are considering a designation; provide opportunities for companies to meet with council representatives; analyze a company's remedial plan for removing a SIFI designation and allow for revisions; and offer an explanation if the council moves forward with a formal designation. Regulators would also be required to hold a hearing for designated companies at least once every five years and would have to vote to renew the decision to designate.

• Fed Governance Reforms -- The bill would have made several changes to the Federal Reserve System. It would require the head of the New York Fed to be nominated by the White House and confirmed by the Senate. It would also direct the formation of an independent commission to evaluate the structure of the Fed system, including looking at the number and structure of the Fed's 12 districts. The Fed would be required to publish a study every two years on its regulation and oversight of non-banks, a provision that would sunset after 10 years. The GAO would be required to publish a study looking at the agency's regulation of systemically important institutions, with an eye toward issues around regulatory capture.

• Swaps/Emerging Growth Firms -- This title addressed several measures related to SEC registration and regulation. Most notably, it would remove indemnification requirements on swap data so that it can be shared with foreign regulators more easily and would establish a "grace period" for emerging growth companies working toward an initial public offering.

• Mortgage Finance System -- The bill included several provisions related to the mortgage finance system, including Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. It would prohibit Congress from using guarantee fees to offset unrelated government spending and would ban the sale of Treasury-owned preferred stock in the government-sponsored enterprises without the approval of Congress. It would also direct the FHFA to provide Congress with updates on the establishment of a common securitization platform and would transition the platform to a non-profit available to approved issuers beyond Fannie and Freddie. Finally, it would mandate that the GSEs' risk-sharing levels be at least 150 percent of the previous year's level, with at least half of the total as front-end risk sharing.

With such a wide variety of significant proposals, the Shelby bill was an overloaded canoe. Senate Banking reported it out favorably in May, but only on a 12-10 party-line vote, not sufficient to be certain to clear the 60-vote filibuster hurdle to passage in the Senate.

Over the months that followed, members and staff met frequently to discuss which elements of the bill had bipartisan support Shelby's participation in these meetings was occasional at best and the discussions never really became negotiations.

Committee Republicans Crapo, Moran and Corker did not negotiate in place of Shelby, but they tried to find common ground with a few receptive Democrats on the Banking Committee, including Sens. Warner, Donnelly, Heitkamp, and Tester.

By the end of September, the group came up with a rough framework that covered areas where the Democrats appeared willing to move closer to some of Shelby's proposals. The Democrats were able to find some common ground with Republicans on key areas including easing regulations for community banks, creating a new carve-out for regional banks in Dodd-Frank and making changes to the way the FSOC polices big financial firms outside the banking sector.

The ideas were presented separately to Shelby and Senate Banking Committee ranking member Sherrod Brown. Brown, who had floated an alternative to the Shelby bill consisting only of the Shelby bill's title on supervisory relief for community banks, was not negotiating alongside the moderate Senate Democrats but his staff was kept in the loop.

In early November, Brown arranged a meeting between all the banking committee Democrats so the four who had been working with Republicans could update the rest on the discussions. One Some members showed interest and others showed strong opposition.

Then on November 10 , Sen. Warren gave a speech on the Senate floor warning her colleagues against going down the same road that led to a controversial Dodd-Frank rollback to weaken restrictions on derivatives trading from being tucked into last year’s spending bill. She called out Democrats who “want to get something done around here for a change... If there's anyone in this chamber, Republican or Democrat, who thinks they can slip goodies for Wall Street into these bills without a fight, they are very wrong," she said, referring to must-pass legislation including the upcoming appropriations bill. In addition to the pushback from Warren and other outside groups, the compromise effort faced public and private opposition from Treasury.

Warren and reform advocates were mindful that they lost a round last December in the Cromnibus bill, when JPMorgan Chase and Citigroup lobbyists secured a change to Dodd-Frank rules on complex financial instruments known as swaps.

Back in July, Shelby, a senior member of the Appropriations Committee, had his bill attached as a rider on the Financial Services FY 2016 appropriations bill. But he got almost nothing in the final spending agreement. After months of laying the groundwork, banks and their allies in Congress missed their big shot at moving a wide-ranging legislative agenda in a must-pass spending bill this year before the 2016 election cycle heats up.

Among the major financial provisions that didn’t make it into the spending package:

• Fiduciary Duty -- Per DFA, the Labor Department finally put forth a fiduciary rule in April, the first update of the government’s retirement investment advice regulations in four decades. The rule, which would take effect next year, requires brokers and financial advisers to act in the “best interest” of retirement savers—a higher standard than current regulations, which only require advice be “suitable.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The new rule aims to eliminate the potential conflict of interests between people who offer investment advice and companies that sell financial products at a time when individuals are made responsible for building their own nest eggs through programs like IRAs and 401(k)s that have largely replaced traditional pension funds that guaranteed life-long benefits. The financial industry has said it would raise the compliance costs and drive many financial advisers out of business while making investment advice unaffordable for middle-class savers. Efforts to delay that rule making were turned aside.

• Community Bank Lending Rules -- A number of regulatory changes sought by small, locally focused community lenders, such as an exemption from certain mortgage underwriting rules for mortgages held in a bank's portfolio. These were not adopted.

• CFPB Governance -- A provision to create a board, rather than a single director, to govern the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, and subjecting the agency's budget to annual appropriations did not survive.

Some financial regulatory legislation did make the cut:

• Fed Dividend -- In a surprise, the banking community lost a sizable source of revenue -- the annual Fed dividend paid to member banks, totaling $25 billion. The highway bill passed earlier this month took some of the money that banks receive in dividends from the Fed to help pay for fixing the U.S.'s deteriorating roads. The highway bill passed earlier this month took some of the money that banks receive in dividends from the Federal Reserve to help pay for fixing the U.S.'s deteriorating roads. Wall Street was furious over the precedent of having financial firms pay for infrastructure projects and lobbied to get a provision in the spending bill that would have given banks more flexibility to sell their shares in the Fed's regional banks but the provision was rejected.

• USG's Stake in the GSEs -- A provision passed that prohibits Treasury from selling the government's stake in mortgage-finance giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac until 2018 without future legislation. The U.S. government bailed out Fannie and Freddie in 2008, and in return received warrants to acquire nearly 80 percent of the companies' stock along with a new class of preferred shares. Congress has tried unsuccessfully to pass legislation that would replace Fannie and Freddie with a new system, leading some of the companies' proponents to push the Obama administration to take action on its own and sell the shares, now enjoined by this provision.

An omnibus rider banning the SEC from requiring corporations to publicly disclose their political and lobbying expenditures managed to survive. And negotiators included cybersecurity legislation designed to make it easier for the financial firms and others in the private sector to share threat information with the government.

Five years after a crisis that shook the foundations of finance, Warren has public opinion on her side. A Washington Post/ABC News published October finding that 72 percent of Democrats, 58 percent of Republicans, and 68 percent of independents want the next president to pursue tougher regulations on banks.

That public distrust has forced Wall Street — and financial services writ large — to make oblique arguments that don't tackle head-on the unpopularity of the industry across the entire electorate. Republicans, trying to avoid an explicit alliance with Wall Street, regard their legislation as "reforms of the reforms" that Dodd-Frank made.

Opening premise: we have to make sure the incomes of everyday Americans are rising steadily and strongly. This is the defining economic challenge of our time.
Consider working in the phrase: "Hard-working Americans" here, as while we absolutely want wages of all Americans to rise, I think in the way we talk about this, we should not lose sight that we aren't raising wages just for the sake of raising wages, we are for raising wages so that hard work pays off again, and is rewarded. Voters continually differentiate between the deserving and the undeserving and would suggest we always remind ourselves that we want to help hard-working Americans, who deserve rewards for their hard work that helps the company bottom line, etc.

Curious what others think, but, I'm uncertain about naming GOPers by name.

Also, after the "faster growth," one of the first things is "oppose any efforts to …" Just generally, out of the gate on a new policy proposal, voters want to hear things we will do/we will support, not what we will oppose. Maybe consider changing the order here so the first thing people here isn't that we are in opposition to something someone else is doing. same thing with preventing deep cuts in R&D that Reps are trying to do. Would maybe reframe to "support increasing investment in R&D …" so that we are more proactively in favor of something rather than opposing what others are doing.

Incentives for average workers to share in the profits their hard work produces (like the 'hard work' here), was one of the things that popped in our groups. So that's great. not sure if we can trump that up any more, but that has potential to get notice from average voters.

When talking tax reform, which is another huge topic that voters frequently bring up, can we work in the word "simplify?" it's huge for people. simplify the tax code is something everyone wants.

Curious on quoting Trumka by name.

Would like to think more about this thematically, but these are a few first thoughts, and great job, Dan.

I wanted to share this first working draft of Monday's econ speech. This is too long, so we'll be cutting, but it gives a sense of the argument and structure. As we discussed, the great economic challenge of our time is getting incomes rising for everyday Americans, and to do that, she's proposing a three-part agenda of faster growth, fairer growth, and long term growth. The Republicans, by contrast, are stuck with the playbooks of the past.
Best,
Dan

Attached and on CEA's website (http://www.whitehouse.gov/sites/default/files/docs/uireport-2013-12-4.pdf) is a report released today outlining the economic benefits of extending emergency unemployment compensation. Pasted below is our blog post summarizing the report's findings.

New Report: The Economic Benefits of Extending Unemployment Insurance

By: Jason Furman and Betsey Stevenson

The United States economy continues to recover from the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression, and while substantial progress has been made, more work remains to boost economic growth and speed job creation. Despite ten consecutive quarters of GDP growth and 7.8 million private sector jobs added since early 2010, the unemployment rate is unacceptably high at 7.3 percent, and far too many families are still struggling to regain the foothold they had prior to the crisis.

The Emergency Unemployment Compensation (EUC) program authorized by Congress in 2008 has provided crucial support to the economy and to millions of Americans who lost jobs through no fault of their own. Under current law, EUC will end on December 28, 2013[1].

This report argues that allowing EUC to expire would be harmful to millions of workers and their families, counterproductive to the economic recovery, and unprecedented in the context of previous extensions to earlier unemployment insurance programs.

Since their inception in 2008, extended unemployment insurance (UI) benefits have provided critical support to millions of workers and their families:

Nearly 24 million workers have received extended UI benefits

Recipients are a diverse group: roughly half have completed at least some college, including 4.8 million with bachelor's degrees or higher

Including workers' families, nearly 69 million people have been supported by extended UI benefits, including almost 17 million children

In 2012 alone, UI benefits lifted an estimated 2.5 million people out of poverty

Millions of workers stand to lose access to UI benefits if no action is taken:

- Approximately 1.3 million workers currently receiving extended UI benefits are set to lose them at the end of the year
- 3.6 million additional people will lose access to UI benefits beyond 26 weeks by the end of 2014

Allowing UI to expire would be damaging to the macro-economy and the labor force:

- Failing to extend UI benefits would put a dent in job-seekers' incomes, reducing demand and costing 240,000 jobs in 2014.
- Estimates from the Congressional Budget Office and JP Morgan suggest that without an extension of EUC GDP will be .2 to .4 percentage points lower.
- In 2011, CBO found that aid to the unemployed is among the policies with "the largest effects on output and employment per dollar of budgetary cost"
- In over a dozen studies, economists have found that any disincentive to find new work that could result from extended UI benefits is, at most, small
- Expiration of extended UI benefits may also lead some long-term unemployed to stop looking for work and leave the labor force, reducing the number who could eventually find jobs as the economy heals

Allowing EUC to expire would be unprecedented in the context of previous extensions to earlier unemployment insurance programs:

- The unemployment rate (7.3% in October) is currently higher than it was at the expiration of any previous extended UI benefits program
- The long-term unemployment rate (2.6% in October) is at least twice as high as it was at the expiration of every previous extended UI benefits program

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- In this cycle, EUC was first signed into law in June 2008 by President Bush when the unemployment rate was 5.6 percent and the average duration of unemployment was 17.1 weeks. Today, as of October 2013, the unemployment rate is 7.3 percent and the average duration of unemployment is 36.1 weeks.
- Consistent with previous programs, the EUC program has been gradually phasing down – the median number of weeks one can receive benefits across states is down from a peak of 53 weeks in 2010 to 28 weeks currently and phasing down to 14 weeks under the proposed extension

The effects of allowing EUC benefits to expire would be felt nationwide:

Job-seekers who will lose access to EUC benefits can be found in nearly every state.

Subject:	MoveOn

This is more than a little annoying. Making noise is one thing. Spending seven figures is another. She voted for the war, you punished her already, get over it. I don't know who funds them, but don't we have Hollywood friends with ties to MoveOn who can tell them to cool it?

MoveOn.org Looks to Nudge Elizabeth Warren Into 2016 Presidential Race
By JONATHAN MARTIN
The New York Times
DECEMBER 8, 2014

WASHINGTON — Some Democrats are “Ready for Hillary.” MoveOn.org is ready for Elizabeth Warren.

The liberal group is poised to spend $1 million on a campaign to draft Senator Warren, the Massachusetts Democrat, into the 2016 presidential race, an indication of an appetite among some activists for a more progressive alternative to Hillary Rodham Clinton.

MoveOn.org’s executive director, Ilya Sheyman, said the group planned to open offices and hire staff in Iowa and New Hampshire, the states that kick off the presidential nominating process, and ultimately to air television ads in those states. The group will begin its push with a website, “Run Warren Run,” allowing supporters to sign a petition urging Ms. Warren to pursue a White House bid and featuring a video about her.

“We want to demonstrate to Senator Warren that there’s a groundswell of grass-roots energy nationally and in key states and to demonstrate there’s a path for her,” Mr. Sheyman said. He added that the effort was not being made in coordination with Ms. Warren and that the group advised her staff about it only last weekend.

Ms. Warren, who is entering her third year in the Senate, has fast become a favorite among liberal activists for her unapologetic brand of economic populism, but she has also repeatedly denied any interest in pursuing the presidency.

“As Senator Warren has said many times, she is not running for president,” said Lacey Rose, Ms. Warren’s press secretary, regarding the draft effort.

Such comments have not, however, dissuaded her admirers. MoveOn.org is set to survey its eight million members for one day starting Tuesday, with the expectation that they will affirm its support of the effort to nudge Ms. Warren into the race. She is well regarded by the group, having gotten its support in her 2012 race and joining members on conference calls during her time in the Senate on such issues as student loan debt.

Mrs. Clinton is a popular figure among Democrats and enjoys a wide lead in early polls, but some progressives are wary of her style of politics and believe that widening income disparities in the country call for a more confrontational figure.

Ms. Warren, a former Harvard law professor, is the most sought-after candidate among this liberal bloc, but others could fill the void if she remains on the sidelines. Former Senator Jim Webb of Virginia has already opened an exploratory committee, and Senator Bernie Sanders, a liberal independent from Vermont, and Gov. Martin O’Malley of Maryland have also discussed presidential bids.

Asked about Mrs. Clinton, Mr. Sheyman said the group's effort was unrelated "to any other candidate," but added that MoveOn.org members want a Democratic nominee who fits the moment.

"Voters are looking for bold solutions about how you fix a rigged system in which middle- and working-class families are falling behind," he said.

Whether there is significant energy behind the "Run Warren Run" effort may be known soon: MoveOn.org is planning a kickoff on next Tuesday in Des Moines.

Please Take action to Save the Bedouins

by Rabbi Arik Ascherman

As you read this, JNF bulldozers are preparing the first stage of building the Jewish community of "Hiran" on the rubble of the Israeli Negev Bedouin community of "Umm Al-Hiran." The government plans to expand the Yatir forest to overrun Atir. A week ago, the Israeli High Court removed the last legal hurdle preventing the immediate expulsion of over 1,000 men, women and children from their homes. The mayor of the artificial Bedouin township of Hura, where the Israeli government wishes to move them, says he has that Hura's inadequate zoning plan leaves no place to put them.

You can act, and also read more background regarding Umm Al-Hiran and Atir, at www.dontdemolish.com . Here is some more general background about the Negev Bedouin.

While the world focuses on the Occupied Territories, the plight of Israel's Bedouin citizens goes unnoticed, or is deemed an "internal matter." For people of conscience, there can be no "internal matter," and these approximately 250,000 Israeli citizens are also created in God's Image.

Until 1948 the Negev served as home to 65,000-100,000 Bedouin who inhabited, worked and claimed ownership to somewhere between 2 and 3 million dunams of land (four dunam to an acre), as documented by the pre-State Zionist movement in 1920 In almost every case, the proofs of ownership cited were traditional Bedouin documents based on their internal system of land ownership. Although the Ottomans, British, pre-State Zionist movement and the early State recognized these claims, today the State does not. Israeli courts do not accept Bedouin documents as proof of ownership. Whether one chooses to view this dispute as a boldfaced attempt to take over Bedouin lands, and/or as cultural imperialism unwilling to recognize the land ownership system of a traditional culture, the end result has been massive dispossession.

When I am in the Negev, I often reflect upon the Biblical story of Abraham and his nephew Lot recounted in Genesis 13: 5-12. A conflict arises between Abraham's shepherds and Lot's shepherds because they were living together and there wasn't enough pasture. Abraham is the senior, and can clearly lay down the law. He doesn't. Rather, he bends over backwards to avoid conflict within the family. "Let there be no strife between you and me, between my shepherds and ours, for we are brothers. Is not the whole land before you? Let us separate if you go north, I will go south, and if you go south, I will go north." We, the descendents of Abraham struggle mightily to claim the land he bequeathed us. Were we to exert a fraction of the efforts we invest in fighting over that physical inheritance in living up to the moral example Abraham bequeathed us, Israel/Palestine would look much different than it does today.

After the 1948 War only about 10% of the Bedouin population remained, living under a military regime unti 1966. The Bedouin were moved out of the Western Negev in the 1950's, and into a triangle between Beersheva, Arad and Yeroham. In the 1960's-1980's Israel created 7 townships that radically alter the Bedouin lifestyle and destroy their social fabric. These townships have become magnets for poverty, crime, drugs and despair.

In the 1970's the State of Israel allowed the Bedouin to submit claims of land ownership. Perhaps there were those who thought that Bedouin know nothing about land ownership, and that the results would be so jumbled that it would be easy to dismiss them. The some 3,100 claims submitted fit together like a jigsaw puzzle. The Bedouin asserted they owned about 1,250,000 dunams of land. Of those, about 500,000 dunams of communal pastureland were immediately taken off the table. Subsequently somewhere between 200,000 to 350,000 dunams have been resolved in court or through arbitration. They Bedouin have always lost because their proofs of ownership aren't recognized. About 650,000 dunams of land remain unresolved.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Today approximately 120,000 live in the seven Bedouin townships. The rest of the community lives in 11 "recognized" villages and 35 "unrecognized" villages. While most of the unrecognized villages existed before the State of Israel, and the remainder are located where the State moved them, they are literally not on the map. For the most part they have no water, electricity, schools or master building plans allowing them to build legally. Over 1,000 homes are demolished every year. Crops are destroyed. When the village Khassim Zannih went to court to stop a planned highway from destroying it, the State's response was "What village? There is no village there."

A series of plans of how to deal with the Bedouin have been promulgated since 2008. The latest was the Begin Bill, that we believe would have led to the demolition of tens of villages, the transfer of some 40,000 additional Bedouin into the townships, and the loss of most of their remaining lands. It was frozen in 2013 not only because the Bedouin and their supporters opposed it, but because the Israeli right thought it to be too generous!

Subsequently, the Israeli government has been implementing elements of the Begin Bill without legislation. Over 1,000 Bedouin homes are demolished yearly, even as the State plans tens of new Jewish communities in the Negev and intends to move most of Israel's army bases there.

"Hiran" is one of ten new planned Jewish communities that are part of the "Arad Area Development Plan.' It is the first that was literally planned on the rubble of an existing Bedouin community, but not the only one. Again, you can find more information about Umm Al-Hiran and Atir, and send a letter to Prime Minister Netanyahu, at www.dontdemolish.com .

The tensions created by this injustice are harmful to both the Jewish and Bedouin residents of the Negev. Mistreatment also sends a message to Palestinians that they have nothing to expect from Israel if this is the way Israel treats her own citizens. There is another way. An Israeli television movie documented the identification of Bedouin with the State in the mostly recognized villages in northern Israel, versus the anger and rage in the Negev. You can click here for a brief clip from the movie with subtitles

In 2013, Rabbis For Human Rights conducted a poll demonstrating showing that 90% of Israeli Jews subscribe to the statement that "The Bedouin are taking over the Negev." Some 70% believed that the Bedouin claimed at least 25% of the Negev. The median was 43/9%. When informed that if remaining Bedouin land claims were recognized and honored, they come to only 5.4% of the Negev, the majority said, "We are not sure we believe you, because that is not what we have heard in the media. However, if that is the case, that sounds fair."

Have we Israelis all too often in our short history been oppressors, transferors and dispossessors? Sadly, yes. Is it who we are in our souls? No. This poll is one of the pieces of evidence that gives me hope, and allows me to maintain my faith in the goodness and decency of my fellow Israelis, even as my job is to deal on a daily basis with the darkest corners of the society I am a part of and the people I love. It teaches me that our job is not to rub the nose of the naughty puppy in the mess they have made, but to hold up a mirror and say, "We know that you are good and decent people striving to do justly. However, you need to look in the mirror, in order to get back on track." Our word in Hebrew for prayer is "tefillah," a reflexive verb meaning to "judge one's self." Created in God's Image, God is in the mirror into which we gaze in order to look deeply into ourselves, and understand what we must do in order to return to our highest and truest selves. Tikkun Olam is partnering with God by helping to hold up the mirror.

Please help hold up the mirror by sending a letter now. You can use the letter we've prepared at www.dontdemolish.com

For more information, please go to the Bedouin section on the RHR website

Or to the website of the Negev Coexistence Forum

Rabbi Arik Ascherman is the President and Senior Rabbi of Rabbis For Human Rights. He is currently on trial for standing with the "unrecognized" village of El-Araqib when Israeli forces the demolished structures built inside their cemetery fence in June 2014, because the cemetery perimeter had been sacrosanct during the tens of previous demolitions.

The letter campaign is sponsored by the Jewish Coalition for Um Al-Hiran and Atir

Subject:	You can't duck the tough questions

Friend,

Last night's debate was a win for the people of Illinois.

Voters across the state finally got the chance to see my opponent for who he really is -- an out-of-touch billionaire who has no idea what kind of challenges working families face.

Time and again, my opponent refused to give honest answers about his budget, his business record, and his plans for Illinois.

When you're governor, you can't duck the tough questions, and you can't make up your own math. You owe people honest answers, every time.

The truth is, my opponent's policies would be a disaster for families here in Illinois.

We can't let Bruce Rauner win in November. Chip in $5 or more today to make sure he doesn't.

While my opponent was busy making millions off of the misfortune of others, I've been fighting for working families my whole life.

We've come a long way over the past few years, but our work isn't done.

Raising the minimum wage, creating more jobs, and putting college within reach of more students are just a few of the things we can do if we keep moving forward.

And if you stand with me today, I know we can finish the job. Chip in $5 or more to help get us there:

https://www.quinnforillinois.com/stand-with-me

Thank you.

Governor Quinn

Contributions are not tax deductible. State law requires that the occupation and name of the employer be reported for any individual who contributes over $500. Taxpayers for Quinn does not accept contributions from State employees. In addition, the Illinois Procurement Code prohibits certain businesses and their affiliates that have contracts, bids, and proposals with state agencies from making political contributions to state office holders responsible for awarding the contract. It would be helpful if the Policy Working Groups could pull out of their larger papers any list/discussion they have about potential executive orders or other executive actions -- as well as proposed EOs to roll back. I have received something from the AR world (Sally Katzen), but I know the WGs are thinking about executive actions to take or roll back as well. I want to collect them all so that we can start to look at the overall picture.

If you could send this stuff by early next week, that would be great. Thanks.

Thoughts? I think we are off an aggressive statement saying I'm ready to testify any place any time. Kendall thinks it will take 3 weeks to prepare on emails, which puts us right up against the launch time. The statement below intended to insert ourselves back into the offense without opening up a response of "ok be here Monday."
David is ok with calling for the release of what's already been sent to committee as we are trying to do here. Massively opposed to the first idea of "I'm ready to testify" bravado. Thoughts?

Subject:	[big campaign] Another McCain Foreign Lobbyist Issue - research attached
Attachments:	McCain's Lobbyists In Trouble With Foreign Clients.doc

Today, the New York Times reports that in 2005, the National Security Council complained to Sen. McCain's office that Rick Davis' lobbying firm was "undercutting American foreign policy in Ukraine."

- Davis' firm, Davis Manafort, lobbied for Ukraine politician, Viktor Yanukovich, who was accused of trying kill his opponent, Yushchenko, with radio-active poison.
- The Bush Administration did not support Yanukovich.

Davis is one of at least 10 top McCain aides or fundraisers who have lobbied for foreign governments, including numerous dictators and human rights abusers.

From top to bottom, McCain's campaign is run by lobbyists. McCain has had at least 134 LOBBYISTS who are advising, working for or raising money for his presidential campaign. His campaign manager, top senior adviser, congressional liason and finance director are just a few of McCain's lobbyists. His top adviser, Charlie Black, even made lobbying calls from the Straight Talk Express.

McCain's lobbyist advisers, who develop his policies and would lead his administration, have made millions fighting against the interests of Americans by advocating for big oil, insurance companies, Iraq contractors and white washing the crimes of dictators.

Like Bush, McCain's policies are crafted by lobbyists and help lobbyists and wealthy CEOs instead of helping families who are struggling with the high costs of gas, health care and food.

Hey everyone,

I'm emailing to give a brief update on our standing in Nevada and South Carolina. Tomorrow night we'll have a call where we'll review data in more depth.

Nevada

- We are up by seven points (50-43)
- Our lead is buoyed by high levels of supports from Latino and Af-Am voters. We are in a dead heat with white voters
- Our biggest concern is enthusiasm and caucus knowledge. Sanders supporters are more likely to know the ins and outs of the caucus. To mitigate this, in the upcoming days our field team is focusing on caucus education among our supporters.

South Carolina

- We lead Sanders by 30 points (57 to 27)
- Like Nevada, our support is particularly high with people of color and we are roughly tied with white voters. The difference between the states is that far more African-American voters will participate in South Carolina than Nevada.

Please let me know if you have any questions

Eric Garcetti FOR MAYOR 2013

John --

It's been a whirlwind. Because of your support, we've made it through the primary. I am humbled and grateful for everything, which is why I insisted I email you before I go to bed.

Our work isn't over. Now we're in the runoff, and we have even more to do. It also means that we have to start from scratch financially and we are relying on your continued help.

Will you contribute to our campaign to help us get off on the right foot?

After the sprint that was this past week, it would be easy to let up and take a break. But you deserve better from me, and Los Angeles deserves better from us. We need to keep our foot on the gas.

I can't do that without your support -- please contribute $10, $50, $100, whatever is right for you.

I'm going to bed having made it into the runoff, and very aware of all the work that is left to do. Together we've made it this far, and I hope you continue with me on this journey.

Thank you,
Eric

P.S. Thanks for your support, but we're not done. Please contribute what you can right now to help us get started in the runoff.

Hi Ms. Mills. We've never met, but I'm a longtime correspondent with the Times, based in Atlanta. I'm going to be pitching in with some of our campaign enterprise reporting, and wanted to see if you'd consider talking to me for a story about the Nov-Dec 2008 negotiations that generated the MOU between the Clinton Foundation and the Obama transition regarding disclosure of donors, restrictions on gifts by foreign governments, etc. There's no agenda here beyond wanting to reconstruct the history of that document, which clearly will continue to have some relevance over the coming months. I'd like to know a bit about the logistics of when and where the discussions were held, who was involved, what issues were preeminent, how compromises were reached, etc. Any chance we could talk?

Many thanks,

Kevin Sack

Will definitely get leaked!
Well I'd suggest some set of this group hop on the phone to discuss the following in advance of HRC brief:
--Policy she should be ready to discuss or get questions on and thoughts on how to engage (I assume she has the substance cold)...the word "messaging" is too strong because we want her to be candid and frank, but you get what I'm talking abt. Would be good to list areas of likely disagreement. Maybe this has been hashed out already.
--How she should define her intentions. I assume EW will ask.
--What she can ask EW's advice on. What she could ask EW to help with or provide further thinking on--I think she should be armed with next steps, since it's a way to keep the dialog going.
--Thoughts on press strategy, for follow up discussion with Mindy
--Anything else anyone should loop back with Mindy or Mandy on before the mtg

Or could Mandy provide some intel? It would just be such a big deal for this meeting to go well and have EW walk out feeling positive and on board.
> And then there's the press question--not sure how high the chance of a leak is, but it would be good to have a joint plan with Mindy in the event it gets out to shape coverage. Or to proactively leak if that's what EW wants. Not a bad thing to put out there that they had a constructive mtg.

On Tue, Nov 18, 2014 at 1:20 PM, Huma Abedin <Huma@clintonemail.com > wrote:

I am sorry I missed the meeting although I was able to get detailed downloads here in the office. A few things I was going to mention at meeting that I flag for your situational awareness. Happy to share further details:
1. A unified message: Brynne and Nick were probably too polite to raise it last week but it has been a total zoo in the office since November 4th (not that it wasnt a zoo before). Like all of you, the questions we get asked 20 times a day is a. where is she and what is she doing? and b. what are John and CDM doing?
Our answer is as honest as possible. We are giving her the time and space to think through the things she needs to think through. We acknowledge that there is policy process continuing and that is fairly well known. And if people have 2016 ideas, we are happy to have them. On John and CDM, we say you have been her closest advisors for a hundred years and that hasnt changed. Since we have never discussed this as a group or agreed on what to say, sharing with everyone.
2. Progressive friends:
- Elizabeth Warren: We confirmed this meeting last week. It is set for December 4th. We were having problems with them because this was supposed to take place in June. They do not want intermediaries discussing the relationship or the potential policy differences as they feel that is happening too much. They want to have a direct conversation about economic policy.
- Bill de Blasio: I stay in touch with him and his team a lot. He has recently asked to have increased direct access to her so he can tell his progressive partners what she thinks about issues important to them. He also thinks he can be most helpful to her if he has that kind of relationship. He wants to be seen as the loudest progressive voice for her and in order to do that he needs access. In the next 6 months, someone else will have to inherit this relationship because it will not be tenable for HRC.
3. Schedule issues 2015:
- We ended up locking in ALL her remaining paid speaking offers a few weeks ago. She reviewed them all with you at meeting so you know everything.
- Listening Tour: I know you discussed. Just a note that she only loved it in hindsight. Also flagging that we have some repair work to do in some early states like NH and Iowa based on activity of the past year.
- Morocco: No matter what happens, she will be in Morocco hosting CGI on May 5-7, 2015. Her presence was a condition for the Moroccans to proceed so there is no going back on this. Important that you know background.
4. Constituency Groups:
- Emilys List: Their 30th year gala is March 3rd, 2015. They have been lobbying for her attendance for over a year. Need to keep in mind for whatever other March activities we discuss. We have other EL issues we should discuss in next call/meeting.
- Executive Action: We have now heard from 1 friend in community saying specifically "we planning on getting more aggressive in our stance with Hillary (showing up at events and in press statements). if possible she should support executive order before the President". Need to assume starting TOMORROW, our friends will show back up at her open press events.
- LGBT and faith community: We have friends in both groups that want to start now or at least be part of steering committees on behalf of HRC and are in a holding pattern.
Random:
- We should be thoughtful about any group that wants to rent Friend of Hillary list now because there is interest. This is also probably best discussed off email.
Sorry to be so long!

Folks

HRC wants to have a meeting on Thursday at 10am in Chappaqua. It will likely last until 2pm or 3pm. If you can coordinate your schedules accordingly to be there that would be ideal.

In addition, Robby and John will do a pre-call -- likely on Monday afternoon or evening depending on what is best for folks' schedules. There also will be read-ahead materials shared on Tuesday.

Subject: Year-end Review: Fiscal Policy

Mike & Co. --

For the first time in five years, Congress and the administration came to an agreement last month on the federal budget and the debt limit. They managed to do this without serious risk of a government shutdown or default. In fact, with the government now funded through September 30, 2016, there's practically no chance of a shutdown until then.

The budget deal also raised the defense and non-defense spending caps to avoid sequesters next month and in January 2017. And it extends the debt limit through March 15, 2017, when Treasury starts running out of "extraordinary measures."

Apparently, no one wants to miss time on the campaign trail wrangling over appropriations or threatening default.

What happened? Does this mean fiscal peace in our time? Or is it a short-term time out from the budget battles of recent years? See below a look at the year-end fiscal policy agreement, with a detailed review of the extenders package.

For now, enjoy the ceasefire and happy New Year!

Cheers,

Dana

The omnibus spending bill enacted last month is tantamount to passage of all 12 appropriations for FY17 before that fiscal year starts next October 1. That means the FY17 appropriation top lines will be set before the fiscal year starts for the first time since 1995 (FY96). That's twenty years ago.

There was no reason to expect this comity for most of 2015. Budget making by regular order seemed out of the question as Senate Democrats vowed to filibuster every FY16 appropriations bill to hit the floor unless the GOP consented to restore domestic and military sequester cuts on a 50/50 basis -- and did so.

The strategy worked, but for a reason few could have predicted. The House Republican conference's demands on leadership became so untenable -- that is, so likely to produce the government shutdown that Speaker Boehner and Senate Majority Leader McConnell were desperate to avoid -- that Boehner finally made the House hardliners an offer they couldn't refuse: accept his resignation for the price of a continuing resolution (CR).

Boehner's budget bargain became his successor's. The new Speaker, Paul Ryan, convinced the conference to live with this bargain for the time being and live to fight another day. In part to avoid making the Ryan House immediately as ungovernable as Boehner's had been, with the prospect of paralysis continuing into 2016, the conference adopted all of the Boehner CR's top line numbers in the omnibus.

The two-year budget deal that increases discretionary spending by $80 billion over two years and extends the debt limit through 2017 met nearly every budget demand laid out this year by Democrats, who also remained united to prevent the GOP from attaching riders to the omnibus to cut off funding for Planned Parenthood and several of President Obama’s top priorities, including Obamacare, as well as his new environmental rules and executive actions on immigration.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Other key riders that were rejected:

• Campaign Finance -- Senate Majority Leader McConnell pushed for language loosening federal restrictions on fundraising by political parties, a move meant to give parties more equal standing with independent "super PACs" that have the ability to raise unlimited amounts of money from private donors following the Supreme Court's Citizens United decision. But Democrats and conservative Republicans joined together to oppose any loosening of party fundraising, one of the key provisions of the 2002 McCain-Feingold campaign finance reform bill.

What was included was a Republican rider preventing the IRS from cracking down on the political activities of 501 (c)(4) nonprofit groups, who are allowed to spend on the "promotion of social welfare" with much less disclosure than a campaign or political action committee.

• Regulatory Reform -- Democrats rejected all riders that would repeal or scale back the 2010 Dodd-Frank Wall Street reform bill. Republicans wanted particularly to block a proposed DOL rule that requires retirement investment advisers not to consider how much commission or what fees could be collected when advising clients. That rider was not included in the deal, nor was a widely discussed proposal to reduce the number of banks subject to stricter financial regulations as "systemically important" institutions.

Nearly all of the policy riders included in the 2014 cromnibus were carried over in the 2015 spending bill. One of special interest to HRC and New Yorkers in general:

• 9/11 Responders -- Congress voted in 2010 to create a new federal health program for police officers, firefighters, construction workers and others who worked at Ground Zero in the immediate aftermath of 9/11; hundreds are suffering from cancer, respiratory illnesses and other maladies. The omnibus extended this health program until 2090 and adds another five years to a separate victims compensation fund, costing a total of $8 billion.

In addition to the FY 2016 budget, Congress also passed a more sweeping set of extensions of existing short-term tax breaks than most observers had expected.

The large 10-year revenue loss estimate of this extenders bill -- over $650 billion -- reflects Congress' decision to do at once what it would otherwise do in five to seven smaller chunks. The costliest of the extenders:

• Research & Development -- A top GOP and corporate priority, the research-and-development tax credit is made permanent for the first time since it was created in 1981 and expanded it so that some small companies that aren't making profits can take the credit against payroll taxes. Small businesses would be able to write off as much as $500,000 in capital costs instead of the $25,000 they could deduct if Congress didn't act, and those levels would be indexed for inflation. Banks such as Citigroup and Morgan Stanley will get to continue deferring U.S. taxes on their foreign income.

• Low-income Individual Breaks --
Democrats, in turn, won permanent extensions of some of the president's priorities—expanded tax credits for low-income and middle-class families that are scheduled to lapse at the end of 2017, after he has left office.
The child-tax credit, earned-income tax credit and a college-tuition credit will all get extended indefinitely at their current levels, although without the indexing to inflation some Democrats had sought.

• Permanent Extensions -- Among the largest of the extenders made permanents are the state and local sales tax deduction, charitable contributions, and basis adjustment of S corporation stock. Others include:

• Section 179 small business expensing up to $500,000 annually, phased out for property placed in service in excess of $2 million, indexed for inflation;
• small businesses with gross receipts of $50 million or less, which may use the credit to offset their Alternative Minimum Tax Liability;
• 20 percent wage credit for active duty employees for employers of any size;
• 15-year straight line depreciation for restaurant and retail property improvements;
• 100 percent exclusion of small business stock held for five years, also eliminated from the AMT;

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- the Subpart F active financing exception;
- the Child Tax Credit;
- the American Opportunity Credit;
- the Earned Income Tax Credit; and
- the eduction for certain expenses of elementary and secondary school teachers.

• Five-Year Extensions -- Each side also got five-year extensions of other key priorities. Republicans won an extension of bonus depreciation, which lets all companies deduct more than usual in the year they buy a capital asset. Other major five-year extensions:

- the bonus depreciation, 50% in 2015, 2016, and 2017, 40% in 2018, and 30% in 2019. Unused AMT credits may be claimed in lieu of bonus depreciation. Qualifying property expanded to include certain improvements and certain trees, vines, and plants;
- the New Markets tax credit;
- breaks for hiring people from disadvantaged groups and investing in struggling communities; and
- credits for wind and solar energy, including a change that lets solar projects qualify once they begin construction, instead of when they begin producing energy (NB: both the wind and solar credits ultimately get phased out)

• Two-Year Extensions --

- timber capital gains taxed at 23.8 percent;
- race horses as three -year property; and
- the $1/gallon biodiesel credit

Other major year-end tax policy changes:

• Cadillac Tax -- The 40 percent ACA Cadillac tax has been postponed until 2020 and is likely to be repealed before then. It would have applied to the most expensive health insurance plans. But with skyrocketing health insurance costs, by 2018, almost half of all plans would have been hit. Strong bipartisan majorities in both houses of Congress favored repeal, but President Obama saved it by agreeing to a two-year postponement.

• Medical Device Tax -- The 2.3 percent medical device tax will not apply to sales in 2016 and 2017 and it's likely to be repealed after that. This is the same story as the Cadillac tax. If the votes were there to postpone it, then they will be there to repeal it. The only question is whether the next president will let that go without vetoing it.

• International Tax Reform -- Though almost no one expects broad based tax reform (individual and corporate) until 2017, preliminary comprehensive tax reform talks between the White House and Congress occurred during the highway bill negotiation this fall. But domestic and pass-through businesses would not allow tax breaks for U.S. multinationals to pass without getting a piece of that pie. Any international tax reform would create winners and losers and the losers have enough clout today to bring it down.

Nevertheless, an international tax proposal with a 20 percent top rate is being prepared for 2016 by House Ways and Means Chair Kevin Brady:

“How we run in 2016, how we lay this foundation is critical to how we finish this effort. ... The answer isn’t in more Treasury rules, or in pointing fingers, or hand-wringing. ... I am convinced that we have to be at 20 percent or below to keep us competitive for the longer run. ... Doing that in a way that does encourage them to bring those profits back is a challenge. It is definitely achievable. And right now, again — because of the [OECD’s base erosion and profit-shifting project’s influence] around the world — there is an urgency to determine if we allow ourselves to become isolated in our tax code where innovation companies simply can’t justify doing their [research and development] and manufacturing here in the U.S. If that continues, we are going to lose [a] tax base that is important to the country.”

Lastly, a couple of tax policy loose-ends:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

• the Internet Tax Moratorium expires October 1, 2016. There's little doubt it will be extended. The only question is whether it will go by itself or with a sales tax bill.

• an Online Sales Tax is under consideration for next year. Just before the Senate adjourned for the year, a permanent Internet Tax Moratorium was added to the Trade Facilitation and Trade Enforcement Act (aka Customs bill) conference report. Assistant Senate Minority Leader Durbin is confident that his point of order will strike that from the conference report and hopefully force Senate passage of the Marketplace Fairness Act, S.698, which would establish uniform sales and use taxation of Internet sales.

GOP-controlled House had been voting to do over the previous four years.

How did the two sides fare? What issues were at play? What have we learned and what can be expected in 2016?

These questions are answered below as the Shelby bill is considered both as standalone legislation and as a rider on the omnibus appropriations bill, and the other major financial regulatory legislation of 2015 is reviewed.

(NB: some of you may have received a draft version of the below yesterday; you can disregard that draft.)

Best,

Dana

In the tug-of-war between the financial industry and supporters of Dodd-Frank, the gains and losses were marginal on both sides in 2015. Once again, the struggle resulted in another stand off between the industry's efforts to ease the regulatory burden of DFA and advocates' bid to expand its protections for workers, investors and increase resources for regulators. Republicans blame leading Democrats in Congress and in the administration. Financial reformers who spent all year trying to block regulatory rollbacks are crediting them.

The financial industry urged Congress to soften several DFA regulations and sought to do this first through Senate Banking Chair Richard Shelby's bill entitled The Financial Regulatory Improvement Act of 2015. The bill, more than 200 pages and consisting of eight wide titles, addresses wide-ranging areas of reform from changes to a key DFA threshold for enhanced prudential standards to the CFPB's qualified mortgage rule.

Sen. Sherrod Brown, the top Democrat on Senate Banking, said Shelby's bill went too far: "Democrats are ready, willing, and able to work with Republicans to get community banks and credit unions the regulatory relief they need right now... Rather than focusing on issues that enjoy broad bipartisan support, this draft bill is a sprawling industry wish list of Dodd-Frank rollbacks. This sweeping proposal holds Main Street financial institutions hostage to a partisan effort to dismantle Dodd-Frank's consumer protections and sensible rules for the large banks and nonbanks that played central roles in the financial crisis."

The main provisions of the Shelby bill:

• Community Bank Reg. Relief -- Comprising 25 different measures loosening regulations on the country's smallest banks: relief from privacy disclosure requirements; permission for privately insured credit unions to become members of the Federal Home Loan Bank system; an exemption for banks under $10 billion in assets from the Volcker Rule; and a requirement that the National Credit Union Administration hold public hearings and receive comment on its budget.

The opening title also included several provisions criticized by Democrats, such as a change to the CFPB's QM rule allowing all loans held in portfolio to be eligible for the rule's safe harbor provisions -- a controversial measure altering how certain "points and fees" are calculated under the QM rule, it removes language regarding affiliated title companies that spurred much of the earlier criticism. It further makes changes banning certain types of loans, such as "no-doc" loans that helped spur the financial crisis.

• SIFI Threshold -- The bill would have multiplied the DFA threshold mandating tougher capital and oversight on banks by ten times to over $500 billion in consolidated assets, though regulators would have the discretion to examine any banks over $50 billion to be considered systemic. The Fed Board could make a recommendation to the FSOC to consider a particular bank holding company, though the FSOC would have the ability to launch its own evaluation as well. The FSOC would be able to vote to change the list of criteria over time, and the $500 billion threshold would also be indexed for GDP growth. Shelby was willing to narrow the $50-$500 billion window for deregulation he had first proposed. Democratic aides involved in the discussions said Shelby was willing to go as low as $250 billion. Democrats weren't willing to go above $200 billion.

• FSOC Process for Non-Banks -- This title would have codified changes to the FSOC process for designating nonbanks as systemically important, to provide additional transparency to the process. Some in Congress have criticized FSOC's designation process as being too opaque. The FSOC would be required to give detailed explanations for why regulators are considering a designation; provide opportunities for companies to meet with council representatives; analyze a company's remedial plan for removing a SIFI designation and allow for revisions; and offer an explanation if the council moves forward with a formal designation. Regulators would also be required to hold a hearing for designated companies at least once every five years and would have to vote to renew the decision to designate.

• Fed Governance Reforms -- The bill would have made several changes to the Federal Reserve System. It would require the head of the New York Fed to be nominated by the White House and confirmed by the Senate. It would also direct the formation of an independent commission to evaluate the structure of the Fed system, including looking at the number and structure of the Fed's 12 districts. The Fed would be required to publish a study every two years on its regulation and oversight of non-banks, a provision that would sunset after 10 years. The GAO would be required to publish a study looking at the agency's regulation of systemically important institutions, with an eye toward issues around regulatory capture.

• Swaps/Emerging Growth Firms -- This title addressed several measures related to SEC registration and regulation. Most notably, it would remove indemnification requirements on swap data so that it can be shared with foreign regulators more easily and would establish a "grace period" for emerging growth companies working toward an initial public offering.

• Mortgage Finance System -- The bill included several provisions related to the mortgage finance system, including Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. It would prohibit Congress from using guarantee fees to offset unrelated government spending and would ban the sale of Treasury-owned preferred stock in the government-sponsored enterprises without the approval of Congress. It would also direct the FHFA to provide Congress with updates on the establishment of a common securitization platform and would transition the platform to a non-profit available to approved issuers beyond Fannie and Freddie. Finally, it would mandate that the GSEs' risk-sharing levels be at least 150 percent of the previous year's level, with at least half of the total as front-end risk sharing.

With such a wide variety of significant proposals, the Shelby bill was an overloaded canoe. Senate Banking reported it out favorably in May, but only on a 12-10 party-line vote, not sufficient to be certain to clear the 60-vote filibuster hurdle to passage in the Senate.

Over the months that followed, members and staff met frequently to discuss which elements of the bill had bipartisan support Shelby's participation in these meetings was occasional at best and the discussions never really became negotiations.

Committee Republicans Crapo, Moran and Corker did not negotiate in place of Shelby, but they tried to find common ground with a few receptive Democrats on the Banking Committee, including Sens. Warner, Donnelly, Heitkamp, and Tester.

By the end of September, the group came up with a rough framework that covered areas where the Democrats appeared willing to move closer to some of Shelby's proposals. The Democrats were able to find some common ground with Republicans on key areas including easing regulations for community banks, creating a new carve-out for regional banks in Dodd-Frank and making changes to the way the FSOC polices big financial firms outside the banking sector.

The ideas were presented separately to Shelby and Senate Banking Committee ranking member Sherrod Brown. Brown, who had floated an alternative to the Shelby bill consisting only of the Shelby bill's title on supervisory relief for community banks, was not negotiating alongside the moderate Senate Democrats but his staff was kept in the loop.

In early November, Brown arranged a meeting between all the banking committee Democrats so the four who had been working with Republicans could update the rest on the discussions. One Some members showed interest and others showed strong opposition.

Then on November 10, Sen. Warren gave a speech on the Senate floor warning her colleagues against going down the same road that led to a controversial Dodd-Frank rollback to weaken restrictions on derivatives trading from being tucked into last year's spending bill. She called out Democrats who "want to get something done around here for a change... If there's anyone in this chamber, Republican or Democrat, who thinks they can slip goodies for Wall Street into these bills without a fight, they are very wrong," she said, referring to must-pass legislation including the upcoming appropriations bill. In addition to the pushback from Warren and other outside groups, the compromise effort faced public and private opposition from Treasury.

Warren and reform advocates were mindful that they lost a round last December in the Cromnibus bill, when JPMorgan Chase and Citigroup lobbyists secured a change to Dodd-Frank rules on complex financial instruments known as swaps.

Back in July, Shelby, a senior member of the Appropriations Committee, had his bill attached as a rider on the Financial Services FY 2016 appropriations bill. But he got almost nothing in the final spending agreement. After months of laying the groundwork, banks and their allies in Congress missed their big shot at moving a wide-ranging legislative agenda in a must-pass spending bill this year before the 2016 election cycle heats up.

Among the major financial provisions that didn't make it into the spending package:

• Fiduciary Duty -- Per DFA, the Labor Department finally put forth a fiduciary rule in April, the first update of the government's retirement investment advice regulations in four decades. The rule, which would take effect next year, requires brokers and financial advisers to act in the "best interest" of retirement savers—a higher standard than current regulations, which only require advice be "suitable." The new rule aims to eliminate the potential conflict of interests between people who offer investment advice and companies that sell financial products at a time when individuals are made responsible for building their own nest eggs through programs like IRAs and 401(k)s that have largely replaced traditional pension funds that guaranteed life-long benefits. The financial industry has said it would raise the compliance costs and drive many financial advisers out of business while making investment advice unaffordable for middle-class savers. Efforts to delay that rule making were turned aside.

• Community Bank Lending Rules -- A number of regulatory changes sought by small, locally focused community lenders, such as an exemption from certain mortgage underwriting rules for mortgages held in a bank's portfolio. These were not adopted.

• CFPB Governance -- A provision to create a board, rather than a single director, to govern the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, and subjecting the agency's budget to annual appropriations did not survive.

Some financial regulatory legislation did make the cut:

• Fed Dividend -- In a surprise, the banking community lost a sizable source of revenue -- the annual Fed dividend paid to member banks, totaling $25 billion. The highway bill passed earlier this month took some of the money that banks receive in dividends from the Fed to help pay for fixing the U.S.'s deteriorating roads. The highway bill passed earlier this month took some of the money that banks receive in dividends from the Federal Reserve to help pay for fixing the U.S.'s deteriorating roads. Wall Street was furious over the precedent of having financial firms pay for infrastructure projects and lobbied to get a provision in the spending bill that would have given banks more flexibility to sell their shares in the Fed's regional banks but the provision was rejected.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

• USG's Stake in the GSEs -- A provision passed that prohibits Treasury from selling the government's stake in mortgage-finance giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac until 2018 without future legislation. The U.S. government bailed out Fannie and Freddie in 2008, and in return received warrants to acquire nearly 80 percent of the companies' stock along with a new class of preferred shares. Congress has tried unsuccessfully to pass legislation that would replace Fannie and Freddie with a new system, leading some of the companies' proponents to push the Obama administration to take action on its own and sell the shares, now enjoined by this provision.

An omnibus rider banning the SEC from requiring corporations to publicly disclose their political and lobbying expenditures managed to survive. And negotiators included cybersecurity legislation designed to make it easier for the financial firms and others in the private sector to share threat information with the government.

Five years after a crisis that shook the foundations of finance, Warren has public opinion on her side. A Washington Post/ABC News published October finding that 72 percent of Democrats, 58 percent of Republicans, and 68 percent of independents want the next president to pursue tougher regulations on banks.

That public distrust has forced Wall Street — and financial services writ large — to make oblique arguments that don't tackle head-on the unpopularity of the industry across the entire electorate. Republicans, trying to avoid an explicit alliance with Wall Street, regard their legislation as "reforms of the reforms" that Dodd-Frank made.

I am only too happy to have avoided the nitty gritty on the India issue but I was relieved and pleasantly surprised by the swift positive turn of events -- hence my recent conversation on the topic with Darren who identified you as a primary reason for the positive turn. He's been a fabulous colleague -- a law school classmate of Begala, by the way.

CAP -- I am always happy to see Ford grants to CAP. Truth be told, CAP's growth and success has been helpful in raising the bar for some of the grantees who've been hanging on for a looooooong time as it appears to have raised the bar for many of them.

HILLARY -- I fear that a dinosaur like me has done about all that I'm capable of that would be of value to HRC -- I max'ed out earlier this year. But I'm happy to be helpful especially if you need anything. Perhaps more useful, my wife sold her business a month ago and has free time. She's not political but is a supporter so she may be a useful catch if there are some opportunities for a smart retiree who created her own business -- she's originally from Brooklyn but we are based here in DC.

Subject:	Assistance to Auto Companies
Attachments:	NYT Editorial.doc

I saw in the press today that Senator Obama has again backed another $25 billion in assistance to the automakers, and has pledged to meet with the leaders of the companies and the UAW soon after the election. We very much appreciate these statements.

We do believe it would make sense to have such a meeting as soon as possible after the election. As you may recall, President-elect Clinton held such a meeting back in December, 1992.

The situation at the companies may deteriorate dramatically very quickly. My understanding is that GM and Ford will release their earnings reports a couple days after the election. The reports will be terrible. In particular, GM's report will show that it only has enough cash to last a couple of months. This could trigger a wave of suppliers demanding that they be paid on delivery, rather than within the usual 60-90 day time period. At any point in time, GM has about $16 billion owing to suppliers. If it is forced to immediately pay these amounts up front to suppliers, this could lead to an immediate downward spiral and liquidation of both GM and Chrysler.

It is also my understanding that the Treasury Department has refused to provide an immediate infusion of cash into GM/Chrysler. They are trying to pass the buck to Congress, saying it should amend the Section 136 advanced vehicle retooling program to make the money available right now for any purpose. This is a non-starter on the Hill.

The UAW believes two things need to happen. First, Treasury needs to provide an immediate infusion of cash to the companies (probably at least $10 billion), to get them through the immediate cash/credit crunch.

Second, to get the companies through 2009, we think Congress needs to pass another $25 billion loan program, with the loans to be used by the companies to fund the retiree health care VEBA. Helping the companies with this liability will then free up private sector financing for the companies. And it will ensure that the retirees receive their health care.

As you may have seen, the lead editorial in today's New York Times supports additional assistance for the automakers. It specifically refers to our VEBA proposal, as well as the need for additional assistance. It also talks about prohibiting dividends, curtailing executive comp, and requiring Cerberus to open its books. We would be supportive of all of these strings. Attached is a copy of the editorial.

Happy to talk further if you want.

John, I'd like to move your naming (and Sandler's) up from the director's office in the Stellyes Center for Global Studies to the reception area within that same venue - denoted on the floor plans sent to you as the map and conference room. This is a larger venue with more visibility. The recognition plaque, etc. would be the same as I sent to you for review. The plaque would just be in the first room when you enter the Center rather than the second.

If this works for you, we will proceed with this plan.

LCV ACTION FUND

Donate to Tammy Baldwin – she's running against one of corporate special interests' best friends in Washington – former Wisconsin Governor Tommy Thompson. Let's help her win.

John --

Last night, Wisconsin GOP primary voters went to the polls and elected former Wisconsin governor -- and former Bush administration official -- Tommy Thompson to be the Republican nominee for the Wisconsin Senate seat.

While many Americans have struggled over the past few years with a feeble economy and rising energy prices, Thompson has profited from hundreds of thousands of dollars from his investments in the oil and gas industry. He also supports Paul Ryan's extreme budget plan which would protect billions in Big Oil subsidies. If he wins the Wisconsin Senate seat in November, you can bet he'll be one of Big Oil and Dirty Coal's best friends in Washington.

We don't need another crony of Big Oil and Dirty Coal in Washington. We need a leader who will fight to protect the air we breathe and the water we drink. That's why it's critical we show Tammy Baldwin that LCV supporters are committed to her campaign. Will you chip in with a donation today?

Make a donation to Tammy Baldwin. Tammy is a fighter who will stand up to corporate special interests and protect generations of sound environmental policy.

With Thompson winning the primary, it's likely he'll have significant momentum for the next few weeks. We can stop his momentum if we can mobilize thousands of environmental supporters for Tammy's campaign right now. Tammy is already getting bombarded with negative attacks funded by the Koch brothers-backed Americans for Prosperity. And it's not just the Koch brothers jumping in, earlier today, Karl Rove's Crossroads GPS announced a $250,000 ad buy against Tammy. With all this money flowing into Wisconsin, it's critical her campaign has the resources to mobilize a grassroots army to help her win in November.

Tammy Baldwin is the environmental leader we need in the U.S. Senate.

Help LCV Action Fund raise $18,500 in the next 24 hours for Tammy's campaign.

Donate today>>

The Wisconsin Senate race will come down to the wire. It's one of the key battleground states that could determine control of the U.S. Senate. A recent Quinnipiac poll of a potential Thompson-Baldwin matchup had the two tied at 47 percent each. It's simply that close.

Tammy Baldwin is a seven-term congresswoman currently serving in Wisconsin's second congressional district. With an outstanding LCV lifetime score of 97 percent, she's demonstrated time and again that she's a true environmental leader. In fact, she helped author and pass the U.S. House's comprehensive clean energy and climate bill in 2009.

Can you make a contribution to Tammy's Senate campaign today via LCV Action Fund's GiveGreen website?

A major reason Tammy's being targeted by big polluters? If she gets elected to the U.S. Senate, she'll continue to be a strong champion for the environment, which means holding polluters accountable and working to eliminate billions in taxpayer-funded subsidies that Big Oil companies receive annually.

Also, while on a key health subcommittee in the House, Tammy has relentlessly fought to protect our air and water from polluter-driven attacks on essential safeguards like the Clean Air Act and Clean Water Act. And she has also been a strong advocate for protecting our cherished national treasures, including the Great Lakes. We need leaders like Tammy Baldwin in the U.S. Senate!

We need LCV supporters to help raise $18,500 for Tammy Baldwin in the next 24 hours. Will you chip in right now to help Tammy reach that goal? If LCV members join together and support environmental leaders like Tammy Baldwin, we'll stop Tommy Thompson, Karl Rove, and the Koch brothers and win in 2012. I hope you'll make a contribution to Tammy Baldwin for Senate via LCV Action Fund's GiveGreen right now.

Thank you for supporting LCV Action Fund and our GiveGreen candidates.

Subject: VoteVets Launches TOUGH Ad and Poll

Dear John,

We're back up on the air and on the web with $2.5 million worth of our tough new ad campaign that makes the link between oil and terror very clear - and makes the point that the best way to combat our enemies is to cut their funding, by ending our dependence on oil and enacting clean energy policy.
We now also have a compelling new poll of Iraq and Afghanistan veterans to back us up.

SEE OUR NEW AD AND HELP US KEEP IT GOING HERE

The ad features Iraq War and US Army Veteran Christopher Miller, who earned a Purple Heart as the result of an explosion from an Improvised Explosive Device (IED). Miller then highlights the destructive potential of a newer and more powerful explosive device, the Explosively Formed Projectile (EFP), which was brought to Iraq from Iran and then used against our troops. Miller notes that every time the price of a barrel of oil increases $1, Iran makes another $1.5 billion, enhancing their ability to create weapons to be used against our troops. He concludes by imploring our leaders to pass Clean Energy legislation.
This is the view of the overwhelming number of Iraq and Afghanistan veterans. We just commissioned a poll of them, heavily weighted to self-identified Republicans, which shows that 73 percent of them support Clean Energy Climate Change legislation in Congress and 79 percent believe ending our dependence on foreign oil is important to national security.

HELP VETERANS PUSH FOR CLEAN ENERGY REFORM HERE

We represent the overwhelming number of Iraq and Afghanistan veterans on this issue. They want America to enact tough, comprehensive clean energy climate change reform. Will you stand with them and us?

Thanks for all of your support.

Sincerely,
Jon Soltz

No time for a long email. I'm running into an emergency strategy meeting with Maura. Here's the short version:

The Tea Partier I ran against in 2012 just officially announced she's running again, with $500,000 in the bank already.

I know you supported me when we defeated her in 2012 but if we're going to do it again and stop her extreme anti-woman, anti-family positions, we have to act now, before she gets her footing. Can you click here to contribute $250 to our rapid response fund right now?

Promise I'll get you more information as soon as we have it. Thanks for everything you do!

May 20th Nightly Press Traffic Summary

- There is a blog post from HRC on small business on LinkedIn that will go up tomorrow, NYT will break that story and LinkedIn PR will push it around to tech outlets.

- CNN/Dan Merica's piece on curbing drug abuse emerging key issue for Hillary now scheduled to pop Friday morning.

- TIME is doing a piece on the small business policy that Hillary Clinton rolled out Tuesday -- we stressed her efforts to loosen unnecessary regulations on small banks while staying tough on big banks/Wall St to continue to protect consumers.

- New York Times (Jonathan Martin) is planning to do a piece on our apparent focus on mobilizing the base over persuading the middle, contrasting it with WJC's campaigns and HRC's '08 campaign. Robby is going to talk to him to explain that we are doing both at the same time -- our progressive positions are also mainstream positions.

- POLITICO (Annie Karni) has a story coming tomorrow on us acquiring the Ready For Hillary email list.

- Jonathan Allen at Vox wants to do a story, inspired by her quote on Sid Blumenthal, about the way in which Hillary chooses to keep old friends around and involved even when it may be politically unwise.

- POLITICO Magazine (Michael Hirsh) is doing a deep dive on the Obama Administration's Libya policy for their next print edition. It will of course cover Benghazi, but it also seems like he will raise the question as to whether the admin lacked coherent overall policy from the beginning in Libya.

- As an FYI, the New York Times has FOIA'ed universities where HRC has given speeches for documents and emails related to those appearances.

Subject: cheeseburgers in the White House

John,

If you ask our son Reiniel what he remembers most about the Clinton Administration, he'll tell you it was eating cheeseburgers in the White House mess.

From our earliest days together, Sean blew me away with the time and attention he gave our children, even as he worked a tough job. Sean has always put our family first.

I couldn't ask for a better partner to raise our three children, even if Sean's not as great a dancer as he thinks he is and mocks me for using the word "discotheque."

On this Father's Day, the kids and I wanted to do something special for him, so we put together a card. It would mean so much to Sean if you signed it, too!

Click here to sign our Father's Day card for Sean!

Sean feels so fortunate to get to do what he does for you and the people of New York. There's nothing he'd rather do, and that's how I know it would mean the world to him if you took a moment to sign his card.

Mr. Podesta -

As we transition into mid-March, the American people are realizing more and more that Hillary Clinton will be our Democratic nominee (I had no doubt)! Sooner than we realize, Democrats across the nation will rally around Secretary Clinton to make her our next President of the United States. After many sleepless nights, I know that this campaign is too important for me not to have a more active role in, and I'm ready to join the fight.

I know that you are extremely busy, and as we move further into this campaign, your daily tasks will become even more time-consuming. In order for this campaign to be successful, I want to take any tedious pressure off of you. In early May (May 9th exactly), are you looking to take on an assistant? If you are not, that is completely fine - I just wanted to let you know that I am here for anything that you and rest of the campaign may need.

I will certainly apply for positions through the HFA website, as well, but I wanted to reach out directly about anything you may specifically be looking for. I hope this email is appropriate, and does not frown on my character. I realize that emailing the chairman may seem too candid, but I want to help out in anyway that you see fit.

For your record, I have attached a copy of my resume and two letters of recommendations from sitting Members of Congress. Thank you, again, for everything!

Best,
Ron

Trustees,

Thanks for the feedback on the proposed schedule for board weekends. Based on the input received, I reviewed the attached two schedules with the Executive Committee today and now send them to you so you can plan accordingly. As you'll see, we'll use the proposed schedule that I previously sent for the February and June meetings and modify it for the October weekend to accommodate the new trustee orientation.

Best,

Richard

Dear Law Center Community,

An electrical outage in McDonough Hall and EBW Library is scheduled to begin this Wednesday, July 29th at 11pm through this Thursday, July 30th at 7am. An additional outage is scheduled in Hotung and Sport & Fitness Center to begin this Friday, July 31st at 11pm through this Saturday, August 1st at 7am.

(The Law Center is required by code to perform electrical maintenance on all primary switch and panel boards every three years. The work involves a complete building power outage for eight consecutive hours and the coordination of up to 25 electricians and PEPCO technicians.)

How it may affect you:

During the outage, on –campus access to IT systems will be unavailable. This includes both wired and wireless network access as well as telephone service. All systems, including e-mail, web services, and voicemail will be accessible from off-campus.

Please turn off all computers, printers, and electric appliances before leaving the office on the dates of the scheduled outages to prevent damage to the equipment.

There will be no access to the building garages during the hours of the outage. If you are parked in the garage, please make sure to move your vehicle prior to 11pm, otherwise you will not be able to retrieve it until 7am on Saturday morning.

Thank you for your cooperation,

McCain Would Give America's 200 Largest Corporations $45 Billion In Tax Breaks»

If you're a CEO of one of America's largest corporations and have enjoyed the Presidency of George W. Bush, a contribution to the McCain campaign is looking like a pretty good investment.

A new report from the Center For American Progress Action Fund finds that a key piece of John McCain's tax plan — cutting the corporate tax rate from 35% to 25% — would cut taxes by almost $45 billion every year for America's 200 largest corporations as identified by Fortune Magazine.

Eight companies — Wal-Mart Stores Inc., Exxon Mobil Corp., ConocoPhillips Co., Bank ƒƒof America Corp., AT&T, Berkshire Hathaway Inc., JPMorgan Chase & Co., and Microsoft Corp. — would each receive over $1 billion a year.

The following table shows the tax savings to America's five largest firms. See a full list of all 200 companies and their savings under McCain http://thinkprogress.org/wonkroom/wp-content/uploads/2008/06/6-26-08-mccain_corp_tax.jpgHYPERLINK "http://thinkprogress.org/wonkroom/wp-content/uploads/2008/06/fortune_200.pdf"here :

These giveaways are just one part of McCain's doubling of the Bush tax cuts for corporations and the wealthy which would create the largest deficits in 25 years and drive the United States into the deepest deficits since World War II.

A recent analysis by the Public Campaign Action Fund found that John McCain's campaign has received $5.6 million from the PACs and executives of the Fortune 200.

Over the past eight years, under George W. Bush, American workers have seen their wages stagnate as corporate profits have skyrocketed . John McCain's misguided priorities show he's more of the same: the same $45 billion in tax cuts for America's 200 largest companies could be used to lift over 9 million Americans out of poverty.

Ken Auletta's latest piece on Murdoch in the New Yorker starts off with the aside that both Murdoch and Robert Thompson, managing editor of the WSJ, are raising their kids Catholic. Friggin' Murdoch baptized his kids in Jordan where John the Baptist baptized Jesus.

Many of the most powerful elements of the conservative movement are all Catholic (many converts) from the SC and think tanks to the media and social groups.

It's an amazing bastardization of the faith. They must be attracted to the systematic thought and severely backwards gender relations and must be totally unaware of Christian democracy.

I have a new one for people's awareness (and adding John too) -- will work this through the usual vetting and calendaring process, but wanted to mention while all the relevant parties are on an email.

Boris (Univision/Fusion) told me last night that Fusion is being added to the snapchat discover channel, and their new #1 request is for Hrc to do something with them for this. They have until mid January to gain traction or else snapchat will pull them. This is #1 for Univision too, not just fusion.

We should try to comply if at all possible. Could do something relatively quickly and easily from NYC on the 14th or 21st if we wind up using those days for shoots/interviews.

1. Your response was spectacular (ok, I expected that)
2. But as of 3pm, we're within striking distance of $1 MILLION(!!!) raised online for Brad. *SERIOUSLY.

$1,000,000.00 has A LOT of zeroes. And honestly, your support COULD NOT have come at better time.

Why? This week alone, Boehner and billionaire Republicans are pounding the Chicago airwaves with over $2.5 million against Brad.

HRC was quite good. Here's a summary:

This is the day the lord hath made...

Pastor sure looks like a pastor. But look at those socks. It shows he has a sense of humor. God has a sense of humor. How else would be put up with all of us.

Pastor had mentioned his mother in the introduction. Thanked him. Said she thought about her mother all the time.

Went on to talk about Mary McLeod Bethune and Eleanor Roosevelt.

"If you are a woman who gets into the public arena, you need to grow skin as thick as a rhinoceros."

"A woman is like a tea bag, you never know how strong she is until she gets into hot water."

She talked about our responsibility as humans to help others. Marian Wright Edelman and children.

Talked about progress we made, R's ripping it away, then the election of a bright, young dynamic man.

People are angry. Trying to get back to where they started.

ACA

Jobs

It's not enough to talk about what you're against...

Water, lead paint.

Small business growth. Fastest growing group of small business owners? African American women.

Clean energy jobs.

I don't just talk in general terms, I have specific plans.

Referenced new market tax credit and empowerment zones.

Education and early childhood Ed.

Talked about importing HIPPY from Israel. Could run it out of every church in the Cleveland area...

College affordability got a huge applause. Mentioned HBCUs. And the crowd went wild when she broad up student debt.

Fix our criminal justice system. More police. We need police, we know that. Good grief Cain taught us that.

She told the story again about visiting SC Strong. Made men realize they are better than the worst thing I've ever done, which got a great response.

I'm pasting Adrienne's event summary to the larger group below.
The crowd was nuts for her, and this was a particularly good effort by advance, it looked great.
Before the rally she did a tour of the training facility and learned about how carpentry is changing to be more energy efficient in the equipment they use and the methods used to build frames for houses. There will be some great images on the wire.

We're landing in Ohio now.

Executive summary: Hillary began by repeating some her remarks on Trump from this morning, which were well received. Reporters noticed Hillary take strong swipes at Sanders' misrepresentation of her record and his own. She contrasted well with Sanders on her ability to get things done, highlighting that she "voted for the auto bailout when it counted, and he didn't" and speaking at length about her support of export-import, which benefits Missouri. She got a lot of cheers when she closed by saying "let's go build the future that our country deserves, together."

Here at the canvass kickoff in St Louis.

She did the Trump hit in full.

Talked about breaking down barriers, said she was the only one with a plan to create jobs.

Came back to Trump, talked about divisiveness.

Anger is not a plan, etc

6 radio interviews and 2 coffee shops this morning. Interviews were all live or taped Detroit stations with the exception of one we did into Flint. Quick hits, mostly centered around getting out to vote. Flint came up in every one, and then education, and ACA. No flags. Every single interviewer was for her. Highlight of the morning was one of the hosts, whose stage name is "Foolish" asked a question, to which HRC replied "Well, Foolish, that is far from a foolish question." Awkward chuckles all around.

We did 2 OTRs, both at very hip coffee shops a couple of miles outside of downtown Detroit.

The first was Avalon, not too far from the Shinola Store. HRC walked in and chatted with the baristas a little, then went to one of two small sitting areas and shook a lot of hands. She had several interesting conversations, one with a woman who has cystic fibrosis, and her friend who also has it had met and chatted with HRC in NH. We'll get the audio and have the exchanges transcribed.

Second OTR was at Astro coffee, near the old Detroit train station, which was pretty striking. HRC shook a lot of hands and ordered yet more coffee. Lots of people seemed to have voted, and lots said they'd voted for her.

Back at the hotel now, likely until we leave for Cleveland this evening.

She said that she was proud to have gotten more votes than anyone in this race, and mentioned that she has more white support than anyone if you exclude Vermont. She got asked about Trump bring people into his coalition, she said she wanted everyone in hers. Asked about emails and played a little offense on the WaPo report this morning that made clear how many state officials, including career, we're sending what's now considered classified. Name-checked Powell and mentioned that he called this all absurd. Final question was about Libya, stemming from the NYT 2-parter last week. Handled it well.

HRC opened with love and kindness. Talked about Flint, ended by saying that we need to stand up for each other and our future.

Final church was Triumph Church. The sanctuary was a beautiful wooden dome with stained glass windows. She opened with barriers here, then praised Obama and the ACA. Talked about togetherness, and did Flint at the end.

We are now officially no longer 88 days from a press avail, but 0. Merica, Karni, Abby Philipps, and some locals asked her questions. Merica asked her about expectations today, she said were working hard, hope people turn out. Asked about Sanders' path, she declined to comment, said she's going to keep going.

Local asked about message for Minnesota voters today. Talked about breaking down barriers.

Abby Philipps asked her about Trump being the eventual nominee. She dodged. Said they all have deeply troubling views.

of the WaPo asked about Trump, she said things like this need to be repudiated. She would continue speak out against bigotry.

Annie Karni asked her another expectations question (I think), she again have a pretty stock answer. She tried to ask about asking for Bernie to get out of the race, she said that everyone has to make their own decisions.

Local asked her about Trump, she talked about speaking out against insults.

She met a Somali woman who wanted to tel her she was going caucus for her through her daughter who was translation. HRC told her she would be the president for everyone.

She met another Somali American on the city council who she was impressed by.

HRC, Dayton, and the Lieutenant Governor made it to the counter ordered coffee (HRC got something called the Big Bang).

A guy came over to her at the counter and told her that he had just received a letter back from her yesterday. He had written HRC about a health problem (I think with his dad). They had a really nice exchange about how useful it was for her to hear stories like his so she can figure out how to help.

Her final real interaction before leaving was with a Somali-American girl, probably 26 or 27, who said that Somali-American youth are being marginalized and experiencing prejudice, and given her comments about the African American community, how do we know she'd be any different now? She mentioned super predator specifically. HRC said she'd used the word one time, and to look at her record. The young woman said she knew what her record was and that it was supportive of the African American community, which is why so many have supported her campaign. She mentioned the Somali-American councilman that she'd just seen, and that she'd met with members of the community last time she was in Minneapolis. The girl responded by saying something to the effect of the councilman doesn't count. HRC told her that if she believes that than maybe she should run for office. At this point the Governor intervened and the conversation ended.

Left the coffee shop for Global Market, and indoor market with food and other stands that sell various things. We got mobbed in the lobby so barely made it to the proper market everywhere. Took some selfies and then out.

Taxiing now to head to Miami.

Executive summary: This was one of Hillary's best recent rallies. She looked incredibly comfortable on stage as she spoke about the differences between her and the Republican nominees, our country's economic success under her husband, voting rights, Supreme Court and more.

Reporters noticed Hillary speaking more freely about her husband, referring to him by his first name and to his time as president. Mentions of her time in Arkansas, investment in jobs and infrastructure and debt-free college got the most applause. She got a lot of nods when she said, "its not enough to create opportunities for my granddaughter, I want to create opportunities for everybody."

Churches were Greater Imani Church and Mississippi Boulevard Christian Church. Imani had about 2000 congregants there, 800 or so at Mississippi Blvd.

She gave a similar speech at each, sort of an abbreviated new stump, did togetherness, mothers of the movement, health care, love and kindness. First one was probably a little better organized, but crowd at each was fired up. Lots of applause and lots of individual cheers.

Left there and flew to Nashville, where we joined Tony Goldwyn and the Mayor Megan Barry for a coffee stop at Fido, near Vanderbilt. The place was packed, she ordered some coffee and took lots of photos, spoke to the owner and his son for awhile. On small thing to note: on the way in Tony asked her what she thought of Trump's David Duke comments this morning. She replied that it was "pathetic" under her breath, which has made a little news (in a good way).

The rally at Meharry Medical college was high-energy. Tony Goldwyn did LONG but solid intro. HRC visited an overflow room with about 400. 800 in the main room. She told the story again about the young, affluent white guy that emailed her after her Harlem speech and said he'd been arrested but through connections his parents made the charges go away. All people must be equal under the law.

City hall was packed, with several hundred more in overflow than in the event itself. HRC spoke at both, with Mayor Reed getting everyone fired up. Speech was shorter but pretty standard stump otherwise.

We left and went to the Statehouse which was electric. Who knew there were that many Democrats in Georgia. She addressed the Democratic Caucus and did a short version of her stump that was pretty crisp. She used a line about spending 10 months crafting policies, and while the press may have thought that was boring, she's very proud of it. People loved it. There were no press in the room.

We took many a selfie while wading through throngs of people, with more pouring over the balconies, and headed to Octane coffee shop for an OTR. Usher was going to join us but got stuck in traffic...

Dan Merica asked her if she was jealous that she didn't get Christie's endorsement, to which she responded with a prolonged smile (you could see the gears turning), and then said "Dan, I really like you. I really really like you." They are basically courting each other at this point.

She got one question from local CBS, general about why she's in Georgia. She gave a stock answer about being a good partner if she's lucky enough to win.

Forgiveness of debt for enterprise in AfAm communities. Guns, Ukraine, child asked what she would do to stop terrorist attacks in the US, she gave a great answer that ended with he telling the little girl to worry about school and her friends, and HRC would worry about making sure she's safe. Then he played Gwen Carr's comments lasts night, quoted some of her lines including the one about HRC seeking them out, and compared it to Kennedy going to see MLK when he was arrested in Alabama. HRC gave a strong answer about being humbled, being a mother and a grandmother.

Gitmo Q at the end, answer tracked with her statement yesterday.

SC Strong went well. She did some very brief opening remarks, had a couple of the round table participants share their stories, and then we shuffled the press out.

Dropped by the Longshoremen's, she thanked everyone and asked for their vote. Great reception, they were very grateful that she came to the hall.

On the way to the airport we called Rhonda Rawlings for her show.

Rhonda started with minimum wage. HRC stuck to her standard lines, mentioned equal pay, got a follow up on why $12 and defended it well.

College affordability. She said she think debt free public education is achieveable. Covered student debt as well.

Breaking Down Barriers forum with the mothers in Greenville...talked about how amazing it was, then asked about policing. HRC talked about their ability to turn grief into action.

Ended with Obama's legacy.

Alpha Kappa Alpha event went well. She did some of her remarks, some ad libbing. Two SC radio interviews today:

1) We did a repeat with Cynthia Hardy that ended up being a very brief conversation HRC joined in progress about health disparities in communities of color.

2) She did a slightly tougher but ultimately very strong interview with Judi Gatson of 103.1 KISS FM. She asked HRC about her recent comments on not being in this for herself, and said that some doubt that. The answer was very strong, and invoked a little reflection on sexism. She asked about youth, but the framing was interesting, which was that BdB and Eric Garner's mom endorse, but children of BdB and Eric Garner's sister do not. The other question most of note was Judi observing that she hears people in the community say that HRC embraces Obama only to pander to the AfAm population. Interesting that that broke through, (Stephanie if you talked to her I'd be curious to hear more about how often she's hearing that), HRC's answer was good, she said that Senator Sanders claiming that was offensive, that she nominated him at the convention, campaigned for him, worked for him for 4 years, and that it "affects" her "personally" to hear Sanders and his supporters say that stuff.

Finance event in Atherton was largely uneventful. She did take questions. She dinged Uber when talking about the Kalamazoo shooter, which thrilled many in the audience here in Silicon Valley, I'm sure. No encryption questions.

One more finance event and then we're off to LA to spend the night.

Good live interview with Univision local this morning. Bernie was supposed to be on right after us but bailed late last night. She did her pitch, talked about immigration, no fireworks.

Left there and dos two back of house visits, Caesars and Harrah's. Bernie was at Harrah's immediately before us, stayed 5 minutes and left. We spent about 25 shaking hands and telling people where to caucus.

Left there and went to 2 caucus sites, the second of which she's working the (long) line at as we speak.

The Bernie folks are definitely here, but our organizers tell us these are very strong locations for us.

We visited the home of Vicki Early, a retired California utility company employee who moved to Nevada to buy her first home, and installed solar panels on the roof, which she could afford with the Public Utility Commission offsets on her fixed income until they got rolled back. She and her boyfriend Tyrone showed HRC the panels in the back yard and told her story. HRC had the press come in closer to listen and then dos brief remarks of her own on the importance of this issue for people like Vicki. Pretty great stuff.

Next we went to Youthbuild, an organization with a Nevada chapter that builds houses for Habitat for Humanity. We walked through a big warehouse where HRC individually met about 15 workers. She was intrigued by how most of them found the place, which was through Craigslist, and probed them on what they were learning and what they wanted to do next. Most wanted to continue in the building trades. She spoke briefly, and invited the Youthbuild and Habitat folks to speak as well.

We've also squeezed in two SC radio interviews. Both went well, talked about the Clyburn's endorsement, support for President Obama, her plans on college affordability.

Headed to the town hall with high school students now.

Very engaging discussion, topics ranged from early childhood education to food deserts to Flint. HRC brought up Flint proactively, and a woman stood up and said that she had family there, appreciated HRC saying that, her work there, and that her assessment was exactly right. Audience was diverse across the board, lots of millennials and lots of young people who work for various NGOs and advocacy groups with a lot of very good questions and passionate comments. At the end HRC commented on her life's work, figuring out how to make difference in people's lives as opposed to promising them the moon, and making sure lives are better when you're done than when you started. Wasn't too hot but poignant and noticeable following 45 minutes of discussing the importance of

We're now going to divert course and make a pit stop at a woman's house who has been affected by the Nevada Public Utility Commissions retroactive rate changes on people selling solar back to the grid. Pool is with us.

Woke up in Milwaukee this morning and did a fundraiser at Harbor House. Very pretty setting just outside of downtown on a partially frozen bright blue Lake Michigan. She gave a pretty standard stump, no Qs, and we headed out.

South Carolina was quite something. Good crowd of about 450/500 at Denmark-Olar Elementary School (home of the Vikings). HRC stuck largely to her remarks and outlined her $125 billion plan to improve underserved communities, and took questions on just about everything: social security, health care multiple times, body cameras, Flint, homeless vets, Trump, student loans, who she's pick for VP, and a little girl who gave her a drawing that said on it: "I'm not bossy I have leadership skills." It was a very engaged, high-energy affair.

Following the town hall and a long ropeline, we did 2 TV stand ups and a print interview. Discussion in both revolved around race relations, the state of the race, and education, which HRC discussed at length in a dilapidated older locker room with paint people off the walls in the background.

Our print interviewer, Princess Williams, was really impressive. She won an award last year for best student journalist in a college under 5000 students from the South Carolina Press Association. She was nervous but did a great job, asked HRC about education, what we can't do beyond government programs to help level the playing field, attracting young voters, and what life is like off the campaign trail.

We're in the air now headed back north to St. Paul for the Humphrey-Mondale Dinner.

Two more things to add:

We did a radio interview with Greg and the morning buzz. Like the first local NH hit this morning, it was all about NH and allowed her to talk about how grateful she is to the people here.

Also just did a 10 minute satellite hit with Al Sharpton. They talked about heading to Nevada and her strategy there, he asked her how she would distinguish he civil rights record, then Flint, millennial women, voting rights, and a question about Cruz's comments on Flint and Katrina both being cities with crisis and two very liberal mayors. She didn't engage most of the answer and at the end said "that's not the world I live in, and not the world I'd govern as President."

We stayed and ordered some food, most of which was stolen from us and consumed in the limo as I understand it. We did manage some coffees in the staff van, which was game changing.

Then off to Dover. Another great showing by the organizing team, as well as by Carly Fiorina's husband, who greeted the Secretary enthusiastically. You'd never know his wife calls for HRC's imprisonment on a daily basis.

Just got back to Manchester.

HRC arrived to volunteers chanting "I believe that she will win!" and worked the crowd. She shook about 75 hands and took lots of photos, and then did an impromptu stand up with the morning show anchors. They asked her about how she's feeling and expectations, she just talked about how excited she was to be out talking to people and her love for New Hampshire.

We took a few more photos and talked to WMUR for a few minutes, which will air at noon.

Now we're in Nashua now headed to another location and on the phone live with Mike Pomp of WTSN radio. Good conversation, she's talking about her experiences up here, basically a perfect Election Day drive time interview.

More to come.

last.

Dan O'Neil, former Dodd and O'Malley supporter but '92 Clinton supporter joined them for omelettes. Following breakfast, some more selfie-taking ensued as did a conversation with a couple of vets. Restaurant felt overwhelmingly supportive.

We went back to the hotel and taped 6 TV interviews with local and Boston affiliates. Lots about the state of the race here and the weather. Most asked about Warren which she handled well, a couple of transcripts questions and a good exchange with FOX on sexism in politics.

From there we went to Manchester Community College. Crowd of about 1100, she did a few things differently, including calling Bernie out for accepting DSCC money that came in part from Wall Street.

We taped Rachel Maddow after the event. It opened with the staffing question and then covered the waterfront...Flint, trust, attacks, transcripts. We let it go so Rachel would spend more time on the positive which she did.

After Maddow we went to the Velcro factory. She went table to table in their cafeteria which looked like a Johnny Rockets, shaking hands, sometimes sitting down for brief conversations. Press pool got some good stuff.

We're now back at the Radisson waiting to depart for WMUR where we'll do a quick live hit on WMUR, she'll simply make a one minute pitch to voters direct to camera.

The crowd was extraordinarily supportive. Her remarks were brief (12/15) but strong, with powerful response.

Afterwards she took photos, she did a very quick local standup in the sanctuary (all about Flint), met with a group of local pastors and went into the stakeholders/electeds meeting with the mayor.

On the way to the airport we called the editor of the National Newspaper Association, quick 5 minute interview on the importance of Flint and their being many other Flints. Transcript to follow.

Descending back into NH now, going to do an OTR at the Puritan Backroom (!!).

http://www.desmoinesregister.com/story/opinion/columnists/caucus/2015/03/20/prevent-another-crash-reform-wall-street/25057735/

Prevent another crash, reform Wall Street

Seven years after the Wall Street meltdown, Americans are still experiencing the fallout.

Although job creation rates and GDP — along with bank bonuses and corporate profits — are on the upswing, these statistics mask the lingering hardship of millions of families that traces back to Wall Street's reckless behavior. One study found that the crash cost every American $120,000 .

We were forced to save our economy by bailing out big banks. Now, we have a responsibility to correct the mistakes of our more recent past to prevent another crash.

To do that, we must acknowledge that — while it addressed inherent flaws in the financial system — the 2010 Dodd-Frank Act did not go far enough.

The most serious structural reform we can make is reinstating the 1933 Glass-Steagall Act that kept commercial banks separate from investment banks. Under Glass-Steagall, our country did not see a major financial crisis for nearly 70 years. If that law hadn't been repealed in 1999, the crash would have been contained.

The largest banks should be broken up into more manageable institutions. Today, five banks control half of the financial industry's $15 trillion in assets. Even members of Congress, several Federal Reserve Board governors, and major players in the financial industry are recognizing that institutions that are too big to fail are too big to succeed.

Structural reforms aren't enough. We must bring fundamental change to the culture of Wall Street, beginning with real accountability. To this day, the Justice Department and financial regulators have done virtually nothing to bring criminal charges or hold leadership accountable. Legal deterrents are critical for improving the culture of Wall Street and showing that fraudulent behavior will be punished.

We can solve this problem in a few ways. The first is to replace the leadership at banks that are repeat offenders. CEOs should not remain in charge of institutions that they have failed to manage properly.

Second, we must appoint people to positions — attorney general and SEC chair for starters — who will prosecute those who commit or permit crimes. Thus far, settlements have been nothing more than CEOs using shareholder money to buy their way out of jail.

Third, we must end the days of "neither admit nor deny," and force law-breaking banks to publicly admit it. We have allowed big banks to avoid admitting guilt due to claims that it will cause them too much harm — it's time to end that game and let banks face the legal consequences and harm to their reputation.

Fourth, we must make banks bear the full weight of financial penalties. As unbelievable as it sounds, the worst actors on Wall Street have written off large portions of these penalties — as if they were donations to charity. We should not allow banks to deduct fines from their taxes.

Finally, we need a "three strikes and you're out" or a points-accrual policy — like the one drivers face — to revoke a bank's right to operate if they repeatedly break the law. This would increase transparency, reduce recidivism and put banks out of business if they repeatedly disregard the law.

Unfortunately, while many good people who work in finance and in Congress understand our vulnerability to another crash, further reform faces an uphill climb against powerful special interests.

Today, most Republicans in Congress are hell-bent on disassembling the Dodd-Frank Act. And too many Democrats have been complicit in the backslide toward less regulation. All while last year's Wall Street bonuses were double the total earnings of all full-time workers making minimum wage.

It's time to put the national interest before the interests of Wall Street.

Hi Lauren
I think these are great talking points. Nice job.

A small point, Iowa is a Right to Work state. Maybe something that could be added so the audience knows she's aware of that when she mentions Wisconsin. Iowa knows the negative impact of this legislation.

It is correct that AFSCME has endorsed her for each of her runs for public office. I do think it would be helpful if she specifically thanked them though for their support of her Presidential race in 2007. They were huge and they were there until the end.

Last, these remarks cover a lot of great ground around labor issues but something that would helpful to add is on her plan to win the Iowa caucus, the Democratic nomination and the general election. I think it would be helpful to take a bullet point or two and make that case a bit to this audience as well. Her organizations strength, the endorsements of Senators Harkin and Shaheen and Governor Vilsack and her work to earn more labor support.

Hope that helps. Happy to answer questions!
Nikki

Subject: JW FOIA | WJC Speeches

All -- DOS is soon releasing another round of documents and email traffic (not hers) in response to Judicial Watch's FOIA request on DOS's process for reviewing WJC's speaking engagements.

It's 116 pages with approx. 50 sponsor/subsponsor requests. No objections by DOS in this batch, but some lengthy internal discussions among DOS officials that I highlighted below.

There is one request where speaking fee would have been paid by Turkish govt -- WJC's office declined this. And one speaking engagement with fee from Canadian government, which he did do.

Let me know if you have any questions.

[Jen -- happy to give you more background on prior releases since it's your first go around]

Thx

1) UNIQFEST/Turkey: There are 20 pages of internal, heavily redacted email traffic among DOS officials on request for WJC to speak at UNIQFEST in 2009 -- a climate change conference sponsored by the Turkish government with Turkish officials as featured speakers. According to the traffic, WJC would receive compensation from "government and non-government sources."

-- WJC's office decided to decline the invitation. There is no final determination in the materials by the Department.
-- Some of email traffic has subject line "Clinton Foundation" and refers to this as request from "Clinton Foundation." I only flag as may be twisted to say DOS did not even understand what they were reviewing for, blurred lines between personal and BHCCF etc…

2) Canadian National Exhibition: Email traffic indicates WJC's compensation for this speaking engagement would come from the Canadian government via their program to promote tourism, "Industry Canada." There is heavily redacted email traffic between DOS officials, including our Embassy in Canada, with several emails from WJC's office asking for status update, at one point saying they only have "about more 30 minutes before we lose the offer."

--- Jim Thessin (Deputy Legal Advisor) responds: "I do not have a problem with this so long as President Clinton is not serving as a U.S. government at the time of his appearance and when he is paid an honorarium. If not an employee, he may accept reimbursements of expenses and an honorarium for his speech/talk, but he may not receive any gifts from the Canadian government."
--- HRC's financial disclosure form indicates that WJC received $175,000 from Canadian National Exhibition for this speech on 8/29/09.

3) CISCO: Request is submitted for WJC to speak at CISCO two months before HRC awards CISCO the State Department's Award for Corporate Excellence, holding a ceremony featuring the CISCO's CEO. According to HRC's financial disclosure form, WJC received $255,000 for this speech.

4) Other notable requests:

- Local foreign govt: Terife Island Council (local government of largest island in Canary Islands)

b. Private Equity Firms/Banks: ICE Canyon LLC, VISTA Equity, Harris Private Bank, TD Bank Financial, Whitton Investment Groups (London)
c. Foreign Based Organizations: Etisalat (UAE based telecomm co); Egyptian Junior Business Association; Friends of Cystic Fibrosis (Irish non-profit); Essex Regional Conservation Authority (Essex, Ontario); Wilbros Entertainment (Philippines, event to raise funds for Philippines charity); Miaor Entertainment Ltd (division of Grupo ABC based in Brazil); London Business Forum; Aditya Birla Management (Indian multinational conglomerate)
d. Universities: Southern Methodist, Tufts, American Jewish University

5) GWB: Two requests are for events with Deloitte and Radio City Music Hall that are a joint appearance between WJC and George W. Bush. WJC did the event with Deloitte, but not Radio City.

Subject:	Some bad news:

It's incredible, friend, but it's true.

We could be outspent in this race.

Even though we've built a grassroots movement that is undeniably bigger than Ken Cuccinelli's, my opponent is breaking out the 2012 Tea Party playbook. And it could work this time.

In the past two weeks, three right-wing Super PACs have announced six-figure ad buys to smear me. That's on top of the $6.8 million the RGA has already spent against us. And with new polls showing that this race is still neck-and-neck, our response to their attacks in the next few weeks is absolutely critical.

We need to raise $200,000 towards our Rapid Response Fund before the end of the month to keep up with these Tea Party Super PACs. Will you donate $5 right now and get us started?

One of the three Super PACs is funded by Joe Ricketts — you might remember he dropped at least $12 million of his own money to attack President Obama last year.

And you've certainly heard of Citizens United — the group who ushered in the Super PAC era in the first place.

But you probably haven't heard of the third group, called Fight For Tomorrow. This brand new group was created, it seems, with the sole intent of propping up Ken Cuccinelli and attacking us.

And these three groups are just from the last two weeks. Who knows which other groups of Tea Party donors will decide they want in on the action next week?

But while they may be able to outspend us, we still have momentum on our side. And if people like you keep supporting me like you have so far, we'll win this thing.

Donate $5 right now to help me keep pace and reach my September Rapid Response Fund Goal.

Cuccinelli's using the same playbook the Tea Party did last year, but I've got the same one Democrats used to great success in Virginia and across the country: the grassroots support of friends like you.

Thanks,
Terry

This work any better?

"We're all relieved that the Governor of South Carolina has finally agreed that the Confederate flag should be removed from the State House – something I and others have been saying for years. That flag is a symbol of our nation's racist past that has no place in our present or our future. America is better than that. And I'll say this to any state in the union where the Confederate flag still waves: It's time. Do the right thing. Take down that flag.

And this is just the start of what's needed. Our challenges are systemic so our solutions must be as well."

Jen and others should jump in here... an alternative like "symbols of the Confederacy" is much more sweeping, but we can easily upgrade to that if folks want. Argument for making this about the battle flag specifically is that it hits Mississippi, where the Speaker of the House just raised this issue as well (http://www.clarionledger.com/story/news/2015/06/22/petition-mississippi-confederate-flag/29113157/) and a number of other places, but doesn't get us into debating the extra star on the Arkansas flag or every single Robert E. Lee statue across the south.

Subject: Give Governor O'Malley a hometown send-off before Iowa

John,

Did you see the debate on Saturday night? Governor O'Malley spoke passionately about his principled leadership in Maryland and his plans for the future. He drew a clear contrast with his opponents in being the only candidate on that stage who has not wavered in his positions.

He needs your help now, as we prepare to make our final Iowa push. Can you contribute before the December 31st deadline? We have a number of events in Maryland and Northern Virginia in the New Year. Get your tickets now for the early bird prices -- they will go up after December 31st. See the list of events below:

Subject: RE: Bankruptcy follow up

Here are statements Mukulski and Murray made against the bill in 2005

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, today I rise to oppose S. 256, the Bankruptcy Reform Bill. This bill is unfair to the little guy—to families who are struggling to overcome medical bills, unemployment, or divorce and find themselves forced to declare bankruptcy. Under the guise of reform it makes it tougher on families who have done the right thing. That's not what we should be doing in the United States Senate. Our job is to make sure we are protecting middle-class Americans and small businesses who are the lifeblood of our economy, not hurting them. While some of the reforms of the bill are good steps it goes too far to favor credit card companies and corporations over working families. This bill creates such strict standards that many of our nation's most vulnerable families are treated unfairly when they are forced to file bankruptcy because of the loss of a job, the high cost of health care or a divorce. This bill does nothing to address the problems these individuals are having, the problems that have driven them to bankruptcy and it provides virtually no discretion for courts dealing with these bankruptcy claims. I have supported bankruptcy reform legislation in the past—but it was not this bill and it was not this process. This bill was rushed through Committee with the promise that amendments would be considered on the floor, that there would be debate and an opportunity to improve the bill. Yet, none of the amendments were truly considered, most were opposed by Republicans marching in lock step to defeat every amendment to the existing bill. In short, there was no real opportunity to improve the bill. What came to the floor leaves the floor virtually unchanged and truly unfair to many of our citizens who are forced to file bankruptcy because of unforeseen circumstances like job loss, divorce or medical costs. Half of all families filing for bankruptcy have faced illness or high medical costs. Medical costs, especially for seniors, are one of the fastest growing causes of bankruptcy. These are not folks who use their credit cards to buy fancy suits, designer wares or other luxury goods. They are paying for the basic necessities of their lives with their credit cards. They are putting their food, clothing and medical bills on the credit cards. Nearly 9 out of 10 people file bankruptcy because of health care problems, job loss or divorce. These individuals don't want to file bankruptcy—in fact, they have tried to avoid bankruptcy. That's why they pay those medical bills with credit cards when they simply can't afford any other way. Or they skip going to the doctor all together because they know have no means to pay. And what happens—they get sicker, incur greater costs for catastrophic care and that sends them spiraling further into debt and forcing many into bankruptcy. We ought to be doing something to help those individuals—not creating a law that will make matters worse. The Senate should be on the side of those Americans who are facing hard times and hard decisions. We should be addressing the lack of health care and working to ensure that we are creating good, high paying jobs. I am opposing this version of the Bankruptcy Reform Bill because it creates needless and unfair hoops for these individuals to jump through and the rigid means test puts those in real need of relief at a disadvantage. It imposes new burdens on families already overburdened by the debt they must shoulder. Certainly we all agree that those who can afford to should pay their creditors back—that they should be responsible for their debt. Those debtors who charge thousands of dollars on luxury goods, new cars and the like, only to then declare bankruptcy, should be held accountable. Many of us can remember a mother or father who taught us about debt, taught us the dangers of getting into debt and to be responsible for paying all our debts back. But we need to be fair in how we calculate who can pay. And we need to make sure that the provisions are not so rigid that they allow courts no discretion to take into account the circumstances that lead to the bankruptcy. The legislation that the Senate considers today is different from past versions that I have supported. There is obviously the removal of the Schumer amendment which held those who block access to abortion clinics accountable for the court judgments that they have incurred. But it also gives women, single parents, families and those living in poverty less opportunity to overcome their hardships and get a fresh start. This bill punishes people, assumes that all those filing for bankruptcy have purposefully created their debt problems, imposes a strict standard that does not take into account the circumstances surrounding the bankruptcy and the real means of individuals to pay their debt back. That's not fair, it's not right, and it makes life tougher on working families. I urge my colleagues to join me in standing up for women, children and working families by opposing this bill. [Congressional Record, 3/10/05]

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, today I voted against a bankruptcy bill that puts credit card companies and politics ahead of ordinary Americans. Rather than providing balanced reform, this bill punishes those who have fallen on hard times—particularly our military families and those who are struggling under the weight of soaring medical bills. I have heard from residents across Washington State that the cost of medical care is forcing them into bankruptcy. In fact, a report last summer by the Working for Health Coalition found that half of Washington State bankruptcies were due to rising health care costs. Most of these families are working and more than half have health insurance, but the growing cost of health care is so overwhelming it pushes them into bankruptcy. A national study last month found that 61 percent of bankruptcy filers did not seek the medical care they needed. These families deserve help, but instead this bill punishes them for circumstances beyond their control. This bill also fails to adequately protect our military families, particularly our Guard and Reserve members. These patriotic families have had to struggle with half their normal income during long—and often extended—deployments.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Many have seen their businesses collapse at home while they have served overseas. I have met with Washington State Guard and Reserve families and have seen how they are struggling to meet the financial burdens of long deployments. They deserve a lifeline, not more paperwork, legal fees, and threats from collection agencies. The Senate had an opportunity to protect our soldiers through Senator DURBIN's amendment, but that was rejected for a Republican amendment that falls far short. Our military families deserve better. If Republicans had been willing to make the bill less punitive toward ordinary Americans, they would have adopted a number of reasonable amendments in committee and on the Senate floor, but they refused. For example, Republicans blocked an amendment that would have protected workers and retirees if their company files for bankruptcy. Republicans also voted down amendments to ensure the elderly don't lose their homes and to discourage predatory lending. And they even failed to protect people who have had their identities stolen by criminals who then run up huge credit card bills. These are all examples of how Republicans are protecting corporate interests at the expense of vulnerable individuals. This bankruptcy bill also stacks the deck against women and children. For example, this bill will make it harder for single mothers to collect the pastdue child support they and their children are owed. I am also disappointed that the Senate rejected the Schumer amendment, which would have assured that those who commit violent crimes at reproductive-health facilities against women and doctors do not escape paying their debts and fines by declaring bankruptcy. Looking at the big picture, this bill fits a pattern of Republican proposals that turn the tide against average Americans. Last month, Republicans tipped the scales of justice against working families by limiting their ability to seek compensation for a death or injury caused by a company's negligence. On Monday, Republicans rejected a proposal to raise the minimum wage. Taken together, these actions will make life harder for working families and represent a dangerous trend that threatens average Americans. In the past, I have voted for bankruptcy reform legislation, but today families find themselves in a much different place financially because of the costs of healthcare and military service. Congress should not punish them for things beyond their control with this unbalanced, unfair bill. American families deserve reform, not retribution. [Congressional Record, 3/10/05]

Hi all -

Here is a full update on where we are:

(1) Mikulski, Murray and Boxer - Talked to all three of COSs. Mikulski and Murray COSs are reaching out to their bosses to ask them to do supportive statement and make clear that we all were working to make changes for women and children and voted to move the bill forward and work to continue to strengthen it. Boxer didn't vote because of a family situation, but unfortunately told the LA Times that she would have voted against it. So we shouldn't proactively put her out there, but if asked or called upon she will praise HRC for the work they did on the credit card amendment and make clear that she understands why all of the other women Democratic Senators voted for the bill.

(2) Women's Groups - We cannot put something out proactive here b/c the record just isn't good. But, if called, Judy and Marcia are also prepared to say that Hillary fought really hard for changes, was with the other women Senators, and committed to keep working with them to strengthen the bill. Here are the statements that they put out in 2001 that don't help us:

https://web.archive.org/web/20010520143637/http://nwlc.org/details.cfm?id=640&section=newsroom

https://web.archive.org/web/20010711180022/http://www.nwlc.org/details.cfm?id=637&section=newsroom

So next steps - waiting for final sign off from Mikulski and Murray. Also, Tony, their team wants any statements they made in 2005 too and wants to confirm they voted against it when it came back.

Jen/Kristina - Do you need to get this out tonight or is tomorrow morning ok? Both COS are working to get them on record today, but both Senators are in home districts doing events.

Thanks,
Ann

Here is Murray's floor statement. Mulkulski does not appear to have made one

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I rise to express my support for the bankruptcy reform legislation. This legislation offers an imperfect but fairly balanced approach to reforming the bankruptcy system. Through the amendment process we have improved the bill, but it could be more fair to all sectors of our society. I am disappointed some good amendments that would have improved the legislation were rejected. The bankruptcy reform legislation that passed the House a couple of weeks ago is less friendly to individuals in adverse circumstances not of their own doing. If this bankruptcy reform bill is weakened in conference, I will have a hard time supporting it. I will likely oppose a conference agreement that looks at all like the House bill. In recent years, consumer bankruptcy filings have dramatically increased. We debated bankruptcy reform in the last two Congresses. Those discussions showed our desire to elevate personal responsibility in consumer financial transactions; to prevent bankruptcy filings from being used by consumers as a financial planning tool; and, to recapture the stigma associated with a bankruptcy filing. It is clear the system is broke, and bankruptcy reform is needed. I voted for bankruptcy reform in both the 105th and 106th Congresses, and I plan to vote for this bill. Despite these votes, I have reservations about how the unintended consequences of this bill will affect the less fortunate. The bill will have an enormous impact on women and child support. The largest growing group of filers are women, usually single mothers. The bill's overall philosophy of pushing debtors from chapter 7 to chapter 13 will have an unintended effect on women. They usually have fewer means and are more susceptible to crafty creditors seeking to intimidate and reaffirm their debts. They need the protection of chapter 7, but could be pushed into chapter 13. Women will also be disadvantaged by provisions in this bill that fail to prioritize domestic obligations. Under the provisions of this bill, women will find themselves competing with powerful commercial creditors for necessary resources, such as past-due child support, from spouses who are in bankruptcy. It is unfair to place the critical needs of families and single mothers trying to survive behind those of welloff commercial creditors. Another problem with this bill is the new filing requirements are very complex, which could result in unintended discrimination against lower-income individuals and families. Many low-income families don't have the means to combat most creditors. Because debtors must prove they are filing for legitimate reasons, those without the means to combat powerful commercial interests will be placed at an unfair disadvantage. I was also disappointed that the U.S. Senate failed to adopt some very good amendments that would have significantly improved the bill. Senator KOHL offered an amendment that would have limited the practice of wealthy debtors shielding themselves from creditors in bankruptcy behind State homestead exemption laws that allow them to shelter large amounts of money in a new home. His amendment would have placed a national cap on this exemption, and limited the abusive practice of sheltering large amounts of money in large homes. I supported this needed amendment, but it was rejected on the floor of the Senate. Several amendments were also offered that would have restricted the marketing to and use of credit cards by young people. Credit card companies are aggressively marketing to young people, and many young people are getting into massive debt. Companies should only be allowed to offer credit cards to those who can pay for them. Finally, I am disappointed that amendments were rejected that would have limited predatory lending practices. Some of these predatory loans can have interest rates over 100%. I was pleased to see that the bill included language to end the practice of using the bankruptcy code to escape civil punishment for violence, intimidation or threats against individuals using family planning services. This provision was added in the Judiciary Committee and greatly improves the bill. It ensures that those who violate the law cannot escape justice through the bankruptcy laws. This critical provision of this bill that must not be stripped or drastically changed in conference. Overall, this is a decent bill that will improve on the current abuses of the bankruptcy system. While I have concerns over many of this bill's provisions, I hope they can be dealt with in conference or in future legislation. This bill should be strengthened in conference, not weakened as has happened to other versions of bankruptcy legislation. I will closely examine a conference agreement with this in mind before voting to send this legislation to the President. [Congressional Record, 3/15/01]

ELIZABETH WARREN: She voted in favor of it.

BILL MOYERS: Why?

ELIZABETH WARREN: As Senator Clinton, the pressures are very different. It's a well-financed industry. You know a lot of people don't realize that the industry that gave the most money to Washington over the past few years was not the oil industry, was not pharmaceuticals. It was consumer credit products. Those are the people. The credit card companies have been giving money, and they have influence.

BILL MOYERS: And Mrs. Clinton was one of them as senator.

ELIZABETH WARREN: She has taken money from the groups, and more to the point, she worries about them as a constituency.

BILL MOYERS: But what does this mean though to these people, these millions of people out there whom the politicians cavort in front of as favoring the middle class, and then are beholden to the powerful interests that undermine the middle class? What does this say about politics today?

ELIZABETH WARREN: You know this is the scary part about democracy today. It's... We're talking again about the impact of money. The credit industry on this bankruptcy bill has spent tens of millions of dollars lobbying, and as their profits grow, they just throw more into lobbying for how they can get laws that will make it easier and easier and easier to drain money out of the pockets of middle class families.

SURCHARGE ON MILLIONAIRES

Tell me about YOUR new tax proposal.

As you know Chris, right now, the super-wealthy and big corporations use every trick in the book to game the system and avoid paying billions of dollars in taxes. It's not right.

So today, I proposed adding a new "fair share surcharge" on multi-millionaires and closing loopholes to make it harder to game the system. (I'm also pushing for the Buffett Rule, which sets a minimum rate for those at the top, and other reforms like closing the carried interest loophole that allows some hedge fund managers to pay a lower rate than teachers or a nurses.)

I'm proposing every idea I can to finally make those at the top actually pay their fair share.

That's going to be a big difference in this campaign. When you look at what the Republican candidates are proposing – it's unbelievable. Trillions of dollars in new tax breaks to those at the top. Trickle down economics all over again.

On the Democratic side, I am the only candidate who has committed to raising middle class incomes, not middle class taxes.

How is this different from what other Democrats are proposing. They tax the rich too, right?

Well, I am the only candidate who has proposed a surcharge on multimillionaires and the only one committed to NOT taxing the middle class.

Senator Sanders, Governor O'Malley, and I share a lot of the same values and goals. But we do have differences.

I'm a progressive who likes to get things done. I've laid out how I'm going to pay for everything I'm proposing.

I'm concerned that Senator Sanders has taken a different approach. His agenda would add 18 to 20 trillion dollars in new federal spending, but he hasn't explained how he'd pay for it. That's a big risk, because it's hard to make the arithmetic add up any other way than a big tax increase on middle class families. I don't think that's the right choice .

Should we add the 1.62 a week line Podesta suggested?

Small thing but, I might say "he hasn't been able to show how he's gonna pay for it" rather than explained because didn't they put out a whole chart showing how they pay?

Otherwise I'm good.

Subject: Tax hit for Chris Hayes

HRC is going to call into Chris Hayes' show this afternoon to do her tax hit. How does this look to you guys?

Right now, the super-wealthy and big corporations are using every trick in the book to game the system and avoid paying billions in taxes. It's wrong, and it's bad for our economy. We can't have one tax system for those at the top and another one for everyone else.

So today, I proposed adding a new "fair share surcharge" on multi-millionaires and closing loopholes to make it harder to game the system. I'm also pushing for the Buffett Rule, which sets a minimum rate for those at the top, and other reforms like closing the carried interest loophole that allows some hedge fund managers to pay a lower rate than a teacher or a nurse.

When it comes to taxes, there's a clear choice in this election. Republicans candidates are promising huge new giveaways to the wealthiest Americans. And on the Democratic side, I am the only candidate pledging to raise middle class incomes, not middle class taxes.

You know, Senator Sanders, Governor O'Malley, and I share a lot of the same values and goals. We both want to make the economy work for everyone, not just those at the top. And the differences between us pale compared to what we see on the other side. But we do have differences.

I'm a progressive who likes to get things done. I measure every policy by whether it's going to actually make life better for working families. And I've laid out how I'm going to pay for everything I'm proposing by making the wealthy pay their fair share.

Senator Sanders has a different approach. His agenda would add 18 to 20 trillion dollars in new federal spending, but he hasn't explained how he'd pay for it. That's a big risk, because it's hard to make the arithmetic add up any other way than a big tax increase on middle class families. I don't think that's the right choice when incomes for most people have barely budged in years.

I like and respect Senator Sanders quite a lot, but I'm concerned that some of his ideas run the risk of hurting rather than helping. So I look forward to debating these differences in the campaign.

Please find below an op-ed that I wrote for the Washington Post on the current state of the economy.

http://www.washingtonpost.com/opinions/unemployment-is-down-and-we-still-have-work-to-do/2014/07/04/7172bee6-0383-11e4-b8ff-89afd3fad6bd_story.html?hpid=z3

Unemployment is down, and we still have work to do
By Jason Furman, Council of Economic Advisers Chairman
July 4, 2014

On Thursday we learned that the U.S. economy added 288,000 jobs in June, concluding the largest first-half-year for job growth since the late 1990s. Meanwhile, the unemployment rate has fallen by nearly 4 percentage points from its peak of 10 percent in October 2009, with the pace of decline doubling in the past year to the fastest drop in nearly three decades.

Even with this good news, it is essential to dig into the numbers to understand what they mean both for families still struggling to make ends meet and for the work we still need to do to create more jobs at higher wages. We have further to go — especially given a long-term unemployment rate that is still too high and wages that have been stagnant for decades — but our challenges should not distract us from understanding the progress we have made.

Skeptics point to the higher unemployment indicated by a broader gauge of unemployment and underemployment that includes people involuntarily working part time and those who have not looked for a job recently but who still want to work. But this criticism ignores that this measure is always higher than the official unemployment rate and that it has also come down steadily, falling by more than 5 percentage points from its peak in early 2010.

Another claim is that the only reason unemployment has fallen is because people are dropping out of the workforce, what economists call a decline in the participation rate. In fact, since October the participation rate has been stable, so the 1.1-percentage-point decline in unemployment since then stems entirely from more people finding jobs.

It is true that the participation rate has fallen over the course of the recession and recovery. But it is important to put that fact in context. According to a range of studies, including our own analysis at the Council of Economic Advisers, about half of the decline is due to the beginning of a retirement boom as the first baby boomers turned 62 and became eligible for Social Security benefits in 2008. This fully anticipated economic event will continue to put downward pressure on the participation rate for decades.

The retirement boom is layered on top of other trends unrelated to aging, such as the decline in participation by men between ages 25 and 54 since the 1950s and the decline by women in those same prime working years since the late 1990s. In fact, a 2006 study by economists at the Federal Reserve that considered these trends projected that the labor force participation rate would fall to 62.9 percent this year, almost exactly its current level.

Of course, in addition to these trends, whenever the unemployment rate is elevated, the participation rate will be lower, as people seek further schooling, delay reentering the workforce after leaving for reasons such as caring for a newborn, or get discouraged and stop looking for work. These effects have likely been exacerbated by the unique challenges associated with the worst recession since the Great Depression, but they have diminished as the labor market healed, and further healing will continue to push the participation rate up, roughly offsetting the continued decline due to the population aging.

Correctly diagnosing the challenges we face points us to what we can do to spur more job creation, raise wages and bring more people into the labor market.

First, Congress should take steps to invest in infrastructure, extend unemployment insurance benefits and reauthorize the Export-Import Bank . In the absence of action from Congress, President Obama will press forward by using his executive authority to expand credit in mortgage markets, speed the permitting of infrastructure projects, launch new hubs of manufacturing innovation and attract foreign investment.

While a strong overall recovery is the most powerful solution to long-term unemployment, we should not overlook some of the unique challenges the long-term unemployed can face. That is why this year the president required the federal government to improve its hiring practices, announced new grants to expand some of the most promising public-private efforts to connect the long-term jobless with work, and rallied some of the nation's largest employers to commit to best practices for hiring the long-term unemployed.

Second, a stronger economy will help raise wages, and, conversely, higher wages will help strengthen the economy. That is why it is essential to raise the minimum wage. While Congress has waited to act, many states and businesses are moving ahead. At the same time, investments in everything from preschool to college will raise longer-term wage growth.

Third, although the aging of the population will continue to slow labor-force growth, a range of measures could help offset this trend. For example, immigration reform could expand the working-age population and raise the labor force participation rate.

In addition, with women increasingly among our most skilled workers, boosting their participation is essential for strengthening growth. The president is working with employers and all levels of government to move forward on paid leave, greater workplace flexibility and other policies that can increase participation and productivity for both men and women. In line with that effort, he is pursuing legislative and executive actions to promote equal pay.

Finally, the unemployment rates for some groups, such as young men of color, have been a long-standing challenge that was compounded by the recession. That is why we should expand the Earned Income Tax Credit for workers without children and noncustodial parents and why the president has launched an initiative called My Brother's Keeper designed to help young men of color succeed academically, at work and in their communities.

In June, the United States enjoyed its 52nd consecutive month of private-sector job growth, the longest such streak in U.S. history. That serves as evidence that our current policies have helped sustain job growth — but it also stands as a challenge to do more.

Hey John,

Finally, here are the numbers. Terribly sorry for the delay. There is some confusion as to OA and why that is now considered part of WHO rather than an agency within EOP, as historically was the case. But this matches what was printed in the Capital Source, which is the same publication we reported to on staff numbers by agency when we were there in the '90s. Let me know if you have any questions.

ORGANIZING for ACTION

John --

You've been on the front lines, fighting to protect our environment -- thanks for standing with President Obama.

Right now, we have a real chance to make progress in the effort to combat climate change, but we're up against some pretty powerful special interests.

It's time for you to step up again and join the team fighting back.

Over the weekend, the Senate voted on a series of amendments to the budget. With narrow margins of victory, they rejected an effort to roll back protections from mercury and other forms of toxic air pollution, and blocked an attempt to stop the EPA from limiting the carbon pollution that causes climate change.

That's good news -- but those slim margins of victory show we have our work cut out for us if we're going to make progress on combating climate change.

In the next few months, Organizing for Action is going to be taking some bold steps forward to fight climate change. We'll be doing everything we can with the grassroots network and resources at our disposal to keep the pressure on legislators to do the right thing for the environment.

But we need you with us. Add your name today and say you're in to combat climate change:

http://my.barackobama.com/Fight-for-the-Environment

Thanks. I'm glad to have you on our side.

PPO Delegation Request: SINGAPORE Aug 7-10
Conflicts: Aspen (but Valerie asked still that we let you know of the request)

Delegation Purpose: Honor Singapore's 50th National Day. Singapore is one of our closest partners in Asia across a wide range of issues, and often our most candid advisor in the region. Singapore was part of the P4 that later became the Trans-Pacific Partnership and is the only Southeast Asian nation to join our counter-ISIL coalition and to contribute military assets and personnel.

Others Confirmed to go: Nobody else is confirmed at this point. Singapore would like us to send a small delegation, so it would likely be the Head of Delegation and the U.S. Ambassador to Singapore, Kirk Wagar.

Why you? "PPO was hoping that Podesta could do it because he's a high ranking former official who we think would be well received by Singapore. We sent former President Clinton and Tom Donilon recently for the funeral of the former Prime Minister of Singapore. The Singapore government is adamant we send a high ranking head of delegation."

Do you want to rearrange things to go, or shall we decline citing existing commitments?

Hillary Clinton Statement on the Endorsement of the Service Employees International Union

Hillary Clinton released the following statement after the Service Employees International Union (SEIU), which has 2 million members, endorsed her campaign for President.

"As a lifelong fighter for workers and families, I am deeply honored to have earned the endorsement of the Service Employees International Union and their 2 million members.

"SEIU has led the fight to raise incomes for hardworking Americans, including the fight for a $15 minimum wage in cities across the country. To defend the Affordable Care Act against Republican attacks and make sure more Americans have quality health insurance. To finally reform our broken immigration system and keep families together.

"And every step of the way, SEIU has been fighting for workers. For higher pay and better treatment for child care workers and home health aides. For safety, justice, and ladders of opportunity in communities of color.

"As President, I will be proud to stand with SEIU and fight alongside them—to defend workers' right to organize and unions' right to bargain collectively, to raise incomes for working people and the middle class, and to ensure that hardworking Americans can retire with dignity and security."

Subject:	Observations from the road

John and Maya

Nice job two nights in a row by HRC. Congrats on Iowa as well. A win is a win. They said high turnout would hurt us and we won nonetheless.

I was in NH on Sunday and Nevada on Monday and Tuesday for HRC and thought I would give you some observations from the field.

1. I was super impressed with the field staff that I met in both places. Really impressive group everywhere.

2. I dont think I can add more on New Hampshire bc you are there and probably dont need someone else from the peanut gallery. I think people will be surprised at how she is able to close the gap. I like the "vote with your head and your heart" line, and I like the comeback on the establishment stuff. I also liked how she let her guard down a bit last night in the town hall format. She humanized herself.

3. I wish she would talk about the issues she cares about through the prism of more human stories. Logos, ethos, pathos. She has met so many people with so many gut wrenching stories of grit and determination, struggle followed by success. I wish there were more pathos, or more real stories behind her really sound policy proposals. Whenever I talk about ACA, I talk about through the prism of real people for whom the ACA saved their lives. The stories are incredible. In my HRC advocacy, I now say how these people dont have the time to wait for Senator Sanders to complete his quest for the perfect health care system, or the perfect immigration reform bill; it gets alot of good nods, especially when I talk about Kennedy McCain immigration and how Bernie opposed this, and immigrants are still suffering the consequences of inaction.

4. I spent two days in Nevada and I am a huge huge fan of Emmy, the state director. She is whip smart, passionate, organized, and knows Nevada inside and out. I have been with her twice now. She is a huge asset, as is Michelle, one of her top aides. Jorge is a top flight comms guy who knows Nevada well from Harry Reid days. Best field organizer I have met so far is a young man named Henry who is about an hour from Las Vegas. I spoke in this remote town at 10 am on Tuesday to HRC volunteers, and he had 50 people there-- incredibly diverse! Great team.

5. I think Nevada is the firewall on a number of levels, and the most important thing I want to communicate in this email is my strong belief that HRC should travel to Nevada asap after New Hampshire. I think she should be in Nevada no later than Thursday or Friday of next week.

6. Nevada is an opportunity to fight back on so many levels. First, the current storyline is that she does not connect well with young voters. Given that Nevada is far more demographically representative of America, I am confident that HRC can do well with all African Americans, Latinos, and Asian Americans (dont forget the sizeable population of Asian Americans in Nevada, including Filipinos.). Emmy and the team have a good plan to attract all minority voters. When we do well there, then the narrative changes from Bernie kicks ass among young voters to Bernie does well only among young white liberals-- that is a different story and a perfect lead in to South Carolina, where once again, we can work to attract young voters of color. So I think Nevada is a real opportunity , and I would strongly urge HRC to get out there within a couple days of NH.

7. Nevada has a greater unity density than New Hampshire or Iowa, and this also presents an opportunity. I spent alot of time with union folks in Nevada. Of those who have endorsed, I think there are varying levels of enthusiasm. I spent alot of time giving passionate pep talk about how Nevada is labor's biggest and best opportunity thus far to send a strong message to the country that organized labor remains strong and relevant. They could use additional stroking. Teachers are fine. Trades have some great folks (Todd Koch for instance) and some seemingly more tepid folks. President Clinton I am told is coming out there very soon and I hope he can speak with labor and close the deal.

8. I went and met with Jim Murren at MGM. A great guy as you know. The caucus system is really tough on shift workers, and he is a huge ally. We can reach out to him often enough to say thanks. I am glad I saw him.

9. The major Latino publication in Las Vegas will be endorsing next week. Jorge has major street cred with them. We had a good meeting. They adore HRC and will endorse with enthusiasm.

10. The caucus system out there is so screwy, and the challenges for shift workers sufficiently significant, that I do worry about turnout. This is why I hope HRC can get there asap.

Anyway, wanted to give you my thoughts. Let me know how I can be of further assistance. I believe I am heading to Milwaukee next Thursday to help with debate spin.

DEMOCRATS FIGHTING FOR REFORM

The Koch Brothers are spending $1 billion to buy the 2016 elections and end Social Security as we know it.

We can't let Republicans cave to the Kochs' demands.

When the Koch Brothers spend millions to elect Republicans, they have one special request:

"We favor the repeal of the fraudulent, virtually bankrupt, and increasingly oppressive Social Security system. Pending that repeal, participation in Social Security should be made voluntary."

That's pulled directly from David Koch's platform back when he ran for Vice President. Little has changed 35 years later.

Thanks to Citizens United, the Koch Brothers are going to spend $1 billion in 2016 to try and abolish Social Security for good.

Don't let them undermine Social Security without a fight.

youngest children and their parents. When I had Chelsea, a crib was just a crib. But today, as I've learned since my granddaughter was born, so much more care and expertise goes into everything for our babies. So thank you for being pioneers in an area that's so important to every new family.

I wanted to come here on my first day in New Hampshire because small businesses like Whitney Brothers are the backbone of this state's economy and a key to jumpstarting growth and innovation across our country. [Small businesses employ more than half of all of New Hampshire's private sector workers – and they create two out of every three new jobs in the state.]

When I was growing up, my father ran a small business in Chicago – and I mean very small. He printed fabric for draperies and then he went out and sold them. Sometimes he could hire a few day laborers to help, sometimes my mom and my brothers and I pitched in. But mostly he was doing everything himself. He was a real waste-not want-not, pay-as-you-go, no complaining kind of guy. So I learned early on just how tough it is to make a business like this work.

I'm sure you all have your own stories and experiences about this. When I was in Iowa last week, a young man told me about what it was like trying to buy the bowling alley where he had worked as a teenager.

He had experience, talent, a college degree, and a plan to build a great business. But he also had a lot of student debt. Not because he was irresponsible and living beyond his means. Because he did was he was supposed to do. He got an education. He invested in his own future. But all the banks saw was debt. So it was a real struggle.

And that's the opposite of what we want to see in this country – which is more young people being able to start businesses, create jobs, and live their dreams.

Here in New Hampshire and across our country, Americans have come back from tough economic times. Our economy and our country are in much better shape because families did whatever it took to make it work.

Unemployment is down, and in most places homes are worth something real again. Americans are starting to think about the future again. Going back to school. Changing jobs. Starting a business. Doing the right things to get ahead.

But as that young man in Iowa experienced, all the breaks still seem to go to those already at the top. There's something wrong when it's so easy for big corporations to get a tax break but so hard for small businesses to get a loan.

America ranks 46th in the world in how hard it is to start a new business. We should be number one. It takes longer to start a business in the United State than in France.

Now, New Hampshire is one of the best places in the country to start a business. You've got fewer onerous regulations that defy commonsense, like excessive occupational licensing that keeps young people from entering new fields. And your terrific governor, Maggie Hassan, created a program to help people who lost their jobs in the recession get back on their feet and start new businesses. That's an idea we should be looking at expanding across the country.

So I want to hear directly from all of you about your own experiences and your own dreams -- about the obstacles and the successes that you've encountered and what we can do to help more small businesses thrive.

I'm running for President because you and Americans everywhere need a champion. And I want to be that champion. So you can do more than just get by -- you can get ahead and stay ahead. And starting a small business seems less like a gamble and more like an opportunity.

I'm taking on four big fights:

First, we need to build an economy for tomorrow, instead of yesterday, where being middle class means something again. And that starts right here with small businesses like Whitney Brothers, creating good jobs and helping people get ahead.

Second, we need to strengthen our families and communities, because when families are strong, America is strong.

Third, it's time to fix our broken political system. I want to get things done, so I'll work with anyone who has a good idea. But I'll also take on the powerful forces trying to take us backwards. We need to get rid of all the unaccountable money, even if it takes a constitutional amendment.

Fourth, I'll protect our country from the threats that we see, and the ones that are on the horizon.

All four of these fights will put us up against some pretty powerful opposition. But I've spent my whole life fighting for children, for families, standing up for America. And I think people know... I don't quit.

For me, this really is about doing everything I can to make sure that every child -- not just my grandchild, but every child -- has a chance to live up to his or her God-given potential. That's what I was raised to believe by my church and my family, and that's what I'll be fighting for in this campaign.

I'm going to work my heart out to earn every vote -- starting with yours.

Thank you for helping me start this campaign here in New Hampshire. Now, I'm eager to hear from you how these challenges are impacting your lives and your businesses, to share some of my ideas, to ask you some questions, and to answer some of yours.

Subject:	Celebrating Amy Garrison

Dear Friends,

With mixed emotions, I write to share that our longtime Director of Student Life, Amy Garrison, will be leaving the Law Center on August 28. Amy, her husband Brian and their two lovely children will be returning to their home state of Alabama, where Brian has taken a new job. I am delighted for Amy and her family as they embark on this exciting new journey. But we in ODOS and all the students will miss her! For the last eight years Amy has played a significant, positive role in the lives of literally thousands of students. She has shepherded them through forming student organizations, including nearly 30 new ones during her tenure as Director, and she has provided thoughtful and creative guidance as they have planned the myriad panels, symposia, social events and other programs that have enriched this community. Amy deftly has guided our Student Bar Association, whose accomplishments and collaborative approach other law schools regularly cite as a model of shared governance. She has developed training programs for our student organization executive boards that will help shape the lawyer-leaders of tomorrow. And under Amy's co-directorship, our Peer Advisor mentoring program for first years is thriving and growing.

For the last five years, Amy also has done a magnificent job overseeing our commencement exercises. For those who have worked or attended commencement, you can imagine what a daunting task it is to plan and execute the event, with a main ceremony for 5,000 guests, eight different diploma distribution ceremonies, five receptions happening simultaneously, and a staff of more than 60 to manage. Amy has handled the many challenges with care, grace, and her usual unflappable cheer, making many friends and earning admirers across the Law Center and at Main Campus along the way.

I hope you will join me and the ODOS team this Friday, August 21 at 3:30 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge in McDonough 520 to wish Amy and her family well. Light refreshments will be served.

Best wishes,

Mitch

Hi John, hi Jen -

Hope all is well and you enjoyed you trip to AR this weekend. Stop by Bentonville next time ;-)

Wanted to let you know that Chuka Umunna - Labour MP and UK shadow secretary for commerce - is in NYC on Thursday.

If you are in town, he'd love to come by and see you, and share his insights on why Labour did so badly in May, and what HRC campaign might take away from that.

If you're interested and available, let me know, and I'll connect you.

Miss you guys!

Matt

All,

Please find attached the presentation for our briefing.

The following information about which attacks were in which split will also be useful to have at your ready. We will explain further on the call.

Andrew

The 12 attacks on McCain were split into two groups: the "E" Split and "F" Split. Each respondent heard only one of these batteries of attacks on McCain.

"E" Split:

- Iraq Priorities
- Energy and Big Oil
- Does Not Understand the Economy
- Outsourcing and Trade
- Lobbyists
- 3rd Bush Term

"F" Split:

- Endless War
- Healthcare
- Out of Touch – Wealth
- Economic Fundamentals
- Temperament

Secretary, very nice to reconnect with you. I recognize this is last minute, but we were wondering if you would be available to travel to NV this Sunday to appear at events with President Clinton. Happy to discuss further in the morning, but we would love to have you.

Pope Francis Parks make us feel at home, bring us together, and are needed where the disposable of society live

Pope Francis, in his encyclical on caring for our common home, writes that human beings enjoy a right to life, happiness, and dignity. For example, everyone should have access to parks and green space, which make us feel at home and bring people together. But parks and green space too often are located only in "safer" areas, not in the segregated neighborhoods of the poor and underprivileged. The people most impacted must be included in shaping the solutions. Residential segregation in California and the U.S. is associated with lack of parks and green space, environmental degradation, and adverse health effects. President Barack Obama and the US National Park Service agree that park access is a social justice issue.

Pope Francis writes:

> Many cities are huge, inefficient structures, excessively wasteful of energy and water. Neighborhoods, even those recently built, are congested, chaotic and lacking in sufficient green space. We were not meant to be inundated by cement, asphalt, glass and metal, and deprived of physical contact with nature.
> In some places, rural and urban alike, the privatization of certain spaces has restricted people's access to places of particular beauty. In others, "ecological" neighborhoods have been created which are closed to outsiders in order to ensure an artificial tranquility. Frequently, we find beautiful and carefully manicured green spaces in so-called "safer" areas of cities, but not in the more hidden areas where the disposable of society live.
> The extreme poverty experienced in areas lacking harmony, open spaces or potential for integration, can lead to incidents of brutality and to exploitation Here too, we see how important it is that urban planning always take into consideration the views of those who will live in these areas.
> There is . . . a need to protect those common areas, visual landmarks and urban landscapes which increase our sense of belonging, of rootedness, of "feeling at home" within a city which includes us and brings us together. It is important that the different parts of a city be well integrated and that those who live there have a sense of the whole, rather than being confined to one neighborhood and failing to see the larger city as space which they share with others. For this same reason, in both urban and rural settings, it is helpful to set aside some places which can be preserved and protected from constant changes brought by human intervention.
> Anyone who grew up in the hills, or sat by the spring to drink as a child, or played outdoors in the neighborhood park, feels one is being called to recover one's true self when one goes back to those places.

Encyclical Letter Laudato Si' of the Holy Father Francis on Care for our Common Home, ¶¶ 44-45, 84, 149-51.

President Barack Obama recognized that park access is a social justice issue when he created the San Gabriel Mountains National Monument:

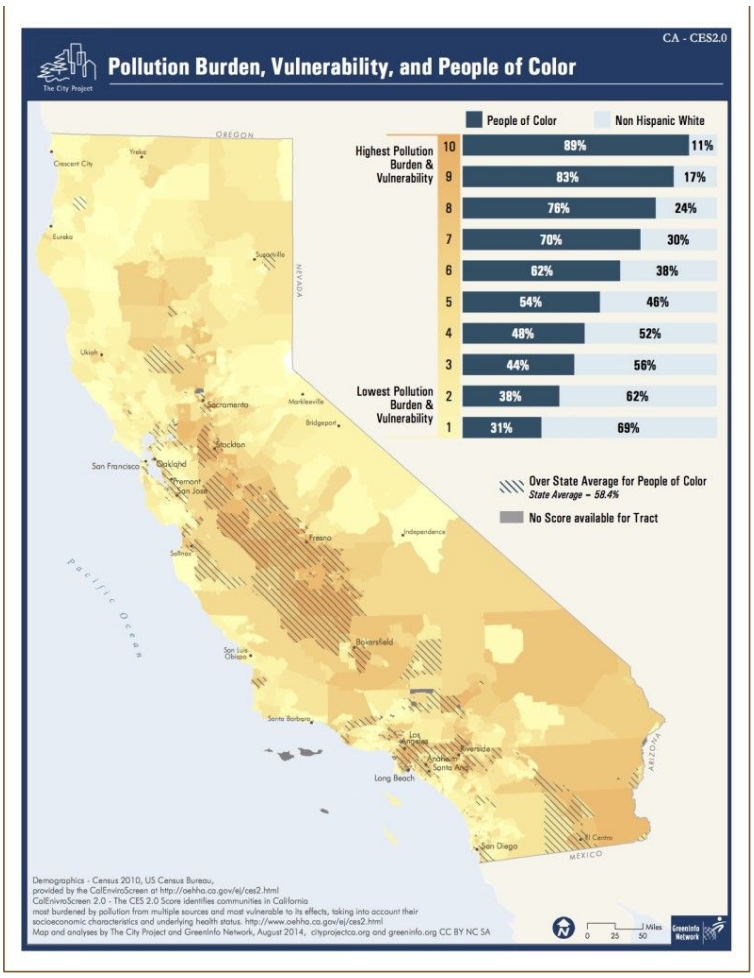

> Too many children in L.A. County, especially children of color, don't have access to parks where they can run free, breathe fresh air, experience nature and learn about their environment. This is an issue of social justice. Because it's not enough to have this awesome natural wonder within your sight — you have to be able to access it.
> My commitment to conservation isn't about locking away our natural treasures; it's about working with communities to open up our glorious heritage to everybody — young and old, black, white, Latino, Asian, Native American — to make sure everybody can experience these incredible gifts.

The following map of California illustrates that the same communities that are disproportionately of color and low-income are also the most burdened for pollution and vulnerability to its effects. The same communities also have the least access to green space.

- In the communities that are the most burdened for pollution and vulnerability (the 10 percent worst score under CalEnviroScreen CES), fully 89 percent of the people are of color and only 11 percent are non-Hispanic white people. Statewide, the population average is 58 percent people of color.
- In the communities that are the least burdened for pollution and vulnerability (the 10 percent best CES scores), only 31 percent of the people are of color and fully 69 percent are non-Hispanic white people.
- Sixty-four percent of people of color live in the most-burdened communities for pollution and vulnerability (the 50 percent worst CES scores) — only 31 percent of non-Hispanic white people live in those areas.
- Only 36 percent of people of color live in the least-burdened communities for pollution and vulnerability (the 50 percent best CES scores) and fully 69 percent of non-Hispanic white people live in those areas.

The measures of pollution and vulnerability are from the state's CalEnviroScreen tool. The City Project and GreenInfo Network provide the analysis on race, ethnicity, and green access, because CES inappropriately excludes these factors.

The National Park Service in a best practice summarizes the values at stake for healthy parks, healthy people, and healthy communities:

- Fun, health, and human development.
- Conservation values, including climate justice.
- Economic vitality, including creating jobs and avoiding displacement.
- Art, culture, and spiritual values.
- Equal justice, democracy, and livability for all. "Ultimately, we can appeal to the values that we strive to achieve as a community and democracy and emphasize the inherent democratic nature of public spaces."

U.S. National Park Service, Healthy Parks, Healthy People Community Engagement eGuide.

The Pope entreats us to care about climate, care for creation, and care for the poor and underprivileged.

Jeannette,

I was hoping that you would forward this email to Mr. Sandler in hopes he could meet to discuss a new project I am working on.

Mr. Sandler,

It sure has been a long time since we have spoken and I was hoping that we could catch up for a few minutes when I am out in the Bay Area April 2-4. I have started a new project that is focused on defending Hillary Clinton from the myriad Right-wing attacks she is facing today. There are currently at least eight SuperPAC's on the Right that are solely dedicated to disparaging Secretary Clinton's record and potential candidacy, and as a private citizen she has no campaign in place to defend her. This project, like Media Matters, will place an absolute premium on the facts. I have always been grateful for your family's early support of Media Matters and hope we can find some time when I am in town to catch up. I am pretty flexible and can work around your schedule. Please let me know and thanks for taking the time.

Best Regards,

David Brock

Nothing against anyone named John… but this is ridiculous!

> Fewer large companies are run by women than by men named John, a sure indicator that the glass ceiling remains firmly in place in corporate America.
> Among chief executives of S.&P. 1500 firms, for each woman, there are four men named John, Robert, William or James. We're calling this ratio the Glass Ceiling Index, and an index value above one means that Jims, Bobs, Jacks and Bills — combined — outnumber the total number of women, including every women's name, from Abby to Zara. Thus we score chief executive officers of large firms as having an index score of 4.0.
> Our Glass Ceiling Index is inspired by a recent Ernst & Young report , which computed analogous numbers for board directors. That report yielded an index score of 1.03 for directors, meaning that for every one woman, there were 1.03 Jameses, Roberts, Johns and Williams — combined — serving on the boards of S.&P. 1500 companies.
> Even as this ratio falls short of the score among chief executives, it remains astonishingly high. It also understates the impermeability of the glass ceiling. After all, most companies understand that an all-male board looks bad, and so most of them appoint at least one woman, although only a minority bother to appoint more than one. Far fewer of these large firms — currently one in 25 — are run by a woman serving as C.E.O.

Subject: Comparative document for HRC

All,
This document will allow HRC to compare and contrast the specific differences in language.

Where there is agreement on language, the text runs across the whole page or it is bolded in blue, so for example on core message the first line is the same in both Option 1 and Option 2 but what follows that in how the remedy is expressed is different in each option.

As I said at the meeting, the differences are not massively significant in either substance or language. Nonetheless, the most useful exercise going forward would be for us to talk this through with her to hear directly from her, what she likes and why and what she doesn't like and why.
A conversation would also enable us to talk through how she can put this document to work for her as she goes from speech to interview to roundtable, etc. It is not intended to be prescriptive, but rather to arm her with multiple jumping off points and directions to go in depending on the setting, the audience, the question etc.

Let us know if you have any questions.
Joel

Hi there John.

I saw the story about tying Wildfires to Climate Change.

http://www.upi.com/Science_News/2014/08/05/White-House-looking-to-tie-wildfires-to-climate-change/5941407250327/

I believe that we have been through some of this before, perhaps as much as 75% of the Wildfire Activity from 1846 – 1952 could be used to compare with the 1980 – 2014 period.

How do I know??

I have been looking at your data, in particular Mega Fires 1846 – 1952, Forest Harvesting and Subsequent Slash Burns.

This data tells me that in the 1920s & 1930s which were the two warmest decades in the 20th Century until the 1990s & 2000s, there were 190,000 acres being burned each year in Western Washington forests from 1918 – 1925 and 120,000 acres being burned each year in Western Oregon forests from 1918 – 1925.

The 1846 – 1952 period in these Western Forests (OR & WA) was also very active in terms of Mega Fires:

➢ 1846 Yachina (Yaquinna) Fire (West Oregon)	450,000 acres
➢ 1853 Nestucca Fire (West Oregon near Cascade Head)	320,000 acres
➢ 1868 Silverton Fire (SE of Portland)	1 million acres
➢ 1868 Coos Fire (Coos Bay Oregon)	300,000 acres
➢ 1902 Yacolt Burn (SW Washington near Stevenson WA)	240,000 acres	21 Fire Events: 1789, 1902, 1910 – 1952
➢ 1933 Tillamook Burn (NW Oregon)	240,000 acres
➢ 1939 Tillamook Burn (NW Oregon)	190,000 acres
➢ 1945 Tillamook Burn (NW Oregon)	180,000 acres
➢ 1951 Tillamook Burn (NW Oregon)	32,700 acres

From 1880 – 1957, Railroad Logging ruled the forests with steam Donkeys and Spar Trees (Google Railroad Logging, Steam Donkeys & Spar Trees) in the Pacific Northwest.

Railroad Logging also operated in Alaska, British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario in Canada, and almost all Lower 48 States from 1860 – 1960.

The West Coast Version operated from Alaska to California (Redwoods & Sierra Nevada)

Railroad Logging actually maintained Prehistoric Fire Regimes along the West Coast over its 80 year run.

Railroad Logging impacted tens of millions of acres in the West.

Railroad Logging started the Tillamook Burns and the 1902 Yacolt Burn and many small Slash Burns that were not Mega Fires.

Railroad Logging, Slash Burns, Mega Fires and Climate of the past can be used to answer the Mega Fires, Wildfires and Climate that we are facing today.

As well, Railroad Logging, Slash Burns, Mega Fires and Climate of the past can be used to answer the continuing questions and problems in the West about Habitat for the Spotted Owl and Timber Supply.

This is a continuing conundrum for the US Forest Service and the US Fish & Wildlife Service in their implementation of the Northwest Forest Plan.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This information could also help solve problems with the O & C Lands in Oregon (which was a Railroad Land Grant and most of the area was Railroad Logged).

This information could also ground truth or validate Variable Retention Harvesting and Ecosystem Based Management that is being currently employed on Bureau of Land Management Lands in Oregon.

This information could also be used to validate the Northwest Forest Plan.

These are also important issues for State DNR & Dept of Forestry agencies as well.

I also know that I can link most WA, OR & CA Spotted Owl sites with one or more and very likely all three of the following:

- Railroad Logging
- Railroad Logging Slash Burns (Post)
- Mega Fires

I call it:

Learning From The Past, To Understand The Present, and To Predict The Future

I also call it:

Ecosystem Decoding

This data is hidden and forgotten on the shelves of libraries and archives across the US and waiting to be utilized.

I would like to discuss these issues and especially this data, YOUR DATA, with you and John Holdren.

Thank you John.

Erik

Team HRC

Attached you will find a new draft of the policy poll. I appreciate the feedback on the call. Since that call Joel, Robby and I (and our teams) have worked hard to restructure the Policy Poll. You will see a different feel, flow and structure to it. We are really concentrating on core family/small business economic issues and the interplay between the framing and policy needs. We have also stripped some specific policy series on education and taxes that we will get to in future policy polls. Don't worry, we still have those issues in the poll but we just don't drill down as much.

So kick the tires on this draft and please email me, jeff and matt your comments and suggestions. We are sending a Word doc if you would like to use track changes or if not just send an email with your comments. We are reviewing the poll draft with HRC on Thursday so please get us comments by tomorrow at noon. Give it a couple of good reads.

Thanks for all your help.

John -

What a comeback!

Late last night, the Associated Press called the Democratic Primary in Hawaii's First Congressional District for our friend Mark Takai -- a remarkable come from behind victory against a conservative Democrat that wouldn't have happened without VoteVets' support.

Mark and I have been friend's since attending college together at the University of Hawaii, and I'm looking forward to our reunion in the House of Representatives.

But we're only halfway home. Mark still faces a credible Republican challenger in November. Can I count on you to help me get his sprint to Election Day off on the right foot?

Yes, count on me to contribute $5 to Mark Takai's campaign today.

I've made it a priority to help like-minded progressive veterans who are running for Congress this Fall, but this race is especially important to me.

I know it is for you as well, and that VoteVets work on television and in the field helped push Mark over the finish line last night.

Now let's elect him to Congress.

Tammy Duckworth
Congresswoman, IL-8

Chris,
We blew an engine on take off from Kigali. I now don't arrive back in to the states until Thursday afternoon. I'll try to call from the road, but I'm travelling thru Ethiopia so the chances of connecting seem remote. Will you think about what we need to accomplish on Friday on the call and what paper we'll need and I'll ck in when I hit the ground Thursday.

Subject: [big campaign] You have got to see this

Below is a video report for the flash vigil that Catholics United organized to support members as they walked into the chamber to vote on Friday. I want to give a special shout out to Cliff Frazier and Mary Kay Henry for joining us.

Dear James,

When we got the word Saturday that the Tea Party activists were hurling racial and homophobic slurs at members of Congress as they walked into the House chamber, Catholics United sprang into action. In just 12 hours, we were able to mobilize 150 people of faith to join in a prayerful peaceful counter presence outside the Capitol building.

When Speaker Pelosi linked arms with Congressman John Lewis to march into the Capitol, Catholics United was at their side cheering them on.

Video of C atholics United members supporting members of Congress as they walk into the Capitol building

And the members of Congress were grateful. As they walked into the chamber to make their historic vote, many of them stopped to thank us for our positive and life affirming witness. The highpoint came when a number of Catholic members of Congress heard about our witness and asked for some of our signs. A few minutes later, these members of Congress were on the balcony of the House chamber with our signs, cheering us on.

Our vigil was coverd by CNN, MSNBC, Fox, the Wall Street Journal and many more news outlets. This was a great day for the American people and I'm proud that Catholics United was right there helping make it happen. Click here to see a video compilation from Sunday.

Sincerely,

James Salt

Subject:	Thoughts on Israel and Iran from Tom Donilon and Dennis Ross

Dear Jake,

I attended a book launch at the Washington Institute today for Dennis Ross' new book "Doomed to Success". He and Tom Donilon held a discussion and there were several points you may wish to consider for Hillary's use.

1. Israel is most likely to show flexibility when it has confidence in the US, and when there is the intense security dialogue that existed when Tom was NSC adviser, but does not exist now. (Dennis). This should include an updated security MOU(Dennis and Tom)

2.The US needs to engage in confidence boosting measures with Israel and the Palestinians, and should not be paralyzed into inaction because a comprehensive peace is not possible now. It must not be seen as a binary choice between all or nothing, or a dangerous vacuum will be created. These practical steps include the following:

(1) Stating and restating the status quo Kerry brokered with Israel and Jordan, with 24/7 cameras, for the Temple Mount.
(2) Lowering provocative rhetoric on both sides, and encouraging the Palestinians to speak out against violence.
(3) Restore a belief in a two-state soluton as the only alternative. The Oslo Agreement is still the framework, and although Abbas says he is no longer bound by it, actual security cooperation and tax revenue transfers continue.
(4) Given the weakness and dysfunction of the Palestinian leadership, quietly encourage the moderate Arabs to support their re-entry into negotiations.(Dennis)

I could add to that economic initiatives (QIZ in the West Bank; joint projects in the West Bank; reduced checkpoints and increased numbers of carefully vetted Palestinian workers, etc.)

3. Iran (Dennis and Tom). At the November 9 meeting between Bibi and Obama, and the Washington meetings Bibi will hold, the following should be accomplished:

(1) There must be a fact-based analysis of Iranian compliance with the deal. (Tom) A joint consultative group of senior intelligence experts should be created with Israel and the US to monitor Iranian compliance with the nuclear deal, and determine how violations will be handled. This can rebuild trust between the two governments, and avoid differing interpretations.(Dennis)
(2) The US should make clear in advance the consequences of Iranian violations during the 10-15 year period, and thereafter, what the US would do if Iran tries a nuclear weapons breakout.

4. Israel.

(1) The PM needs to repair the damage to Israel's bipartisan support, by time and again stressing that US support for Israel has always been and must remain outside partisan politics. The two countries have shared values and interests (Tom)
(2) Both agreed that Obama made a serious error at the outset of his Administration of going to Cairo and not going to Israel afterward.
(3) The violence is very different than the 1st and 2d Intifadas, which were centrally directed. But their randomness also makes it more difficult to stop.(Dennis).
(4) The violence underscores the fantasy and danger of a one state solution, since it would incorporate violent elements into Israel.(Dennis)

5. Syria.(Tom).

(1) Russia's re-entry into the Middle East for the first time since the 1970s is a dangerous situation, both with the possibility of military encounters with the US, but also because of the foothold it gives Russia.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(2) This is also dangerous for Israel as it puts Assad's allies, Hezbollah and Iran, near the Golon Heights
(3)(Dennis) Victories in northern Iraq against ISIS are very important to dent their image of invulnerability, which is a major recruiting tool for them.

Best wishes,

Stu Eizenstat

He is firm in his position. He is honored to have been considered but cannot accept the job given his economic and business responsibilities, including prior commitment to other candidates.
He reiterated that he was enormously impressed with HRC and wishes her the best but cannot put himself through what she will have to put herself through.
He welcomes continuing to have a dialogue with Robby about ideas for people or issues.

Dear Faculty,

Fall 2015 exams will begin tomorrow, Tuesday, December 8 through Saturday, December 19, 2015. In preparation for exam administration, please review the following important information and reminders.

Delivery of final exams and papers:

You can expect hard copies of completed essay exams to be delivered within one working day of the exam date. In addition, exams that were submitted electronically may be accessed online via the Faculty Exam/Paper Portal (http://apps .law.georgetown.edu/exams/faculty/).

Please note that the Office of the Registrar will be closed to the public on Tuesday, December 22 and Wednesday, December 23 in order to package, deliver/courier exams and final papers to you before the Law Center closes for the holiday break.

Deferred Exams:

Georgetown Law's Exam Deferral Policy allows us to assist students who have supervening circumstances such as illness or serious personal problems during exams. In order to be fair to all and preserve student anonymity during the exam process, we ask you to refer students to us to determine if they qualify for deferred exams.

No Fall 2015 exam will be administered after Tuesday, January 5, 2016.

Fall 2015 Grades Deadlines:

Fall 2015 grades deadline is NOON on Friday, January 15, 2016. Grades must be submitted by the deadline via MyAccess .

The University is closed on Monday, January 18, 2016 in observance of the Martin Luther King, Jr. Holiday. The three-day grace period ends at 9:00 am on Tuesday, January 19, 2016. The penalty to full-time faculty for grades submitted on January 19 after 9:00 am is $400. An additional $100 per day will be imposed for each additional day the grades are late.

Barring any unforeseen circumstances, first-year grades will be released as a group (i.e. all sections of Con Law I) to first-year students starting on Wednesday, January 20, 2016.

Fall 2015 grades deadline for final papers with extension until February 1, 2016: Monday, February 29, 2016 by 5:00 pm.

Attached are copies of the Online Grading Instructions for papers and exams, and a copy of the Recommended Curve and Historical Grade Distribution for Fall 2014-Spring 2015. This information is also available on our Faculty Services website (https://www.law.georgetown.edu/campus-services/registrar/Faculty-Services.cfm).

As a reminder, please do NOT respond to any communications from students until you have submitted your exam grades. Please refer any such communications to me (das232@law.georgetown.edu).

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Best,
Denise

Subject:	[big campaign] John Kerry launches anti-smear web site

Senator Kerry's Campaign for our Country PAC yesterday debuted TruthFightsBack.com - a site designed to empower activists and fight back against the rightwing smear machine. In addition to tracking anti-Obama smears, TruthFightsBack will invest in fighting smears against Democratic Senate, House and gubernatorial candidates.

www.truthfightsback.com

From the statement announcing the project:

> From the hard negative turn of the McCain campaign to the return of fringe author and smear merchant Jerome Corsi, from the millions of dollars of attack ads promised by the rightwing group Freedom's Watch to the emergence of many organizations focused on attacking Democrats in individual races, we've got our work cut out for us to make sure 2008 is not a replay of 2004.
> TruthFightsBack.com provides the latest technology to activists to empower them to track and fight back against the actions of the right-wing smear machine wherever it appears. It will allow activists to input smears as soon as they see them, providing us a real-time view of the spread of lies and distortions, and making possible strategic decisions on how to fight back and where. And it will empower activists to debunk the smears and fight back with the truth.
> This effort builds on the realization that there are some things a campaign can't do for itself, and there are limits to what one campaign can do about a negative campaign focused on races up and down the ticket all across the country. TruthFightsBack.com focuses the power of one of the largest and most enthusiastic grassroots army of supporters any party has ever had on battling against these smears.

Subject: [big campaign] TOMORROW at NOON in DC - March to the NRA

I wanted pass on something we at CREDO have been organizing this weekend.

We are turning the focus on NRA. And this will start with a march to the NRA federal offices near the Capitol tomorrow at noon in DC.

It'd be a huge help to us if you can get the word out to all your friends and colleagues in DC.

Here is a suggested retweet - we'd be hugely grateful if you can tweet it around or via modified tweet:

RT @CREDOMobile ACTION: March on the @NRA DC office at noon Monday. on.fb.me/SA7o4t#todayistheday #guncontrolnow on Facebook:

And the email action you can pass around as well.

It's time to take the gloves off against enablers of mass murderers. And let's start tomorrow.

March on the NRA: Stand down and let us pass gun control

Dear Friend,

"You have to say the National Rifle Association is the enabler of mass murderers. And we've got to stomp on them instead of kowtowing to them." — Rep. Jerry Nadler[1]

After the shooter Adam Lanza, no one is more to blame for the massacre of 20 first graders and six women at the Sandy Hook Elementary School than the National Rifle Association. To stop the senseless killing we must first make the NRA stand down.

Join CREDO for an emergency march on the NRA office in Washington DC.

March on the NRA: Stand down and let us pass gun control

Please join us tomorrow (Monday) at noon in Washington, DC. Click here for details and to RSVP.

bloodstained agenda. To win support of the NRA, candidates must pledge allegiance to its insane pro-weapon stances. Like making sure your local Walmart can stock semi-automatic assault weapons such as the Bushmaster .223 that was used in the Sandy Hook massacre and that can fire more than six bullets per second. The NRA forces politicians to oppose background checks for weapons sold at gun shows. The NRA has even been able to compel its allies in Congress to oppose a ban on weapons sales to people on the U.S. terrorism watch list.[2]

In his address to the nation, President Obama vowed "to take meaningful action." We will hold him accountable for sending legislation to Capitol Hill as soon as possible to address the crisis of gun violence in this country. But Congress, which for decades has cowered in the face of the NRA's lobbying prowess and vast campaign coffers, is not likely to pass any bill proposed by the White House if we don't stand up and force the NRA to stand down.

The National Rifle Association is a powerful lobby that purports to represent gun owners. But in reality, it represents the deadly interests of arms dealers and gun manufacturers. And it has been astonishingly successful at blocking regulations that should easily pass if Congress would vote its conscience instead of kowtowing to the NRA.

Please join us tomorrow (Monday) at noon in Washington DC. Click here for details and to RSVP.

Sincerely,

Becky Bond, Political Director

Attachments:	151029 O'Malley Hits - For Pitch or Debate.docx

Friends,

Similar to the summary of Sanders hits, I wanted to have everyone on one thread to share some O'Malley hits. Unlike the Sanders hits, I suspect most of these will be primarily for the debate. Just to flag some of these hits have not been written, so we would need to decide if/when we want to deploy.

Please let us know if you need anything else.
Tony

Ties to Wall Street - Gov. O'Malley tries to portray Hillary Clinton as a tool of Wall Street but has his own ties to the industry. In 2010, O'Malley appointed a former Deutsche Bank investment banker to head the Commission for Financial Regulation. He supported and defended the bailout of Wall Street. When O'Malley was finance chair of the DGA, the association received a $100,000 contribution from Goldman Sachs, and participated in a Goldman Sachs forum in 2005. He created a 501c4 organization, NewDEAL, that was financed in part with contributions from the Private Equity Growth Capital Council. Moreover, news reports said that O'Malley earlier this year was soliciting funds from the financial industry for his presidential race.

Trade - Gov. O'Malley's current anti-trade rhetoric doesn't match his record. In 2000, he signed the "Hyde Park Declaration" that included a commitment to "open trade." In 2011, he told the Export-Import Global Access Forum that the only way we will succeed is "is if we pick ourselves up off the mat, end the pity party, and become engaged in the big, big markets and opportunities that are out there in the world." In 2012, he praised President Obama's trade policies: "We see trade increasing out of the port of Baltimore which is creating jobs as we sell more and more American products abroad, and our schools, thanks in part to the president's help are actually raising standards." And in 2013, he signed a letter on TPP laying out priorities for negotiations. It stated, in part, "we ask that you include very strong intellectual property rights provisions, consistent with U.S. law, for protecting the investments of our innovative, intellectual property-intensive sectors, such as biopharmaceuticals." As governor, he went on numerous trade missions, including to China and India.

Pension/Retirment - Facing a budget and pension shortfall, O'Malley proposed changes to the state pension system said workers could increase their contributions or take a benefit cut in retirement. It also raised the early retirement age for state workers.

Minimum Wage - Gov. O'Malley is a strong proponent of a $15 minimum wage. However, as governor, it did not seem that raising the minimum wage was a priority until his last year. In 2012, the Baltimore Sun editorialized that Maryland was "missing in action" on raising the minimum wage. "But since Mr. O'Malley was elected governor, efforts to boost the Maryland minimum wage have languished. Last year, a bill to raise it to $9.75 over three years couldn't even get an up-or-down vote in a House or Senate committee. Apparently, raising the minimum wage is all the rage among Maryland Democrats when it can be used to bash the first Republican governor in a generation -- but not so much at other times," it stated. In 2013, all the Democratic candidates to replace O'Malley supported raising the minimum wage. It wasn't until 2014 that O'Malley was able to sign a $10.10 minimum wage.

Pay to Play – While on the Democratic Governors Association executive board, Martin O'Malley rewarded major DGA donors with taxpayer-funded Maryland contracts. Local press documented the unseemly pattern, and further investigation shows a clear and troubling correlation between the interests of major DGA donors and O'Malley's behavior in Maryland. Political analysts once said O'Malley's DGA fundraising "cement[ed] his credentials" as a viable candidate for public office. In 2011, the Baltimore Sun reported that more than a dozen companies with business interests in Maryland donated to the DGA during the first 6 months of his tenure. In 2011, O'Malley signed into law a waste to energy bill that benefited Energy Answers, which donated $100,000 to the DGA on the same day. Environmentalists opposed the bill. CSX Corporation increased donations to the DGA as Maryland fought for federal funding for its Gateway Project. After leaving the governor's office, O'Malley took a lucrative job at a firm for which he helped secure a no-bid contract.

Drivers Licenses for Undocumented Immigrants - Gov. O'Malley has taken several positions on allowing undocumented immigrants to have drivers licenses. Before he became governor, Maryland's policy was allowed driving privileges for undocumented immigrants. In 2008, he effectively ended that program by opposing a plan to issue separate drivers licenses to undocumented immigrants, citing the need to comply with federal regulations. Immigration advocates widely criticized his administration for this, one saying he was "prioritizing political pandering over good policymaking." O'Malley blamed the Bush administration and defended his move, saying, "We'd become an attraction to people who feel they can easily obtain a license through fraudulent means because they have one less thing to prove." In 2009, he supported a measure that would require proof of legal status to obtain a drivers license. In 2013, the legislature passed and O'Malley signed into law a measure to allow undocumented immigrants to obtain drivers licenses.

Deportations – Martin O'Malley led from behind on the controversial immigration enforcement program known as Secure Communities. After scores of non-criminal immigrants were deported, counties and elected officials took action to curb effects of deportations. O'Malley waited four years to act, resulting in the deportation of almost 1,000 immigrants with no criminal history. In fact, over a third of all immigrants deported under this program had no criminal record. Under O'Malley's watch as Mayor of Baltimore and Governor of Maryland, tens of thousands of immigrants faced deportation. Despite these facts, O'Malley touts his work in advancing Baltimore's status as a "sanctuary city."

Energy/Fracking - In 2014, Gov. O'Malley supported fracking in Western Maryland, a departure from his 2011 executive order that placed a moratorium on hydraulic fracking in the state.

Mandatory Minimums - O'Malley's main attack on Hillary Clinton is he has been consistent on progressive issues. On criminal justice reform, that is not the case. In 2007, O'Malley vetoed legislation that allowed for the possibility of parole during a 10-year mandatory sentence for some second-time non-violent drug offenders. The legislation was a top priority of the Legislative Black Caucus. O'Malley said, "I'm not sure that I can sign a bill that would do away with the penalties we have in Maryland -- or lessen the penalties -- for second-time drug dealers…I think drug dealing is a violent crime."

Criminal Justice

Conducting mass arrests for low-level offenses. At the height of this practice, in 2005, Baltimore logged more than 108,400 arrests — equivalent to a sixth of the city's population. The following year, the ACLU and the NAACP sued the city, alleging a pattern of illegal arrests. In a 2010 settlement, the city paid out $870,000, agreed to retrain officers, and publicly rejected zero-tolerance policing. O'Malley scoffed at critics of mass arrests as "ideologues of the left" and linked an increase in shootings in Baltimore to a decline in arrests.

Denying elderly prisoners parole. O'Malley also instituted a de facto policy of denying parole for anyone serving a life sentence. Maryland is one of only three states that allows the governor to reject recommendations from parole commissions. O'Malley was reluctant to use his clemency power, even as many Democratic and Republican gubernatorial counterparts were more lenient in granting these acts of mercy. O'Malley rejected nearly 1,300 cases, and granted a total of 146 pardons over eight years – and only three to prisoners serving life sentences.

Building juvenile prisons. While continuing to trumpet the falling crime rates, O'Malley advocated for new juvenile justice facilities, including a new facility in Baltimore that was projected to cost $100 million. After years of protests from community activists and leaders, O'Malley's administration finally scrapped the plan in 2013.

Marijuana - Gov. O'Malley opposed decriminalizing marijuana until the day he signed it into law. The Frederick News-Post called him an "11th hour convert."

Marriage Equality - As mayor, O'Malley supported civil marriages, but when he ran for governor, he said marriage was between a man and a woman and instead support civil unions for gay couples. In 2012, O'Malley noted the flip flop and said he sacrificed his beliefs for political purposes. He only supported civil unions because at the time most Marylanders did not support marriage for gay couples. He told Gavin Newsom his advisers told him, "There's no way you can be for this without it becoming a huge distraction in the governor's race and you can't say civil marriage. There's gay marriage and there's civil unions."

Centrist - Despite running as a strong progressive in 2016, O'Malley previously associated with the Democratic Leadership Council and ran as a "centrist." In 2007, he wrote an op-ed with Harold Ford Jr. urging Democrats to recapture the center, saying, "some liberals are so confident about Democratic prospects that they contend the centrism that vaulted Democrats to victory in the 1990s no longer matters." O'Malley's more aggressive progressive posture in 2015 led one Baltimore Sun columnist to write, "But, as always, O'Malley's passion sounded contrived, overwrought. His problem remains that authenticity thing."

BUSINESSFORWARD

John,

Last week, Reps. John Delaney and Ben Ray Luján, and Sen. Ben Cardin introduced a resolution calling on Congress to prioritize clean energy standards as a way to curb climate change. It is cosponsored by 30 senators and more than 100 representatives, but Congress needs to know if business leaders like you support or oppose prioritizing clean energy standards.

At our briefings across the county, small business owners, entrepreneurs, and executives have explained that businesses are already feeling the effects of climate change. Severe weather forces businesses to close, disrupts supply and delivery chains, and keeps potential customers at home.

Would you like to join a group of business leaders who are urging Congress to prioritize clean energy standards?

Hundreds of business leaders have recommended establishing a clean energy standard like 50x30 as one strategy to help curb climate change. This plan calls for a benchmark of producing more than 50 percent of America's energy from clean sources by the year 2030. Supporters say goals like this will spur investment in clean technology, make clean energy more affordable, create over a million jobs, and help curb climate change.

What do you think of this approach?

Thank you for sharing your experience and your advice with Washington.

Adding dan and jake as well.

Below is a draft response to Nader for review. Whether its a letter or some sort of message at a speech or event, want to get thoughts on what her message is.

Dear Ralph Nader, Pete Davis, Al Norman, Adolph Reed,….

Thank you for your letter. I am indeed proud of my advocacy on behalf of women and women's economic empowerment over several decades. I know that in today's economy, women are disproportionately bearing the burden of tough economic times. Women are disproportionately poor and tens of millions of women are financially insecure - just one paycheck away from poverty.

It is in part because of my support for economic advancement of all women that I am a strong, and longstanding supporter of increasing the minimum wage, not just for some companies, but for all US companies. Currently 60% of all minimum wage workers are women, and many of them are moms. Raising the minimum wage to $10.10 should not be an issue subject to political polarization. It makes economic sense because those people who get a raise will spend it buying goods and services, fueling economic activity in their local communities. It also makes budgetary sense because it will reduce expenditures by the government. The Center for American Progress recently released a study that found an increase of the minimum wage to $10.10 an hour will reduce SNAP expenditures - popularly referred to as food stamps - by $4.6 billion a year. That means that companies that pay below the minimum wage are in essence relying on government subsidies to ensure their workers do not go hungry. I hope that those that rail against government spending would support this increase in the minim wage that will reduce such spending. But I also believe raising the minimum wage is the moral thing to do as well because I simply believe that in America, if you work a job full-time, you shouldn't live in poverty. I believe that should be a basic bargain for all Americans.

However, I know wages aren't the only issue for women at the bottom of the economic ladder. Women suffer disproportionately from a lack of flexibility policies in American companies. Seventy percent of low-income women do not have access to a single paid sick day and the United States is the only developed d nation that does not require paid maternity leave. As a country, we need to do far better helping all parents balance their responsibilities at home and at work. Too often parents, especially low-income workers, have to choose and that is not good for our companies or our families.

These are policies that I am happy to discuss because they are the issues I have fought for over the course of my career. I am proud of my work to underscore the importance of a minimum wage increase for women the last time the federal government increased the minimum wage in 1996. And I continued that advocacy as a Senator from New York. I know these issues are central to both our economic growth as a nation and to the American promise of shared prosperity we all hold so dear.

Today we write to ask you to also join us in an important women's empowerment initiative here at home. It involves an area to which you have a special connection and thus presents you, specifically, with an important responsibility to make a direct difference in the lives of hundreds of thousands of American women and an indirect difference in millions more.
> The Walmart Corporation is the largest employer in the United States, employing about one in every hundred Americans. Unfortunately, America's largest employer sets a horrible example with its miserly wage policy. Walmart pays hundreds of thousands of their workers less per hour, adjusted for inflation, than minimum wage workers made 46 years ago. With rising housing, health and transportation costs, Walmart workers cannot make ends meet on less than $10, $9 or even, for some, $8 an hour. The cashiers and hourly sales associates at the White Plains Walmart close to your house, for example, live in a city with a living wage of — as estimated by the MIT Living Wage Calculator — $13.05, but most hourly Walmart workers are paid thousands of dollars per year below that standard. It's no surprise that one Walmart manager even admitted this disconnect between Walmart pay and fair pay by placing a bin out last holiday season to solicit donations from customers for his own needy workers.
> Seventy percent of the positions subject to Walmart's hourly poverty wage regime are held by women. Most of these women are managed by men, who — despite making up a minority of the company's employees — make up a majority of Walmart's managers and officials. Irregular schedules and a miserly sick day policy make Walmart a difficult place for mothers to work. Take as an example one 33-year-old mother of two featured on ABC News a few years ago: she had to leave her daughter at home with a 103-degree fever because she was worried about her three sick day "demerits" issued by her Walmart manager. Worse over, Walmart's poverty wage regime drives down the wages and benefits of neighboring stores, again disproportionately hurting women, who make up the majority of the low-wage workforce in America.
> Walmart could end this assault on their female "associates" by paying all their workers at least $10.92, which is the inflation-adjusted wage that the lowest paid Walmart workers — under their founder, Sam Walton — earned in the late 1960's. Before Walton's billionaire heirs cry 'Impossible!', remember: (1) Walmart pays all their workers in Ontario, Canada and Santa Fe, New Mexico over $10 an hour and still remains quite profitable; (2) Walmart had enough funds to issue $51 billion in stock buybacks over the past five years, which could have given every American Walmart worker a $3.50 per hour raise over the past five years; and (3) a 2011 U.C. Berkeley economic study showed that even if Walmart raised its starting wage to $12 and passed all the costs onto customers, it would only cost Walmart shoppers 46 cents more per shopping trip.

In 1986, when Bill Clinton was governor of Arkansas, you reflected a single case of women's empowerment at Walmart by becoming Walmart's first female director. During your six years as a Walmart board member, you honorably pushed for women's empowerment. Twenty eight years later, we are asking you to make far broader history again for women at Walmart by publicly pressuring your former board to end its poverty wage regime and restore the wages of hundreds of thousands of its female associates.

Here are four ways you can immediately activate your deep Walmart ties to help this important feminist cause:

1. Publicly encourage former Walmart CEO H. Lee Scott, who had dinner at your home in 2006, to build on his minimum wage raise support from nine years ago by urging his successor C. Douglas McMillon to follow in his footsteps by endorsing a minimum wage raise this year.

2. Publicly encourage Alice Walton, the Walmart heiress who donated $25,000 to Ready for Hillary last year, to use her power as a major shareholder to force a raise in the wages of the hundreds of thousands of Walmart associates who make less in a year of work than Walton does in 10 minutes from interest on her inheritance.

3. Publicly encourage Clinton administration advisor Leslie Dach, who you have worked with on labor issues recently, to leverage his role as a former Walmart executive vice president to pressure his successors to end Walmart's poverty wage regime.

4. Publicly encourage Walmart director Aida Alvarez, who campaigned for you and was your husband's final Small Business Administration leader, to coordinate with other social justice-minded Walmart directors — such as former Detroit mayor Dennis Archer and civil rights activist Vilma Martinez -- to end Walmart's poverty wage regime.

Campaign funders like Alice Walton might be 'Ready for Hillary' to run for President in 2016, but Walmart's women have been 'Ready for Hillary' to stand up for the wages they deserve this year. It would be a shame to have your trailblazing legacy of Walmart women empowerment rolled back. We hope you can keep it alive by pressuring your former Walmart colleagues to raise the wages of its predominantly-female hourly workforce to $11, their inflation-adjusted 1968 level. This is no big deal: the workers have more than earned an $11 per hour wage, had it taken from them by inflation year after year, and will continue to until they can catch up with 1968, inflation adjusted.

Sincerely,

Ralph Nader

Here are a few findings from the report. The coverage was fierce. I think you just need to hear her out.

Key judgements from the Office of Inspector General's January Report of Inspection, Embassy Luxembourg:

- The Ambassador's confrontational management style, chronic gaps in senior and other staffing caused by curtailments, and the absence of a sense of direction have brought major elements of Embassy Luxembourg to a state of dysfunction. These curtailments entail considerable costs to the U.S. Government. Morale among Americans and local staff is very low, and stress levels are high. Most employees describe the Ambassador as aggressive, bullying, hostile, and intimidating, which has resulted in an extremely difficult, unhappy, and uncertain work environment.
- Poor management of the front office has aggravated communication within and outside the office and has led to serious inefficiencies. Taskings are arbitrary and erratic, the flow of information is excessively restricted, and the work of embassy staff members is not properly channeled or coordinated.
- The public affairs section is stretched to the breaking point. Tactical, short- term support to the front office consumes available time and resources, preventing the embassy from developing a strategic approach to public diplomacy in support of policy objectives.
- The small and underresourced management section has been absorbed with issues surrounding the official residence, and a move to a temporary resi- dence, resulting in insufficient time to devote to management controls and customer support.

Dear Friend,

It's a very exciting time in Colorado. Public opinion has shifted, and the time has finally come to give Colorado's gay and lesbian citizens the basic legal protections most of us take for granted.

Support civil unions in Colorado

New polling released last week shows how the public in Colorado has changed its views in the last few years: according to respected Public Policy Polling, over 70% of Coloradans now support legally recognized domestic partnerships. What we're talking about here are the basics: the ability to visit one another in the hospital. The choice to live together in a nursing home, and to leave property to each other in wills. The ability to make medical decisions when a partner is incapacitated. (Colorado Independent, 2/10/2011)

A few years ago, misinformation and bigotry made this conversation difficult. But today, the people of Colorado understand what needs to be done, and are ready to end second-class citizenship in our state.

Colorado Sen. Pat Steadman has introduced a bill in the Colorado legislature to create civil unions for committed same-sex couples. Please take a moment right now to show your support! Our friends at One Colorado have created a simple website where you can instantly message your state representative and Senator, and urge them to support civil unions now.

There is no reason to deny two people who want to team up to take on life's responsibilities and challenges the basic tools to do so. Committed couples are better able to cope with a bad economy through teamwork. What's more, the Williams Institute's study of Sen. Steadman's bill indicates it will result in millions of dollars in badly needed new revenue for Colorado over the next few years. (Colorado Independent, 2/16/2011)

These are the facts. Civil unions make sense. They make sense economically and fiscally, in addition to being the morally right thing to do. Please take a moment right now to contact your legislators, and urge them to protect all of Colorado's families by supporting civil union legislation this year.

Thank you,
Alan Franklin

Subject: A little bit of news

So I wanted to announce a little bit of personal news to those of you who have been close friends and allies over the years. A couple of things have developed in terms of my work over the course of the summer that will be important in terms of shaping my role going forward:

1. The first is that I have agreed to help Moveon.org develop a major new campaign re cleaning up corporate corruption in Washington. This project will tackle corporate special interest influence over our political decision making, and is shaped by the experience progressive activists have had in working for health care reform, financial reform, climate change legislation, jobs bills, and a host of other important legislation over the past year and a half. In spite of partial victories on some of these issues, it is clear that major corporate interests still have way too much power in DC, and that only a concerted long term effort is going to keep them from not only stopping future gains but rolling back what we have won. Moveon and I have been working to enlist groups to endorse the campaign (we have over a dozen major national groups signed on already), get grassroots activists signed up online (we have several hundred thousand of those already as well), and enlist candidates and members of Congress to take this on as well. Our goal right now is to reframe the 2010 elections as a crusade to take on these special interests, but we also know this is a long term fight that will be fought over many years to come.
2. The second announcement is below. After 3 years of working together at the blog we founded, Chris Bowers and I were approached by Markos to help him build on the strong foundation Dailykos has created, and we agreed to merge our blogging efforts with his. Our goals are two-fold. First, we want to create a major new hub of activism off the DK platform- an email list and an action site that will dramatically bump up the ability of DK to fight for good legislation and help progressive candidates. As part of that, the 3 of us will be working together to exponentially expand Blogpac, the candidate fundraising pac Markos started a few years ago. I think we will be able to dramatically expand Blogpac's ability to help progressive candidates win. Secondly, we want to build on the capacity DK has as a multi-media site, and I will be working with Markos and the team to expand DK's capacity as a media platform.

There are only a small number of organizations at the heart of online organizing and media, and Moveon.org and Dailykos have been among the leading pioneers in this field, so I couldn't be more thrilled to be working with both of them at the same time. I think working with the two of them simultaneously will give me the ability to leverage a lot of exciting opportunities to help the broader progressive cause. If I can ever be helpful to you in any way, or if you have an idea related to these projects and organizations, don't hesitate to let me know.

All my best, Mike

An insider goes outside (+)

by: Mike Lux

Tue Aug 17, 2010 at 13:30

Remember how your mom used to tell you to go outside and play so you could get some fresh air and sunshine? That's kind of how I feel today. This old insider, who has had one foot outside for a while now, is going to play with the kids outside for a while.

When Matt Stoller and Chris Bowers and I decided to start OpenLeft a little over 3 years ago, we thought it would be worthwhile to have a site where there was some dialogue and interplay between an old DC insider like me and some of the really smart and strategic voices from the blogosphere. We've had more than our share of fascinating discussions, entertaining debates, and innovative activist projects, and I am very proud of the role OpenLeft has played in the blogosphere.

When Markos approached Chris and I to work with DailyKos and help turn it into, in Markos' words, "an activist powerhouse", we were excited to sign up. The potential for working with the DailyKos community to build a platform for citizen activism is enormous, and we are both looking forward to being a part of helping it blossom and grow. In addition to that, I am excited to help Markos continue to build a truly dynamic media platform. The opportunity to work with him, Chris, and the entire DailyKos community is extraordinary.

As for OpenLeft, we are exploring what will happen next. Chris needs to dive full-time into working at DailyKos, and he was our editor and heart and soul, so him being gone causes us to re-evaluate everything. I will continue to write some for OpenLeft, as will Adam Bink and some of our other talented writers, but I have never been even close to a full-time presence, and since I will be increasingly working with DailyKos, I will have less time at OpenLeft than before.

One final note about my work going forward: I have also begun work this summer with MoveOn.org on their exciting project to clean up the corporate corruption in DC. While this project is currently focused on shaping the 2010 electoral dialogue, it will be a campaign we will need to keep on for years to come. To be working with both DailyKos and MoveOn.org, two of the leading institutions in the world of the progressive netroots, is an honor and a privilege.

No matter what happens, I will however remain an insider. Once they inject you with the insider virus, it does change your DNA a bit. I know some folks think that makes me intrinsically evil (one of my all time favorite comments on a blog post came the other day when someone said that because I knew Rahm Emanuel, that automatically made me a bad guy). But I hope I can work with the DailyKos community, as well as with OpenLeft and MoveOn, to use my insider knowledge to help the entire movement get better at shaking up what happens inside, and to be a bridge between the other progressive insiders that are involved in national politics and the progressive netroots community. For all my insider-y status, my roots are in the deep and wonderful tradition of progressive movement politics- Alinsky-style community organizing, the labor movement, the movements of the 1960s. Building on that history and tradition, I look forward to working with all of you to create a stronger progressive movement in the future.

Attachments:	BoA March 31, 2013 Update-1.xlsx ATT00001.htm

Members of the CGI Board of Advisors,

Attached is the monthly tracking report for March for membership and sponsorship. Results reflect activity through March 29th, the last business day of the month. Highlights follow:

Annual Meeting

- Sponsorship:
 - GEMS confirmed renewal at $500,000;
 - Swiss Re confirmed renewal at $250,000;
 - Houghton Mifflin confirmed renewal at $250,000;
 - Microsoft agreed to become a new cash sponsor at $250,000 (in addition to $100,000 for CGI U).

- Membership: The overall positive trend continues, with paid memberships at 233, an increase of 13 over last year at this time. New memberships are 13 ahead of 2012, while renewals are flat. The renewal rate is now at 73.8% of offers extended, which is slightly ahead of last year's pace.

CGI America

- Sponsorship: Sponsorship stands at $1.9mm versus a final sponsorship level of $2.1mm for 2012. We remain optimistic that we will surpass last year's total due to potential renewals (Dow, Peterson Foundation) and several new prospects with whom we are having meaningful discussions (Chicago Community Trust, MacArthur Foundation, Boeing).

- Paid Attendance: Total paid attendees stands at 144 versus 65 this time last year.

CGI U

- The final sponsorship amount is $1.635 million versus $945k for the event last year.

Following our last Advisory Board meeting, Eric Nonacs suggested that CGI provide an opportunity, after distribution of the Monthly Tracking Report each month, for any interested Advisory Board members to join a conference call to discuss the report or anything else on Advisory Board members' minds. Please let me know if you would like to participate in such a call and my assistant, Scarlet Cronin, will arrange a time that is convenient for the greatest number of people.

Best,

Bob

As World Leaders Meet in Paris, Hillary for America's John Podesta to Challenge Republican Efforts to Undercut Climate Action on Press Conference Call

Podesta to Criticize Tuesday Senate Subcommittee Hearing Where Chairman Ted Cruz Will Use Taxpayer Dollars to Question Settled Climate Science

On Monday afternoon, Hillary for America Chair John Podesta will convene a press conference call to criticize ongoing Republican efforts to undermine action to combat climate change. The call comes during the final week of the United Nations Climate Change Conference in Paris, where world leaders are gathering to forge a global agreement to tackle climate change. Podesta will highlight the stark contrast between the leadership on display in Paris with the backward focus of leading Republican presidential candidates.

Podesta will specifically decry Ted Cruz's decision to convene a Senate Commerce Subcommittee on Space, Science, and Competitiveness hearing with the apparent intent to raise doubts about settled climate science. The hearing will feature witness testimony from four prominent climate change skeptics.

Podesta will take questions following his remarks.

To participate in the call, please RSVP by 2:00 PM EST on Monday, December 7, using this link: [HYPERLINK].

Subject:	why we need you:

Hi there,

I've gotten pretty good at brushing off the attacks my husband's political opponents throw at him. Terry is a good man, an incredible father, and he'll work tirelessly as governor to build a more welcoming, prosperous Commonwealth.

But not everyone knows Terry as well as you and I do. So if we're going to fight back against the misleading and incredibly well-funded attack ads coming our way, we need your help.

Terry is just $11,312 from his goal of raising $125,000 into his Rapid Response Fund before the August fundraising deadline at midnight tonight.

Please chip in $5 — or whatever you can — before midnight to help him fight the smears.

Thanks for your support,

No plans to address it substantively via q&a at CGI or even at the top of her event – except we toyed with the idea of her saying I know there's been a lot in the news right now and there will be plenty of time to address it, but we're here to talk about x - but I put out a lengthy statement today.

I called Craig this evening to give a general download on where we were and get an update about what's going on in Foundation-land. We got to talking about the day tomorrow and he mentioned that President Clinton and Chelsea are doing an onstage panel with Larry Wilmore (Colbert's replacement on Comedy Central) during the closing plenary tomorrow evening. HRC is not slated to join, but maybe she should.

Wilmore could sit down with WJC and Chelsea and say something like "Thanks for having me here, it's a pleasure. And I should tell you, I just emailed HRC (I hear she's a big emailer), and asked if she'd join as well. (Laughter)." Then cue HRC walking onstage to applause. She could sit down, take advantage of the light-hearted environment to make things serious for a moment, and give a version of the statement, maybe with a follow-up or two, and then they would have the rest of the conversation.

It would be just light-hearted enough while giving her the opportunity to address this seriously, be a little conciliatory as discussed, and then get back to a discussion about CGI etc.

Goal would be to cauterize this just enough so it plays out over the weekend and dies in the short term.

Jen and I just discussed, and she was open to it, so I'll let her weigh in, but one of the things she suggested was that if we do this we employ the letter-to-State idea below as well earlier in the day, so in addition to getting the human side of HRC for the cameras, we'd have a set-the-record-straight piece to this that closes off that avenue of attack as well.

It might be crazy, but it might also be the one-two punch we need right now.

Thoughts welcome.

Nick

Subject:	[big campaign] New Huff Post from Creamer-Why Friday Deal Reduces GOP Leverage in 2012 Budget Battle

Why Last Week's Deal Reduces Republican Leverage in 2012 Budget Battle

Speaking on Fox New Sunday, Republican Leader Eric Cantor claimed that last week's budget deal will enhance the Republican's ability to use the looming vote to increase the Federal debt ceiling to leverage massive changes in Medicare and Medicaid. The opposite is true.

Friday night – literally at the eleventh hour-- Congressman John Boehner's Republican caucus finally agreed to drop their threat to shut down the government over the continued funding of women's health clinics, family planning – and specifically, Planned Parenthood.

The agreement to avoid a government shutdown came as particularly good news to 800,000 federal employees who would not have been paid and the millions of recipients of federal services whose needs will be met. It is also good news to anyone who cares about the creation of jobs in our economy. A shutdown would have done major damage to the fragile economic recovery.

The fact that the shutdown was avoided owed a great deal to the work of the many organizations who highlighted the real-life damage of Republican proposed cuts to things like Head Start slots for kids, enforcement of the clean air act, college loans and of course the health services provided by organizations like Planned Parenthood. These stories were particularly effective when combined with the fact that the Republicans insisted at the same time on continuing to provide subsidies to big oil and tax breaks for millionaires.

The tenacity of the President and Senator Reid – the fact that they refused to allow the Republicans to legislate about most major policy questions like the power of the EPA, and funding for women's health in the guise of a budget bill -- were also crucial. So was the bargaining skill of Reid's Chief of Staff David Krone and Obama Legislative Liaison, Rob Nabors.

But what is particularly important about the events of the last week is how it informs future progressive attempts to limit the horrific damage that Republicans hope to inflict on Medicare, Medicaid, food assistance programs – and the role of the public sector in our society.

Three separate factors were particularly important to Boehner's decision to throw in the towel on the Republican caucus demand that any deal eliminate government support for women's health clinics – including Planned Parenthood.

1). First and foremost, their threat to shut the government in pursuit of the right wing social agenda would have been a political disaster. The Tea Party Republican caucus was elected to office by swing voters who wanted something done about jobs – not "runaway" family planning. Let's remember that this was not about funding abortion. Federal law has banned taxpayer funding for abortion for decades. This was about funding family planning and women's clinics that do cancer screenings.

Had the Republicans "laid off" 800,000 federal workers and hundreds of thousand of additional contractors, delayed paycheck delivery to the troops, and stopped services to millions of Americans to pursue their fringe social agenda, swing voters would have stood open-mouthed in horror.

For Progressives, it would have been like shooting fish in a barrel – and the Republican political class knew it.

Friday, Democratic pollster Geoff Garin reported that a poll completed Thursday showed two-to-one opposition to cutting funding for Planned Parenthood. Only strong "Tea Party" adherents favored such a

2). By agreeing to a deal – even one that was not entirely satisfactory to many of its "Tea Party" faction – the Republicans were able to put on the appearance they were willing to negotiate and compromise. Had they decided to allow the shutdown and go to war – especially about Planned Parenthood, which has, at one time or another, served one out of five women in America – they would have bet they could win a "shootout at OK Corral."

A shutdown scenario would not have ended in a "kumbaya" moment – or with any semblance of "win-win" imagery. It would have been someone's Waterloo. The odds were good that the gun-slinger who lay dead in the street after such a confrontation would have been Republican credibility with swing voters. Republicans would have been blamed not only for being intransigent, but also for being willing to risk our fragile economy to advance their ideological social agenda. That would have been the last thing swing voters wanted to hear– particularly independent suburban women.

3). Most important for the future is the role of the real base of the Republican Party – Wall Street and Big Business. The Republican CEO caucus – and the Chamber of Commerce – are hell bent on destroying unions, shrinking the public sector, lowering tax rates for millionaires, etc.

Frankly, they could care less about the right wing social agenda. In fact, they view social conservatives as cannon fodder to win elections. And once they had gotten all that they could on the economic side, they were not the least bit interested in jeopardizing their political fortunes or the economy simply to advance the Tea Party agenda.

Apparently the Chamber and the CEO class's chief operative, Karl Rove, weighed in heavily against a Republican shutdown.

Now that the funding bill for this year is about to be completed, the focus of Congress will turn to the much more fundamental issues surrounding the 2012 budget.

The Republicans want to replace Medicare with a system of vouchers for private insurance. In other words, they want to replace Medicare's guaranteed health care benefits and put seniors and the disabled at the mercy of private insurance companies. The Center on Budget Priorities conducted a study that estimated this would increase out-of-pocket health care costs for seniors by $6,000. It would in effect mean a $6,000 tax increase for America's senior citizens. And recall that the average Medicare beneficiary makes only $19,000 per year.

Right now, Medicaid guarantees that if you are old or disabled you can afford nursing care that will help you stay independent -- or nursing home care if you can't. The Republicans want to end that guarantee and replace it with a block grant to the states that will allow them to do whatever they want.

Republicans want to end the guarantee that when you're out of work or down on your luck, you and your kids won't starve for lack of money to buy food. That's right, they want to end the food stamp program and replace that with a block grant of funds to the states as well.

The Republican House Budget Chairman, Paul Ryan has proposed all of these measures in his budget plan, along with about $4.2 trillion of tax cuts over the next decade for corporations and the wealthy. In other words, Ryan has proposed pulling the plug on Medicare, Medicaid and food support in order to give tax breaks to millionaires.

In fact, Ryan's plan really doesn't deal with the deficit. It cuts $4.3 trillion in spending over ten years. Most of that goes to give the $4.2 trillion in additional tax cuts to the wealthy and big corporations.

There are many solid proposals to eliminate the long term deficit without doing it on the backs of the middle class. The people who benefited from the policies that caused the deficit – from the tax cuts for the rich, military contracts, and the out of control Wall Street speculation that sunk the economy – should be called upon to pay to fix the deficit – not seniors, students, the disabled and the poor.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Finally, and perhaps most insidious, the Republicans want to put a cap on how much the Federal Government can spend as a percentage of the Gross Domestic Product. They want the cap pegged at spending levels of the last decade. Never mind that that percentage of government spending to GDP will inevitably go up over the next several years because of the retirement of the baby boom generation. That fact makes their cap the equivalent of a requirement that the Government dramatically cut back on Medicare and Social Security benefits. Worse, such a cap would pretty much assure that the next time there is a major recession the government couldn't pass economic stimulus measures like the one that prevented the 2008 economic collapse from becoming another Great Depression.

The Tea Party caucus plans to demand that these provisions be agreed to as the price of their agreeing on an increase in the Federal debt limit.

Now, if the Federal government defaulted on its debts, virtually every economist agrees that would lead to another worldwide financial meltdown, and another Great Recession that would cost millions more Americans their jobs.

Holding the debt ceiling increase hostage to their radical economic demands is pretty much equivalent to a radical suicide bomber threatening to blow himself and everyone else up, if they don't agree to his radical religious demands. If they actually exercised this threat, the economy would go up in cloud of smoke.

If you're the Democrats negotiating with such fanatics, you might be prone to agree to pretty much anything to prevent such a cataclysm. But that is where the lessons from last week's confrontation come into play:

While the Wall Street/CEO Republicans really want to wring as much as possible out of Democrats in the way of less regulation, a smaller public sector and lower taxes for them, they are not likely to knowingly allow the Tea Party extremists to blow up the credit markets and the economy.

And though the Republican political class would love for the economy to stagnate between now and 2012 -- they certainly don't want to be caught with their hands on the grenade pin if the economy blows sky high.

The bottom line is that both of these factions of the Republican establishment will do whatever is necessary to prevent the Tea Party crowd from blowing the place to smithereens. They didn't allow them to cause a simple government shutdown over their extremist social policy goals, and they certainly aren't going to allow them to default on the nation's debts and explode the economy right out where everyone can watch.

That means that the President and Democrats have much stronger hand than some believe. While they can agree to negotiate over next year's budget, they can refuse to negotiate over the debt ceiling at all. They can credibly say that the American economy and the full faith and credit of the United States are simply not negotiable.

The Republicans only control the House of Representatives. They do not control the Senate or the White House. The only real power they have to insist on outcomes is the credibility of their willingness to engage in radical, destructive behavior. Their power comes from the belief that when you negotiate with the House Republicans it's as if you're playing a game of chicken with someone who is suicidal.

The deal that was struck last week demonstrated clearly that the CEO/Wall Street faction of the Republican Party – and its political elite – are not yet prepared to allow the inmates to run the asylum.

I have a very important Think Blue job for you.

He uses a 2 minute video at the beginning of the Fund for America presentation that is a recap of all the ways the Bush administration has messed up over the past 8 years. He told me that I could use it for the Think Blue website. I contacted Amy Dacey, who is the executive director for Fund for America. She sent me a different video that is the "Democracy Alliance Clip for Anna's Political Presentation."

Can you please ask him for the name of that video that he uses, or for a copy of the video if for some reason he has one with him.
I don't think it is going to be a problem, since I read in the paper the other day that the Fund for America is disbanding

THANKS!!!

Did Obama Force McCain To Flip-Flop On Afghanistan?

John McCain likes to paint Barack Obama as a naive follower on key national security issues. But by moving up his planned Afghanistan speech by two days to follow Obama's, and by agreeing that more U.S. troops are needed there, McCain appears to be following the Illinois Democrat on a major proposed shift for U.S. foreign policy.

Last month, Joint Chiefs chairman Adm. Michael Mullen said he needed at least three brigades shifted to Afghanistan, but that "troop constraints were preventing such a move."

Democrats trumpeted the statement as vindication, but McCain's campaign held its line and "resisted calls for more [U.S.] troops" in Afghanistan.

Indeed, in a policy paper published by Foreign Affairs last fall, McCain argued that any increase of forces in Afghanistan should be comprised of NATO troops instead of U.S. military personnel:

> "Our recommitment to Afghanistan must include increasing NATO forces, suspending the debilitating restrictions on when and how those forces can fight, expanding the training and equipping of the Afghan National Army through a long-term partnership with NATO to make it more professional and multiethnic, and deploying significantly more foreign police trainers. It must also address the current political deficiencies in judicial reform, reconstruction, governance, and anticorruption efforts."

According to the Boston Globe, that was a position the McCain campaign repeated last week :

> But McCain's advisers say that if he becomes president he would build on President Bush's decision to rely on NATO forces - which now have about 20,000 troops in Afghanistan - and would prod Pakistan to take on Taliban and Al Qaeda fighters camped inside its borders.
> "There is no easy answer, but clearly Pakistan needs to do more to crack down there," said [McCain senior foreign policy adviser Randy] Scheunemann.

Flash-forward to today. As the AP reported , McCain was set to discuss the economy, with an address on Afghanistan scheduled for Thursday. But the campaign ditched its planned focus on jobs (although not its banner) to follow Obama's lead -- not only by talking about national security but by joining him in calling for more American troops in Afghanistan.

Nearly an hour after Obama finished his D.C. speech, in which he repeated his call for "at least two additional combat brigades" to be sent to Afghanistan, McCain stepped to his podium across the country in New Mexico and tried to one-up his Democratic rival. As McCain's website now says, the Arizona Republican wants "aat least three additional brigades" for the fight in Afghanistan.

But if Adm. Mullen can't find the troops to provide for a three-brigade increase in Afghanistan, how does McCain (who, unlike Obama, doesn't have plans to begin removing forces from Iraq)?

And what has happened in the last few days to provoke McCain to shift his months-long opposition to sending more U.S. soldiers to Afghanistan?

Dear John,

You may not remember me -- Howie Wishne from Knox '71. I've used my middle, Brian, since Knox. I also don't know if this email address is valid. I can't believe you actually have time to teach a class at Georgetown. I'm writing because I've spent the last 35 years, since Reagan was elected, being a cynical aesthete, and I can't stand it anymore. I have also been a supporter of the Clintons. My family is all to the left of Sanders, but after watching the inquisition yesterday I want to help Hillary's campaign. Unfortunately I don't have money, but I do have time, energy and intelligence. After Knox, and some years in Boston, I earned a Master of Architecture degree from Princeton University. I've mostly had an academic career in architecture, with my last position being Dean of the School of Building Arts at the Savanna College of Art and Design. I live in Milwaukee, WI now. I would really like to do something significant which is why I'm writing to you. I also admire your career immensely, although not as much as your marathon times.

With Warm Regards,

H. Brian Wishne

Recirculating both the fact sheet and op-ed reflecting edits and comments from Jake, Nikki, and Joel. In answer to research: changed 20 to 40, and Trevor can provide calculations based on EIA data, if reporters need it, on the Mexico/ Canada trade point. It isn't written up neatly in one place online, unfortunately.

Joel, we pumped up the climate impacts but in discussing with Jake decided we do still need to address why she's making her position known, when she has previously said she will wait for the President to make a decision. Added a line about wanting to let voters know where she stands, and added a more expansive graf about making the US the leader in fighting climate change and becoming a clean energy superpower. Nipped and tucked elsewhere to keep the word count down.

Knowing we are still working out rollout timing - comms, policy, political, do you clear these to go forward to the book?

Thanks all.

Team,

Attaching a draft HRC op-ed which uses opposition to KXL as a pivot to talk about a plan for broad investment in modernizing our energy infrastructure and forging a climate compact between the US, Mexico, and Canada. These versions reflect initial edits and comments from the policy team, JDP, and Nikki.

The current thinking is to have HRC address this in her meeting with the building trades on Wednesday and roll out the fact sheet and op-ed in conjunction with that. Please send edits and clearances from comms, policy, research, and political to me, Trevor, Ben, and Pete no later than 10 am tomorrow so we can get this to HRC with plenty of time for her review and clearance.

Thanks,

Kristina

the recent re-engagement by FHFA regarding the State of CA PACE reserve, it would be great to catch up when you can carve our a moment.

In addition, Nat Simons recently invested in my company and we were having lunch recently when your name came up. Perhaps the three of us can get on the phone sometime soon.

I'll also be in DC on May 10-12 if you'd like to get together in person.

We are glad that the court is hearing this matter tonight. We hope that it is resolv ed and the Sanders campaign has access to their voter files right away, with adequate protections of our proprietary information, which we understand could be completed in short order. We also want a full accounting of the Sanders campaign's actions and assurance that no data or strategic insight from this breach be used by the campaign. This was an egregious breach of data and ethics and we hope that the Sanders campaign comes forward quickly with an accounting of their actions.

John-

Happy Ash Wednesday! If you are working from brandywine these days and need a break, let me know and the gal and I will arrange a visit.

I don't have a car but we do walk in rock creek, near pierce mill.

Hope all is well. Life is incredibly busy, savoring my days before my return.

Best to you and Mary,

Subject: "Sestak: The Dick Vermeil of Politics"

Joe Sestak for Senate

Dear John,

Town by town ... county by county ... our support grows across the state. We've completed over 250 campaign events in just over 3 1/2 weeks ... you can sense the momentum, the wind is at our back!

Just this week, here's what the Managing Editor of The Times Herald, the major newspaper for Montgomery County (home to the 3rd largest concentration of Democrats in the state - approximately 265,000) wrote in stating that "Specter .. needs to exit ... his time has come and gone... Joe Sestak's time is now"!

"Sestak: The Dick Vermeil of Politics"

... You don't encounter people like this every day. When you do, you have to seize the moment.

Such a moment will be presented to Pennsylvania's Democratic voters in the May primary, when Congressman Joe Sestak - as part of his self-described rebellion against the party's establishment - will be looking to send sacred cow Arlen Specter (elected to the U.S. Senate the same year the Eagles won the NFC title under Vermeil) to retirement.

I wouldn't say this lightly, but something struck me when Sestak made a recent visit ... This guy, if you swap the whistle for a neck tie, reminds me of Vermeil.

.... his heart is emblazoned on his sleeve. Beyond the issues, there is a refreshing sincerity. The same type of Vermeil-like passion smolders underneath for this former Navy admiral, who served in the Clinton administration.

... In today's mixed-up political landscape, Joe Sestak is the kind of Dick Vermeil-type guy we need representing our best interests - as opposed to playing footsie - in D.C.

Just as Vermeil took it personally when his quest was to give long-suffering Eagles' fans a real winner, Sestak feels a calling to do the same for the state he has tirelessly scoured since throwing his hat into the ring.

This was displayed in a 67-county tour in three-and-a-half weeks. The trek was both tiring and invigorating for the 58-year-old father of a grade schooler. "I came away more determined than ever," he said. "This state is not all it should be."

... Sestak. He was fully immersed in many of the other vital issues of the day, deftly bobbing and weaving through facts and figures like a heavyweight boxer ...

It is clear that Specter, even when making national headlines, has become yesterday's news. He is now nothing more than a caricature of himself. He needs to exit stage left, right or center - or wherever he is coming from these days - before he is escorted there by the state's loyal-to-a-fault electorate.

... Specter... his time has come and gone.

And Joe Sestak's time is now."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

OUR time is now. This race is up to YOU. Rank- and- file Democrats, Independents, and working familes are lining up behind our campaign.

We are at a crucial point to tipping this race in our favor, and are thus asking you to please make a contribution TODAY of $25, $50, $75, $100, $250, or whatever you are able to afford, to continue our ascent and to lock down the territories we have secured throughout the state.

We are 3 ½ months away from election day ... PLEASE HELP US TIP THE BALANCE OF THIS RACE ... by making a contribution now (as we execute phase two of our winter offensive).

Warmly,

Joe Sestak

P.S. With the same passion, drive, work-ethic, and energy that Dick Vermeil brought to coaching the NFC Champion Philadelphia Eagles and Super-Bowl Champion St. Louis Rams ... we have no doubt that we are going to win! Let's keep the momentum moving forward!

We addressed this in our meeting yesterday:
+speak strongly against anti-Semitism, and boycott.
+reaffirm the US commitment to Israel's security +anything else your research tells you the Jewish community is sensitive to.
This is NOT a NY or California issue,,,,it is a Florida one.

I simply got concerned as I listened to some of the talk today on the TV and radio. As you may remember , I picked Sylvia to be my Deputy Chief of Staff in the Clinton White House. I chose her because she is brilliant (Rhodes), really nice , informed , and smart all rolled into one , but most importantly to me because she knows how to run a big , complex organization and run it effectively. Any large public or private organization I wanted managed and managed well , my first choice to do so would be Sylvia. All you have to do is look at the job she did at the NEC , Treasury , White House , OMB , Gates Foundation , and Walmart to judge her capability.

I am loving my work here at DOE. Ernie (who is terrific) and I talked about several different positions but I really think this is perfect for me. He has allowed me to build out a strong team and we have already greatly improved DOE engagement with cities, states, tribes and important stakeholders. Being in the federal government for the first time took some getting used to, but not being from the DC frame allows me to view things a bit differently from almost everyone in this building. By being a more relevant resources, I am truly optimistic that DOE can affect significant change at the city and state level. I hope we can connect, even a short meeting with you and Kevin Knobloch would be amazingly productive. Or, a drink, in your copious amounts of free time.

I am enjoying DC and get back home every three weeks or so. My husband Pete is back in Colorado but recently we have talked about him moving out here. That would put a whole new spin on how long I might work in DC (i.e. past this administration).

While she has acknowledged that her own positions have evolved over time, she is and has been a supporter of marriage equality as a matter of policy and a matter of law, as she said in 2013. Hillary is glad that 37 states now have marriage equality, largely as a result of federal judges finding that a constitutional right, and she hopes the Supreme Court will take the opportunity to make marriage equality the law of the land.

constitutional right is a matter of law.

During the 2014 interview with NPR, she was talking about the impact of activism in the states, and her support for that activism moving the issue forward at the state level "I fully endorse the efforts by activists who work state by state and in fact that is what is working." And again, she'd already made it clear in 2013 that she personally supports marriage equality as a matter of policy and law. In other words she supported the idea that it might take time for each state to come around. But that eventually we would need a federal constitutional ruling -- she always believed that was the appropriate outcome.

She also noted that once she was no longer Secretary of State and able to comment on domestic political issues she announced her full support for marriage equality.

A few days after the NPR interview she re-itereated her support during a CNN town hall: "I made a very clear statement when I got out of the State Department. I was free to comment on domestic political issues that I fully support marriage equality."

I'd also note that t the Obama administration itself never announced its support for a constitutional right to marry on equal protection grounds until a month ago when it filed the brief in the SCOTUS case that HRC was asked about it. Prior to that, DOJ had only argued that bans on same-sex marriage should be subject to heightened scrutiny. Yet no one says DOJ flip-flopped when it endorsed an even stronger position last month - it was viewed as a natural extention of its previous positions in support of same-sex marriage.

Subject: Children

Dear John,

Most children go through a phase when they say "No" to everything: No to broccoli, no to baths, no to bedtime. Thankfully, though, they grow out of it.

I wonder when the Republicans are going to finally grow out of their "No" phase. For them it's been no to health care, no to financial reform, no to protecting the environment.

America is confronting too many serious problems right now for us to put up with this kind of obstructionist behavior. We can't afford to ignore these crises-we've got to face them head on. That's why I need you to help me reach my goal of getting 500 donors by May 21 right now.

Please click here to donate $500 or $750 to my campaign so I can reach my goal and help bring an end to the gridlock in Washington.

It seems like over the past few months, the "No's" have been coming fast and furious. Just last week, when President Obama announced his nomination of Elena Kagan to the Supreme Court, Republicans threatened to obstruct and could make her confirmation process as difficult as possible.

The only way to counteract all this obstruction is to make sure we have as many progressives as we can in Congress. Progressives advocate progress-finding solutions to problems and making our world a better place-and there's no better antidote to what ails us in Washington right now than that.

I'm determined to help President Obama keep things moving in the right direction by making my voice heard, but I can't do it without your help. I've got a crucial goal to meet-500 donors by May 21-and if I can reach it I know I can win in November.

Please give as much as you can to my campaign today and help ensure that we have enough progressive voices in Congress to drown out the Republican chorus of "No's."

It's not easy standing up in the face of all that negativity. But knowing you're behind me gives me the strength to keep on saying, "Yes!"

Thank you,

Kirsten Gillibrand

Once again Mike Pompeo's campaign finds itself needing to apologize for bigoted attacks on opponent Raj Goyle.

An enormous electronic billboard with the words "VOTE AMERICAN VOTE POMPEO" has been flashing its message over Wichita rooftops for at least the last two evenings.

CAN YOU SIGN THIS PETITION DEMANDING MIKE POMPEO TAKE DOWN THOSE BILLBOARDS?

Remember how this summer's "Turban Topper" national scandal rocked the Pompeo campaign? You would have thought Mike and his cronies would have learned their lesson. But instead, they got The Duke involved (yes, that's John Wayne below):

IF THIS IS OFFENSIVE TO YOU, PLEASE JOIN US TODAY BY CLICKING HERE TO SIGN A PETITION DEMANDING MIKE POMPEO TAKE DOWN THAT BILLBOARD!

Just now the Goyle campaign sent a letter to Mike Pompeo's campaign asking Mike to stop using this illegal and offensive advertisement.

The Kansas Democratic Party is also preparing to file a formal complaint with the Federal Election Commission because the electronic billboard does not have any disclaimer as is required by campaign law.

This story is just getting started, we'll keep you posted . . . but the best way to help is to sign the petition today!

On to victory.

Μια θετική συγκυρία για την Ελλάδα

02.09.2015 : 12:35

Βάσει του παρελθόντος των ΗΠΑ ο ελληνικός λαός έχει κάθε δικαίωμα να είναι επιφυλακτικός απέναντι στη στάση των Αμερικανών αξιωματούχων για θέματα ελληνικού ενδιαφέροντος. Ως μέλη της ελληνοαμερικανικής κοινότητας που έχει αγωνιστεί στην Ουάσιγκτον για τα ελληνικά θέματα αλλά και για θέματα σχετικά με την Ορθοδοξία στα υψηλότερα κλιμάκια της αμερικανικής διοίκησης τα τελευταία 80 χρόνια, έχουμε γίνει μάρτυρες κακών πολιτικών.

Σήμερα γράφουμε αυτό το άρθρο για να τονίσουμε ότι τα πράγματα έχουν αλλάξει. Το πιο ελπιδοφόρο είναι ότι το Νο 2 του Λευκού Οίκου, ο αντιπρόεδρος Joe Biden, ανήρτησε στον «τοίχο» του το όνομα με το οποίο του απευθύνθηκα δημόσια αμέσως μετά την εκλογή του το 2008, «Joe Bidenopoulos». Ο Biden παραμένει ένας πιστός φίλος, ενώ τόσο ο πρόεδρος Ομπάμα όσο και ο υπουργός Οικονομικών Jack Lew θα πρέπει να θεωρούνται οι καλύτεροι φίλοι της Ελλάδας, όπως αυτό φάνηκε κατά τη διάρκεια των πρόσφατων διαπραγματεύσεων για να παραμείνει η Ελλάδα στην Ε.Ε.

Οι συνθήκες μειώνουν σημαντικά την προοπτική η Αμερική να αγνοήσει ζητήματα σχετικά με την Ελλάδα και την Ορθοδοξία υπέρ της Τουρκίας. Επιπλέον, όλοι όσοι κατέχουν σημαντικές θέσεις στο Καπιτώλιο, στη Βουλή Εξωτερικών Υποθέσεων και στις Επιτροπές Εξωτερικών Υποθέσεων της Γερουσίας είναι φιλέλληνες και γνώστες των ελληνικών θεμάτων.

Τι σημαίνει όμως αυτό για την πολύ κρίσιμη στιγμή της Ελλάδας, τη συνεχιζόμενη κατοχή της Κύπρου αλλά και τα ζητήματα που αφορούν το Οικουμενικό Πατριαρχείο; Σημαίνει κάτι πολύ θετικό.

Ως προς την οικονομική κρίση στην Ελλάδα, η αμερικανική συμμετοχή σημαίνει ότι για πρώτη φορά η κυβέρνηση των ΗΠΑ εργάζεται μαζί με την ελληνοαμερικανική κοινότητα για την εξεύρεση εφικτών λύσεων ώστε να διευκολυνθεί η Ελλάδα στην επίτευξη των δημοσιονομικών στόχων της και να γίνει η επανεκκίνηση της ελληνικής οικονομίας. Εάν η Ελλάδα καταφέρει να προχωρήσει σε σημαντικές μεταρρυθμίσεις, η Αμερική θα βρει τρόπους να βοηθήσει την Ελλάδα στην προσπάθεια για την απομείωση του χρέους.

Για την Κύπρο θα σημαίνει ότι η Τουρκία θα αποδεχθεί σταδιακά τη θέση της Αμερικής για το τέλος της κατοχής του νησιού. Ο αντιπρόεδρος Biden έχει βαθιά γνώση του θέματος και παραμένει πιστός στη λογική της συνύπαρξης των Ελληνοκυπρίων και Τουρκοκυπρίων. Εχει επίσης εντείνει τις προσπάθειές του να κατανοήσει η Τουρκία το ότι η αποχώρησή της από την Κύπρο θα είναι απολύτως συμφέρουσα για το μέλλον της. Δεν είναι τυχαίο άλλωστε ότι το ενδιαφέρον της Τουρκίας για το κυπριακό αέριο έχει συνδεθεί με την πρόσφατη συνειδητοποίηση της Αγκυρας ότι τα χρήματα που ξοδεύονται για τα στρατεύματά της στην Κύπρο θα μπορούσαν να χρησιμοποιηθούν για την άμυνα της χώρας.

Σχετικά με το Οικουμενικό Πατριαρχείο, η Τουρκία δεν έχει ακόμη ανοίξει τη Θεολογική Σχολή της Χάλκης, δεν έχει επιστρέψει την περιουσία του Οικουμενικού Πατριαρχείου και έχει αμελήσει να αναγνωρίσει τον Οικουμενικό Πατριάρχη ως τον πνευματικό ηγέτη της δεύτερης μεγαλύτερης χριστιανικής Εκκλησίας στον κόσμο. Παρ' όλα αυτά οι σχέσεις της κυβέρνησης με το Οικουμενικό Πατριαρχείο έχουν βελτιωθεί, και ενώ οι σχέσεις της Τουρκίας με τη Δύση έχουν χειροτερέψει τα τελευταία χρόνια, οι σχέσεις της με το Οικουμενικό Πατριαρχείο έχουν μείνει σταθερές.

Πριν από λίγα χρόνια ο αντιπρόεδρος Biden περιέγραψε τον κ.κ. Βαρθολομαίο ως έναν από τους πιο ταπεινούς ανθρώπους που έχει γνωρίσει ποτέ. Ο πρόεδρος Ομπάμα και φιλέλληνες στο αμερικανικό Κογκρέσο στέκονται στο πλευρό του Πατριάρχη και στηρίζουν την άποψη ότι η Τουρκία θα πρέπει να επιτρέψει τη θρησκευτική του ελευθερία.

Οπως λοιπόν μπορείτε να αντιληφθείτε, η συγκεκριμένη χρονική στιγμή είναι ευνοϊκή για τα ελληνικά θέματα. Αλλά σε ένα διαρκώς μεταβαλλόμενο περιβάλλον, αυτό της Ανατολικής Μεσογείου, κανείς δεν γνωρίζει πόσο θα κρατήσουν αυτές οι θετικές συνθήκες. Φαίνεται όμως ότι η πιο ισχυρή δύναμη στον κόσμο, η Αμερική, διατίθεται να χρησιμοποιήσει αυτή τη δύναμή της για να βοηθήσει την Ελλάδα.

ANDY and MIKE MANATOS*
The Stars Are Aligning in the US for Hellenic and Orthodox Issues
09.02.2015 : 12:35

In light of the United States' past record, the people of Greece have every right to be wary of American officials becoming deeply involved in Greek matters. As members of a Greek-American family that has been fighting in Washington, DC for Hellenic and Orthodox issues at the highest levels of the American government for over 80 years, no one has witnessed more of these bad policies up close than we.

However, we write this piece to let you know that today is different. The stars seem to be aligning. Most encouraging, the #2 person in the White House, Vice President Joe Biden, framed and proudly displayed on his wall the headline of my publically referring to him as Joe "Bidenopoulos" immediately following his election in 2008. Biden remains a lifetime loyal friend. And our President, Barack Obama, together with his Secretary of Treasury, Jack Lew, may be referred to as Greece's best friends in recent negotiations to keep Greece in the EU.

One of the stars at the moment, believe it or not, is your traditionally bellicose neighbor Turkey. The very Prime Minister who, just a few months ago, said, "Americans enjoy watching our children die" has shifted his rhetoric and in recent weeks seems to have concluded that he needs America as much or more than we need him. This circumstance significantly reduces the prospect of the US again overlooking Hellenic and Orthodox problems in an effort to curry favor with Turkey.

Additionally, those on Capitol Hill who occupy leadership positions on the House Foreign Affairs and Senate Foreign Relations Committees are knowledgeable and powerful philhellenes. And, unlike the prevailing current in years past, they hail from both parties -- Republicans and Democrats.

So what does this mean for Greece's Great Depression, the continued occupation of Cyprus and the religious freedom of the Ecumenical Patriarchate? The answer -- it could mean a great deal.

In regard to Greece's economic crisis, American involvement means that, for the first time, our government -- from the most senior officials at the White House on down -- is working with us in the Greek-American community to try to find feasible efforts that can ease Greek budget demands and stimulate economic growth for the Greek people. And, if Greece is able to reform some practices that virtually everyone, including most of the Greek people, believes need reforming, America may see ways of helping to ease Greece's paralyzing debt repayments.

For Cyprus, it could mean that Turkey will become increasingly receptive to America calling for an end to its illegal occupation. Vice President Biden has an unparalleled knowledge of this subject and remains tremendously committed to the wellbeing of Greek and Turkish Cypriots. The Vice President has also maintained his effort to help Turkey understand why its withdrawal from Cyprus is truly in its best long-term interest. And, fortuitously, Turkey's few years of interest in Cypriot natural gas has been joined by its newly realized belief that its troops on Cyprus and Cypriot budget expenditures may be better used to defend its homeland. This is an additional incentive to Turkey ending its over forty-one-year occupation.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Regarding the Ecumenical Patriarchate, Turkey has still not reopened the Halki Seminary, has not enabled the properties of the Ecumenical Patriarch to be returned and has neglected to recognize the Ecumenical Patriarch as the spiritual head of the second largest Christian Church in the world. However, the government's relationship with the Ecumenical Patriarchate has improved in the last decade. And interestingly, as Turkey's relationship with the west degenerated badly in recent years, its relationship with the Ecumenical Patriarchate has not gotten worse.

A few years ago, Vice President Biden described Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew as one of the two most Christ-like people he had ever met. President Barack Obama and philhellenes within the U.S. Congress also regard the Ecumenical Patriarch with the highest esteem and strongly support Turkey allowing his religious freedom.

As you can see, at this very moment, from the American perspective the stars are more aligned for Hellenic and Orthodox issues than every before. But, in this swiftly changing Eastern Mediterranean world, we have no way of knowing how long these fortuitous circumstances will last. It appears as though the most powerful country in the world, America, is primed to use some of its power to help Hellenic and Orthodox issues. And, you can rest assured, that from our inside vantage point we will be sure to inform you if change threatens the current orientations.

*Andy Manatos is President and Mike Manatos Senior Vice President of Manatos & Manatos, which the Washington Post called "one of Washington's most powerful lobbying firms," and US News & World Report referred to as "lobbying royalty." For over 80 years and three generations, the Manatos family has been working in or with the US federal government to promote Hellenic and Orthodox issues.

Grieving and Mourning Israel/Palestine &

Communicating Across Differences

Sunday Sept. 14th

Are you upset about what is happening in Israel/ Palestine?

Are you tired of the vitriolic discourse with friends, family members, or on social media?

Do you want to learn skills to communicate compassionately and effectively across differences? Want a safe place to grieve and mourn?

… If so, this workshop is for you.

Come meet others who care deeply about ending the suffering in the Middle East, and learn how to effectively communicate with others with whom you might not agree!

We are offering a 4-hour workshop where you will learn techniques to deal with your distress, rage, and upset about the situation in Israel and Palestine and also have opportunities to learn and practice skills for hearing those who don't agree with you and expressing yourself more effectively. You will leave feeling empowered to engage in healthy discourse, even with those with whom you disagree.

The workshop will include various mediums for self-expression and compassionate listening and speaking as well as teaching and coaching in Empathic Communication and conflict resolution.

If you and a friend or close relative are struggling to talk about this important issue, we encourage both of you to attend this workshop together – you will have an opportunity to hear each other and deepen your understanding and compassion. And of course you are welcome to come alone.

When: Sunday, September 14th Time: 1:00 – 5:00pm

Where: Berkeley near the U.C. campus - you will be given the address once you register.

NOT IN Northern California? One of the ways that we at the Network of Spiritual Progressives contribute to peace making is to provide trainings on Empathic Communication that affirms the humanity of those with whom we disagree, as well as how to get beyond our emotional blocks so that we can think rationally about how best to achieve peace and justice in our world. You probably know someone in the Bay Area who would benefit from this kind of training even if you yourself can't make it, so please send them this information and put it on your Facebook or other social media pages. If you want us to do this kind of training wherever you live in the U.S. or Canada and you can assemble 40-50 people to be part of it, let us know, please, and we'll see how best to work out the details. cat@spiritualprogressives.org

Who: Rabbi Michael Lerner and Cat J. Zavis

Rabbi Lerner has written extensively on this subject and in his latest book, Embracing Israel/ Palestine, explains the psychological underpinnings of the conflict and the importance of compassion for both sides. Cat J. Zavis is a mediator, trainer and coach in Empathic Communication and conflict resolution. She has conducted trainings for mediators, collaborative attorneys, therapists and coaches as well as spiritual centers, divorced parents and others either in conflict themselves or working to support others navigate conflict.

My friend and disability rights champion,

National Council on Disability (NCD) Executive Director Rebecca Cokley expressed support for the national launch of the

#RevUp #VoteDisabilty campaign held February 25th in Houston, Texas:

"I send my personal greetings to all of you who are gathered at the Rev Up Texas rally and I wish I could be there today!

The ADA insures full participation and community integration of all people with disabilities.
Involvement in the democratic process is a Constitutionally guaranteed right.
Participating in that process and voting for the candidate of your choice, no matter which party, is fundamental in exercising our rights.

My dad's family was from Texas, and I know he'd get a kick out of you all gathering there today.
As a child I remember walking his ballot in from his wheelchair accessible van to the polling place because the location wasn't accessible.
The volunteers on Election Day would ask him repeatedly why he wouldn't vote absentee and he'd say "I have the right to GO and vote.

I'm damn well going to exercise it!"
That the case in 1988 and is still the case for voters with disabilities almost 30 years later.

Register to vote, educate yourself and others on the issues, and most importantly go to the polls and vote.

Celebrate ADA. Celebrate disability rights. Lead on."

Subject: Questions About Your CAP Return

Hi John,

I've got a few questions about your personal transition (back to CAP) -- sorry, I know you love these:

1. Do you have a sense of what your ongoing title and responsibilities for PTT will be as of 1/21/09, and the timeline for transitioning out from PTT? Will you continue to get payment from PTT?

2. During your time of transitioning out of PTT, are limits on what you can do in your CAP/CAPAF hat? Those limits would either arise from PTT rules, OR if we have optics concerns on our end that we should sort out (e.g., meetings with donors, etc.) Should I be in touch with Cassandra or one of the lawyers about any limits that might arise from PTT?

3. I understand you are speaking at DA this weekend -- inquiring minds here are interested in what hat you are wearing when you speak there -- PTT, personal or CAPAF?

Thanks John.

Best,
D

I'd like to introduce you to Andy Schapiro who will work with you and Ted to bring on board the people in the vp working group with regard to compliance with the transition code of conduct. Andy, please share your contact info with Mark and Ted so they can follow up.

Given the attention that is being paid to the role of federally registered lobbyist in the campaign, I have to ask if you intend to add any federally registered lobbyist to your working group? If so, we should have a discussion about how best to structure their role. In addition to this email address, you can reach me via cell at 202.460.7688.

Catholics United Condemns Political Attacks by "Pro-Life" Groups

Urges "Society for Truth and Justice" and "Operation Rescue" to Abandon Divisive Campaign and Join Growing Movement for Real Solutions to Abortion

Washington, D.C. – Catholics United today expressed grave concerns over an ad campaign from the group Society for Truth and Justice and Operation Rescue founder Randall Terry, which urges the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) to deny communion to "pro-abortion politicians," and to condemn Catholics who vote for those same politicians. Catholics United believes the campaign and an affiliated protest – scheduled for Friday, June 13 at the USCCB's meeting in Orlando – constitute both a shameful attempt to use the Catholic sacrament of Communion as a political weapon, and a means of perpetuating decades of the acrimony and division that have prevented real progress toward ending abortions in the U.S.

Catholics United further called on the Society for Truth and Justice and Operation Rescue to work with leaders from across the ideological and political spectrum to craft real solutions to the abortion issue. A growing body of evidence – including a Catholics United study using data from Kansas and an upcoming 50-state study by Catholics in Alliance for the Common Good – suggests that providing economic and social supports for pregnant women and families are the most effective ways to prevent abortions.

"Many of these organizations' supporters are undoubtedly motivated by a profound and commendable desire to preserve and protect human life at all stages," said Chris Korzen, executive director of Catholics United and co-author of A Nation for All: How the Catholic Vision of the Common Good Can Save America from the Politics of Division. "Unfortunately, the leaders of these organizations are pursing strategies that are counterproductive to their stated objectives. This type of political rhetoric and campaign intervention is directly responsible for many of the failed policies of the last decade that have proved to be a disaster – by all reasonable measures – for human life and dignity."

The ad campaign and USCCB protest are eerily reminiscent of a 2004 concerted effort by the Republican Party and far right Catholic political organizations to convince Catholics that Senator John Kerry's position on abortion rendered him unfit for their vote. Although theologically inaccurate, this well-funded and well-organized campaign may have been the decisive factor in securing President Bush's win in Ohio.

"It's time to move beyond the failed policies of the past and address the real threats to the common good: war, poverty, and lack of health care and education, the environment, and our dire economic situation," said Korzen. "It's also time to stop using the abortion issue to divide voters and to start bringing Americans together around common ground solutions. The Society for Truth and Justice and Operation Rescue's action are bad for Catholics, bad for the unborn, and bad for America."

Dear Ralph Nader, Pete Davis, Al Norman, Adolph Reed,….

Thank you for your letter. I am indeed proud of my advocacy on behalf of women and women's economic empowerment over several decades. I know that in today's economy, women are disproportionately bearing the burden of tough economic times. Women are disproportionately poor and tens of millions of women are financially insecure - just one paycheck away from poverty.

It is in part because of my support for economic advancement of all women that I am a strong, and longstanding supporter of increasing the minimum wage, not just for some companies, but for all US companies. Currently 60% of all minimum wage workers are women, and many of them are moms. Raising the minimum wage to $10.10 should not be an issue subject to political polarization. It makes economic sense because those people who get a raise will spend it buying goods and services, fueling economic activity in their local communities. It also makes budgetary sense because it will reduce expenditures by the government. The Center for American Progress recently released a study that found an increase of the minimum wage to $10.10 an hour will reduce SNAP expenditures - popularly referred to as food stamps - by $4.6 billion a year. That means that companies that pay below the minimum wage are in essence relying on government subsidies to ensure their workers do not go hungry. I hope that those that rail against government spending would support this increase in the minim wage that will reduce such spending. But I also believe raising the minimum wage is the moral thing to do as well because I simply believe that in America, if you work a job full-time, you shouldn't live in poverty. I believe that should be a basic bargain for all Americans.

However, I know wages aren't the only issue for women at the bottom of the economic ladder. Women suffer disproportionately from a lack of flexibility policies in American companies. Seventy percent of low-income women do not have access to a single paid sick day and the United States is the only developed d nation that does not require paid maternity leave. As a country, we need to do far better helping all parents balance their responsibilities at home and at work. Too often parents, especially low-income workers, have to choose and that is not good for our companies or our families.

These are policies that I am happy to discuss because they are the issues I have fought for over the course of my career. I am proud of my work to underscore the importance of a minimum wage increase for women the last time the federal government increased the minimum wage in 1996. And I continued that advocacy as a Senator from New York. I know these issues are central to both our economic growth as a nation and to the American promise of shared prosperity we all hold so dear.

Sincerely,

From: Cheryl Mills [mailto:cheryl.mills@gmail.com]

[Subtitle:] When it comes to fighting income inequality, what's good for workers is often good for corporations, too

Income inequality is fast becoming the top domestic issue of the nascent 2016 presidential campaign, and Hillary Clinton is searching for a winning message on the issue.

Tucked among tea-leaf interpretations of her Midwest travel plans and yoga regimen, The New York Times reported that she has "talked to friends and donors in business about how to tackle income inequality without alienating businesses or castigating the wealthy."

While this could be seen as the latest in a long line of shady Clintonian triangulations, it actually gets at a longstanding Democratic dilemma over whether to make big business the enemy or catalyze the private sector to support liberal policy objectives. Elizabeth Warren, the populist Democratic senator from Massachusetts, says the game is rigged. But Clinton seems more disposed to tweak the game in certain areas, rather than tear it down.

We shouldn't be too quick to blast this instinct as plutocratic cronyism. It's politically prudent to avoid making legislative enemies of powerful stakeholders. But it's even wiser to give business a stake in fighting inequality. And luckily for Clinton, there is a path to combating inequality that would benefit workers and business alike.

Clinton is already tacking toward a political sweet spot on the issue. Taking the global perspective of an ex-chief diplomat, she framed inequality as an issue of basic national well-being in a speech in May. "As secretary of State," she said, "I saw the way extreme inequality has corrupted other societies, hobbled growth, and left entire generations alienated and unmoored."

The private sector similarly sees inequality as a real long-term problem that jeopardizes its interests. As Elizabeth Bruenig recently pointed out in The Week, a report from the Harvard Business School warned that "in the long run, American business will suffer from an inadequate workforce, a population of depleted consumers, and large blocs of anti-business voters."

This gives business common cause with Americans struggling to get by. Among average Americans, much of the anxiety about inequality is really anxiety about stagnant incomes, not about launching a class war. It has been a lost quarter-century for the middle class, as the real median income has barely budged since the 1980s.

There happens to be a host of ways we can give people greater economic security. And these reforms would be mutually beneficial, both putting money in people's pockets and improving our pro-growth economic climate.

For instance, providing greater support for families with children would help ease their financial pressures. A federal paid family leave program would save the vast majority of workers from losing wages while caring for a new child. Stronger government support with child expenses, daycare, and early childhood education would similarly help parents and relieve financial stress while promoting child development.

For their part, businesses would keep workers who could exit the workforce altogether in the face of prohibitive child-care costs. This is good for employers, since they would retain valuable employees and avoid needless training costs.

Social insurance often provides a third-way alternative to both laissez faire acceptance of rising inequality and heavy-handed regulation to counteract it. Unemployment insurance, for instance, is a public alternative to severance pay. And the Earned Income Tax Credit boosts eroding market wages without a regulatory mandate on business, like a higher minimum wage.

But these programs must be updated to meet the market's modern inequalities. We should make unemployment benefits more generous and more readily available, recognizing that bouts of joblessness are a product of the economy, instead of blaming it on slackers who "just want to sit around," as Speaker John Boehner (R-Ohio) recently put it. And there are already proposals from both sides of the aisle to let the EITC provide more support to more people more regularly.

These government interventions are investments, not entitlements — and they're smart ones at that. Our economy gains when more people are economically secure. They generate more economic activity and gain new flexibility to join innovative start-up companies or become entrepreneurs.

Government investments in young children, in particular, are thought to save huge sums of money in the long run. Economist James Heckman estimates that investment in early childhood education yields a 7 to 10 percent annual rate of return to society — a view endorsed by former Fed Chairman Ben Bernanke. Every $1 spent on early education produces as much as $12 in long-term savings by increasing lifetime earnings, reducing future social welfare usage, and avoiding criminal justice expenses.

Fighting inequality both protects individual security and shores up our fiscal future. This makes intuitive sense: the health of our consumer-driven economy will always rest on the state of working- and middle-class families.

Clinton can tackle inequality without alienating business. If economists like Thomas Piketty are right that growing inequality is an inevitability of 21st century capitalism, then good policy will seek to preserve the vibrant upside of our economy while cushioning against its predictable dislocations. When it comes to curbing inequality, what's good for Americans is good for business, too.

New York Times: First Draft: "A Bit More Cash to Pave the Way for a Clinton Candidacy"

By Amy Chozick

September 25, 2014, 10:48 a.m. EDT

The "super PAC" Ready for Hillary plans to convene as many as 400 donors and supporters in Manhattan in November, a last-ditch effort to raise money and lay the groundwork for Hillary Rodham Clinton's increasingly likely 2016 presidential campaign.

Ready for Hillary, which aims to build a voter database ahead of Mrs. Clinton's candidacy, has raised more than $10 million, and told First Draft it expects to raise more during its national finance council meeting, to be held at the Sheraton Hotel on Nov. 20-21. Presumably, it will be the last such meeting before Mrs. Clinton announces early next year whether she will run.

As part of the meeting, the group will host a dinner for donors who have given the maximum of $25,000 and will brief supporters in panel discussions about what they can do to help Mrs. Clinton get elected.

In addition to list-building, Ready for Hillary anticipates attacks that Mrs. Clinton would probably encounter as a candidate. On Wednesday, after the Republican National Committee accused Mrs. Clinton of having an overly cozy relationship with Wall Street, Ready for Hillary said it would move its banking accounts from Bank of America to the Amalgamated Bank, the majority union-owned financial institution of choice for the Occupy Wall Street movement, according to Tracy Sefl, a senior adviser to Ready for Hillary.

according to the latest Roanoke College Poll.

In fact, the survey finds that a majority of Virginians would prefer Democrat Clinton over Republican Paul, by a 51 percent to 35 percent margin.

Clinton leads New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie by 10 points, 47 percent to 37 percent; and she leads Wisconsin Rep. Paul Ryan by a 50 percent to 37 percent margin.

The poll interviewed 630 registered voters in Virginia between Sept. 13 and 19 and has a margin of error of plus or minus 3.9 percentage points.

No Republican or Democrat has announced a bid for the presidency yet.

Paul has said he will not make a decision until sometime early next year, but has been making regular trips to the first-in-the-nation caucus state of Iowa and to the first-in-the-nation primary state of New Hampshire.

Virginia, with 13 Electoral College votes, used to be a reliable Republican state in presidential elections, and as recently as 2000 and 2004 went for Republican George W. Bush.

Changing demographics, especially in fast-growing northern Virginia outside Washington, cut the Democrats' way in 2008 and 2012, when Democrat Barack Obama carried Virginia.

Even so, it seems likely the state will be at least an early battleground in 2016.

MSNBC: "The agony and the ecstasy of the Clintons at CGI"

By Alex Seitz-Wald

September 25, 2014, 11:04 a.m. EDT

The Clinton Global Initiative, the signature annual event of America's preeminent public family, concluded Wednesday night, and now comes the search for meaning. Is it a cronyistic confab of global elite? An innovation in charity that could help save the world? Political theater ahead of another likely Clinton presidential run?

The only correct answer is all of the above.

Almost everything about the Clintons – good, bad and otherwise – was on display this week, from the big-money deal-making, to their love-hate relationship with the press, to the magnetic power of a controversial family that has managed to captivate America for more than two decades.

If you want to understand the Clintons, the ballroom of the Sheraton in Times Square was a good place to start.

First, the good: Despite being the nominal point of the entire event, the charitable work of CGI was often overshadowed by the glitz of celebrity and the cynicism of politics. But the good is undeniable, even to the most ardent detractors: 430 million people in 180 countries have been affected in some way over the past 10 years by charitable "commitments to action" from CGI attendees, according to a new analysis.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This year, there were 188 new commitments from the corporations, governments, and nonprofits that make up CGI's membership, including a major new campaign from soda makers to reduce caloric consumption from their products, along with efforts to educate girls in developing countries and save African elephants.

The elitism problem: There's a reason the Clintons were attacked from both the right and left during CGI: The event is basically their elitism perception problem brought vividly to life.

Even in this high-powered crowd, the Clintons' position is secure at the apex of a pyramid made up of people accustomed to sitting atop their own hierarchies. That includes the current president of the United States, who came to send more praise in the Clintons' direction than the reverse.

The Wall Street problem: In an interview with CNBC Tuesday, Bill Clinton defended corporations who move abroad to avoid paying American taxes. That night, at a dinner hosted by Goldman Sachs in honor of its program to empower female entrepreneurs, his wife, an all-but-certain Democratic presidential candidate in 2016, joked about "all my banking friends."

The next morning, Hillary Clinton ceded the main stage to Goldman CEO Lloyd Blankfein, giving him more than 10 minutes on a coveted platform to promote the bank's charitable work. "This isn't the first time we've all met," Blankfein joked in a moment that quickly became fodder for the Republican National Committee.

"This summer has solidified the fact that Hillary Clinton is out of touch with Americans between spending all of her time with millionaires," RNC spokesperson Kirsten Kukowski told msnbc.

It's a complaint echoed almost exactly by the RNC's ideological opposites. Neil Sroka, the communications director for Democracy for America, founded by Howard Dean, told msnbc that Bill Clinton's comments on corporate inversions were "wildly out of step with both the American people and the Democratic Party."

"It showed a real disconnection and showed just how captured President Clinton is by the CEOs and the organizations around him," Sroka added.

Let's make a deal: Bill Clinton often says the Constitution should be subtitled, "Let's make a deal," and he has praised the admittedly "ugly" deal-making in Steven Spielberg's film "Lincoln."

CGI may be the best place to see Clintonian pragmatism in practice, both its benefits and unseemly side. Take Hillary Clinton's work with the CEO of Goldman. The "optics" are terrible, but he was there to announce that his company was expanding tenfold its commitment to help female entrepreneurs in the developing world. Does the end justify the means?

"You've got to start with the end in mind," Bill Clinton said on a panel with Cisco CEO John Chambers, a major Republican donor who has become a key supporter of CGI and a friend of the Clintons. "If you can put a price on it, and make it transparent, you can get people that you wouldn't expect to support you."

Chambers recently interviewed Hillary Clinton in front of thousands of his company's employees. "Afterwards, I had a bunch of Republicans come up and say, John, 'I'm not sure we can't beat her,'" he said.

In a dark mood, it's easy to look at CGI and see what the critics of the non-profit industry call "conscience laundering." But if Bill Clinton sells his wealthy patrons a clean conscious, he gets in return a check or a commitment that can improve the life of someone somewhere.

The media problem: Hillary Clinton and the press have a famously dysfunctional relationship, but the cameras keep coming. CGI attracted about 1,100 members of press, according to organizers (many, if not most, were foreign).

Reporters were kept in the basement and discouraged from interacting with attendees or panelists, escorted everywhere – including, at least on the first day, to the bathroom – by college-aged volunteers.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

When The New York Times' Amy Chozick asked a spokesperson about the practice, he replied dismissively with a link to a Clinton initiative to promote sanitation in Africa – "Since you are so interested in bathrooms and C.G.I."

It's just as telling that the political press corps, from the editor of The Washington Post on down, immediately seized on the bathroom story, since it confirmed everything they think to be true about the Clintons' view of the Fourth Estate. (It's not the first time Clinton handlers have put reporters in a bathroom.)

Foreign policy: At a time when foreign policy is back at the forefront of the national conversation, liberals might also pause at a reminder of the Clintons' long friendship with John McCain, the Senate's preeminent war hawk, and his wife, Cindy, an adviser to a Clinton Foundation project who appeared on a panel with Hillary Clinton on Wednesday afternoon. Earlier this year, John McCain invited Hillary Clinton to his own ideas forum in Arizona.

Palace intrigue: The personal relationships among the Clinton family members have long captivated Americans, for better or worse, and will no doubt continue if Hillary Clinton decides to run for president again.

Right now the impending birth of Chelsea Clinton's baby seemed to be all anyone wanted to talk about. "On my book tour over the summer, I must have shaken 70,000 hands and over half of them mentioned something about being a grandparent," Hillary Clinton noted at one point.

Women: In a stark contrast from 2008, when Clinton largely avoided discussing her gender, the issue is likely to emerge as a central theme of a new presidential campaign. After two other women-centered speeches last week, she heavily emphasized the theme at CGI.

It's a deeply personal issue for Clinton, but it's also a politically-beneficial one for a party that relies on expanding the partisan gender gap.

The Clinton magic: In its final moments, the entire project snapped into focus as Bill Clinton closed the summit. Pacing with his glasses off, he held a room of hundreds of the world's most powerful people absolutely rapt. It was part pep talk and part sales pitch, but these titans of industry and commanders in chief hung on his every word.

"Every day, we all make a decision, and some days we don't feel like making it. Every day, we wake up and there's like this scale inside, and some days its weighted towards hope, and some days its weighted towards the reverse," he says. "This thing is here after ten CGIs, look at all the good that's been done, because you made a decision about what to do."

Here was the difference between the Bill and Hillary Clinton – she talks obsessively about data and evidence, he appeals to the gut.

The people in this room could have been on a golf course or a private island, but instead they chose to spend three days in a Sheraton in Times Square listening to seminars about diarrhea because the Clintons inspired them to come.

On their way out, they will thank the Clintons profusely for the opportunity to write a check.

[Subtitle:] A history lesson for progressives yearning for Elizabeth Warren to trump Hillary Clinton in 2016

In 1896, Rep. William Jennings Bryan from Nebraska won the Democratic presidential nomination by forcefully arguing against the gold standard at the national convention.

Division and dissatisfaction are what led to the Democrats' surprise presidential pick. Struggling to make ends meet in the weak economy that had not yet recovered from the 1893 depression, many were displeased with Democratic President Grover Cleveland's response to the crisis.

The University of Virginia's Miller Center adeptly explains the politics this way:

"Cleveland's most forceful response to the depression was to blame the Sherman Silver Purchase Act of 1890, passed during the [Republican] Harrison administration, for the nation's economic troubles. … In successfully calling for repeal of the Purchase Act, Cleveland split the Democratic Party down the middle. He lost the support of western and southern Democrats, who thereafter looked upon Cleveland as more Republican than the Republicans. ... Between 1894 and 1896, Cleveland authorized four new government bonds to raise enough gold to prevent the government from defaulting on its international obligations. He was forced to turn to investment banker J. P. Morgan to support the bonds. In relying on Morgan, Cleveland was derided for allying with powerful Wall Street interests instead of helping the average American. The President, however, felt that he had no choice but to replenish the country's gold reserves."

The question now is would progressive Sen. Elizabeth Warren, a Massachusetts Democrat, be able to do something similar to Bryan in 2016? Could she win the Democratic nomination, besting the New York money interests who have close ties to former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton?

One of the members of the liberal "Gamechanger Salon" suggested such a result would be desirable: "The establishment Dems need to be punished, and the best way for that to happen is for Warren to beat Hillary in the primary on a populist message."

It's no surprise that this wrestling is going on inside the party. As the recent Pew study reveals, both parties have factions that want to move in opposite directions on policy.

Beyond that, Warren has long been popular among those who distrust Wall Street and are frustrated that the recovery has not benefited most of the nation. And with her vote last week against President Barack Obama's request to arm Syrian rebels, she is even more likely to gain "credibility as the standard bearer of the party's liberal wing," as the Washington Post's Greg Sargent put it.

Looking ahead to 2016, it seems likely that Obama's low job approval will continue to be a drag on Democrats, akin to what Republicans experienced in 2008 at the end of President George W. Bush's tenure. Even though it may be difficult for Clinton to separate herself enough from Obama to buoy her prospects among those Americans who are disappointed and disillusioned by this Democratic administration (again, recall the tactics that Republican presidential nominee John McCain deployed to show that he really was a "maverick"), Democrats should not fool themselves into thinking that a fiery rhetorician and far-left candidate would help them attract more general election voters. William Jennings Bryan lost the general election to former Ohio Governor William McKinley "by a margin of approximately 600,000 votes, the greatest electoral sweep in twenty-five years."

While Hillary Clinton's "don't stop thinking about ... Bill Clinton's presidency" message may prove tiresome and insufficient for victory if the voters again opt for "change," it should not go unnoticed that the last three presidential nominees from Massachusetts have all lost. Democrats in 1896 may not have kept the presidency, but they surely would have had a better chance against McKinley had they chosen Sen. David Hill of New York as their nominee over Bryan. In short, the lesson for Democrats is to be careful what you wish for.

The Hill blog: Briefing Room: "Bill Clinton to speak at Human Rights Campaign dinner"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By Peter Sullivan

September 25, 2014, 11:49 a.m. EDT

Former President Bill Clinton will deliver the keynote address next month at the Human Rights Campaign's annual dinner, the group announcedon Thursday.

As Hillary Clinton prepares for a likely presidential run, the Clintons complicated evolution on gay marriage has come under scrutiny.

As president, Bill Clinton signed the Defense of Marriage Act, which defined marriage as between a man and a woman for federal purposes, a provision that was then struck down by the Supreme Court last year.

The press release from the HRC, a leading gay rights group, makes no mention of that.

“President Bill Clinton is a transformational leader for our nation and the world,” HRC President Chad Griffin said in a statement. “His ability to build partnerships around the globe and harness the power of human potential is truly remarkable, and we are thrilled he will be returning as our keynote speaker for our national dinner.”

Clinton later admitted he was wrong to sign the law, telling CNN's Anderson Cooper in 2009: “I grew up in a different time. And I was hung up about the word. And I had all these gay friends. I had all these gay couple friends. And I was hung up about it. And I decided I was wrong.”

The dinner will be held Oct. 25 in D.C. at the Walter E. Washington Convention Center. The HRC says the event is sold out and over 3,000 people are attending.

Hillary Clinton has had her own challenges dealing with her past views on gay marriage, having a tense back and forth in an interview with NPR's Terry Gross in June.

Gross tried to pin down whether Clinton had always believed in gay marriage and just previously kept her views private, or whether she had changed her mind over time.

"I think I’m an American, I think that we have all evolved, and it’s been one of the fastest, most sweeping transformations that I’m aware of," Clinton said.

Gross kept pressing.

"I think you are trying to say that I used to be opposed and now I am in favor and I did it for political reasons," Clinton replied. "And that’s just flat wrong. So let me just state what I feel like I think you are implying and repudiate it. I have a strong record. I have a great commitment to this issue and I am proud of what I’ve done and the progress we're making.”

New York Times blog: The Upshot: “Romney in 2016? Never Say Never”

By Justin Wolvers

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

September 25, 2014

Could the third time be the charm?

The question is whether Mitt Romney, who sought the Republican presidential nomination in 2008, then won it in 2012 only to lose in the general election, will throw his hat into the ring again in 2016. Normally, I would dismiss talk of “Romney 2016” as reflecting the fevered imaginations of Beltway pundits facing a slow news day.

But a quick look at the political prediction markets gave me pause. For sure, the Republican field is wide open, with no candidate considered to have a better than one-in-six chance of winning. It’s a clear contrast with the Democratic field, in which Hillary Rodham Clinton is currently given a two-in-three chance of winning the nomination.

But look closely at the Republican race, and you’ll see that punters give Mr. Romney a chance. He’s just behind the leading pack of Marco Rubio, Jeb Bush, Rand Paul and Chris Christie, and right now, the odds suggest that he has a 7 percent chance of winning the nomination.

Bookies are also giving similar odds. There’s not been a lot bet on this — the trading site BetFair.com records only around $20,000 so far — but it does at least say that someone is willing to put their money where their mouth is.

Prediction markets have shown an uncanny ability to accurately forecast an election. We certainly saw it this month when they did better than pollsters in predicting the outcome of the vote for Scottish independence. Whether the political culture is hostile to losing candidates running again is another question. Losing nominees used to run again with some frequency: Adlai Stevenson, Richard Nixon and William Jennings Bryan, to name but a few. But in the modern media age, when nominees become overexposed, it hasn’t happened in decades. John McCain, John Kerry, Al Gore, Michael Dukakis, Bob Dole, and Walter Mondale never ran again. Mr. Romney would break a long streak if he ran again.

While there’s not a specific betting market linked to whether Mr. Romney will actually run, based on the fact that he’s judged a 7 percent chance to win the nomination, it seems reasonable to guess that he’s maybe a one-in-five chance to run. The odds that he’s thinking about running again are surely even higher.

It’s still unlikely that we’ll see “Romney 2016” bumper stickers, but based on what markets are telling us, it would be foolish to discount the possibility entirely.

Subject: Re: my latest presentation on the economy

They are of course related but are quite different.

Let me "count the ways" that the two concepts differ:

- They are definitionally different:
Income insecurity reflects variability in income and spending. Recent studies have shown that, in any given mon th, individuals across the income spectrum can experience a decline in income or a spike in spending that materi ally exceeds the savings of a typical household (see the recent work done by Diana Farrell at the JPMC Institute which is cited below). According to recent Fed study, the average American house-hold could not finance a $40 0 shortfall without borrowing. And the data suggests that this is a widespread phenomenon in the US and not jus t a feature of poverty. Income insecurity is of course more relevant to people's with low incomes associated with i nequality but it is an entirely different phenomenon.

- They have different causes:
Income insecurity results from the changing nature of work that was accelerated by the recession and which incl udes, most notably, the increase in independent contractors plus part-time workers and free-lancers. Up to 35M M workers are not permanently attached to a work-place (ie do not have a full-time job). Since their hours or pr ojects can vary significantly from month to month, their income is unpredictable and volatile. And, since spendin g can also vary enormously from month to month (eg health care expenses, car repairs, tuition payments, etc), t heir income volatility and lack of savings creates enormous house-hold insecurity.
You can probably recite the causes of income inequality as well as I can - globalization, out-sourcing, technolog y and quantitative easing are the most prominent.

- Public policy responses are different:
There can be some innovative public policy and private market responses to income insecurity. These include a djustments to unemployment insurance, workman's comp, OSHA, etc. as well as savings, insurance and credit products.
Income inequality, in contrast, can be addressed by a very different set of public policy responses that are either very long term in nature (eg educational reform) or not politically attractive (eg redistribution via tax and spending policies).

I suspect that income insecurity is considerably more descriptive of people's lives because it is how they experience their own personal economics - while inequality is more of an abstract concept with less day-to-day relevance to real people. The decline in steady jobs and the rise in independent/part-time/"gig" work is, in my view, the biggest change in the nature of work in the US since women enter the workforce at scale in the '70s and '80s. Politicians and policy-makers who focus on insecurity might tap into something which resonates with voters and which enables them to think creatively about policy responses.

you have (characteristically) gone right to the heart of the most difficult problem. In response to your specific question, over that last 15 years, the capacity of labor to demand a greater share of profits from productivity gains have been overwhelmed by several factors: 1) globalized wage competition as incomes have slowly equilibrated around the world, 2) the increasing portion of our economy that is generated by service work (as opposed to good production) that is less susceptible to productivity improvement, 3) the use of technology to generate productivity gains (so that the benefits accrue to capital rather than labor), 4) the overhang on the labor market and wages from discouraged workers who dropped out and the long-term unemployed, 5) the replacement of lost middle wage jobs with lower wage jobs, and 6) more recently, the change in the nature of work itself which is now more part-time, project (or "gig") oriented and based on an independent contractor model.

All of this had led to both stagnant wages and rising income insecurity - both of which are far more relevant than income inequality. I think some smart candidate for public office is going to figure this out and start talking about the modern economy in a way that resonates with workers' actual experience.

The public policy response can be a re-tooling of the policies that touch on work - unemployment insurance, OSHA, worker's compensation, retirement savings etc - in a way that is relevant to the modern economy, refocusses the debate in an innovative way and proves that the candidate(s) understand the world in which the voters live.

I have seen the discussion of declining productivity -- one question I have is why is it rational for workers to be more and more productive if they don't see gains from productivity in their paychecks? From an economically rationalist perspective, stagnant wages should inexorably lead to declined productivity, no? Is there an alternative view of why there's a decline in productivity? Our econ team said productivity increased 30% btwn 2000 and 2013, with no corresponding increase in wages. 30% for that time period is not great, but it's also not an historic low.

Take a look especially at pages 18-21 which detail why our labor markets are weak and how they have fundamentally changed since the Great Recession. To my mind, the big issue which the data highlights is income insecurity (rather than income inequality) to which there can be some targeted and innovative public policy responses.

surrogates can really hammer the GOP and make this about the Party of Trump. It's about condemning Trump and the lack of R leadership. It's not just his comments, but the policy implications that all the Rs agree with.

Espuelas is on Face the Nation (see below)- if we have a good relationship with him, can we make sure he's seen what HRC has said on this ?

(Face the Nation": Sen. Bob Corker ... Sen. Amy Klobuchar ... Rick Santorum ... Panel: Mike Allen, Ruth "The Truth" Marcus, Peter Baker and talk-show host Fernando Espuelas)

Other thoughts:
-Do we have anyone going on TV this weekend?
-Thinking about the early 4, there is the Trump International Hotel in Vegas. Maybe there is an organizing opportunity next week. Would be good to reach out to UNITE HERE.
-Online: Engage Latinos and give them something to do so we can galvanize them against the GOP and affirm their values for the contributions they make. And let them know that we stand with them--that the platform of HRC is the platform that stands with Latinos and lifts up their contributions.

We will have a prep call tomorrow at approximately 6:15pm/7:15pm ET to prepare for CNN Town Hall.

Please keep in mind that the first 15 minutes might have erratic cell phone coverage in Iowa so bear with us as we get a little closer to DSM if that happens.

The Real Threat to the GOP

There is a real, looming danger for the Republican Party – and it goes well beyond the Party's failure to use the latest digital or analytic tools.

The dilemma facing the Republican Party today can be traced to the massive social changes that erupted in the 1960's. The civil rights movement, women's rights, and ultimately the gay rights struggle all spawned a backlash among many traditional elements of society. Sometimes it was called the "culture war."

The GOP used the "Southern Strategy" to harness the fears of many white southern voters and to transform the Democratic "solid South" into a sea of red.

The "Moral Majority," anti-abortion movement and religious right all tapped into that backlash. Anti-immigrant groups were born and some pastors railed against homosexuals. Even groups like the NRA used the sense that traditional values were under attack as a means of mobilizing voters to oppose efforts to curb gun violence. Appeals for "smaller government" often had their real roots in attacks on the Federal Government's enforcement of civil rights laws, and "welfare" for African Americans.

For a number of decades the GOP establishment successfully used these social issues to attract voters whose economic interests were really aligned with the progressive policies of Democrats. Social issues became "wedge issues" that split apart the potential Democratic base.

Author Tom Frank, in his classic book What's the Matter with Kansas, explored in detail how that process worked in one Midwestern state.

In fact, back in the 1980's someone said that the Democratic Party was a coalition of rich people who hated the Moral Majority and poor people who hated Mutual of Omaha, and the Republican Party was a coalition of rich people who hated the AFL-CIO and poor people who hated the ACLU.

Here's the problem for the Republican Party – from the standpoint of national public opinion the culture war is over -- and they lost, particularly among young people.

Now I realize that there are still major active rear guard actions being fought in states across the nation aimed at limiting contraception and abortion rights, restricting the rights of African Americans to vote, forcing immigrants to "self deport", and restricting gay marriage. But these struggles are, in fact, "rear guard" actions.

According to the Washington Post poll, in 2006 opponents of gay marriage outnumbered supporters almost two to one – 58% to 36%. Now the numbers are reversed, 58% for and 36% against. Among voters 18 to 29 years of age support soars to 81%.

For most people in the Millennial Generation it simply makes no sense that race, gender or sexual orientation should play any role in limiting the rights or opportunities of their friends and neighbors – it just doesn't compute.

And that's the conundrum facing the Republican Party. Today when it uses social issues to appeal to white working voters, or to socially conservative African American and Hispanic voters, it drives away young voters and socially tolerant voters of all ages in droves.

But on the other hand, without these issues, the GOP is left trying to defend an economic policy that benefits a narrow sliver of the voting population. Let's be honest, Republican economic policy really only benefits the wealthiest two percent of Americans -- and the votes of the wealthiest 2% will not get you very far in an election campaign. Hard to sell the majority of voters if all you talk about is tax breaks for the wealthy, tax loopholes for corporations that send jobs overseas, busting unions to lower wages for workers and cutting Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

That's not to say the Republicans aren't in a position to win many races. The GOP's biggest appeal in the last election had little to do with its economic "policy" – or support for its positions in general. In fact cutting Social Security, privatizing Medicare, cutting funding for education and most other Republican policy goals are downright unpopular. But many voters whose own economic situations have not improved for decades were perfectly ready to vote for a change. You add those to the many voters who still respond to conservative social issues, you get quite a number of votes -- just not enough to win a national election.

So the GOP is stuck having to choose between appealing to the demographic wave of more socially tolerant voters one the one hand, and its continued need to use social issues as its principal defense against populist Democratic attacks that Republican candidates are mostly concerned with defending the interests of the wealthy and big corporations.

That conflict is what we see being played out in the battle between the current conservative "base" of the party and the party "establishment." In fact, for decades the Republican Party has been controlled by the Party's wealthy donors, most of whom view social issues as a convenient way to mobilize support among the ordinary Americans who don't benefit one iota from their economic agenda.

Some of them now rue the day that they funded the Tea Party Movement that they thought would be instrumental in defeating ObamaCare and mobilizing conservative voters, but has gone "rogue."

Karl Rove, and others who represent the party establishment, believe correctly that when people like GOP Senate candidate Todd Aiken make offensive remarks about rape, it damages the entire Republican brand.

The recent GOP report on rebranding and reorganizing the Party reflects that point of view.

But here's the problem. Let's be honest, Mitt Romney's own comments about the "47%" were even more damaging to Romney's election prospects. And they were a true reflection of the core beliefs and goals of the GOP establishment itself.

Without the social policy "wedge issues" that the GOP has used for decades to distract the attention of working class voters from the Republican Party establishment's core economic interests, the GOP risks being defined forever by that iconic "47%" moment – and many like it to come.

Agree with Margolis points.

One more note on race. Sanders has gotten considerably better both in rhetoric (Sandra Bland would be alive if she were white) and in substance. I'm not sure HRC is aware of this.

She could use a briefing on what he is saying. She should also remember to use the mothers she met with and other personal proof of her understanding of these issues.

What Say You Now, Congressman Bonner?

Rep. Jo Bonner Co-Sponsored Resolution Honoring Alleged Felon James O'Keefe

Washington D.C. – Americans United for Change called on U.S. Rep. Jo Bonner (AL-1) to state publicly whether he believes that conservative activist and now alleged felon James O'Keefe is still deserving of "honor" as an "investigative journalist" and is still "owed a debt of gratitude by the people of the United States" – words of praise expressed in a Congressional resolution co-sponsored by Bonner last October, which he may or may not regret today in light of reports that O'Keefe was arrested by the FBI and charged Tuesday with plotting to tamper with the telephone system in the New Orleans office of Senator Mary Landrieu (D-LA).

Tom McMahon, Acting Executive Director, Americans United for Change: "Not too long ago Congressman Bonner believed that James O'Keefe was deserving of national recognition and praise – that is, before Mr. O'Keefe was arrested by the FBI for allegedly plotting to tamper with the phone lines of a United States Senator. The people of Alabama might be interested to know if the Congressman has any regrets for taking time up in Congress to "honor" Mr. O'Keefe's special brand of "investigative journalism" that apparently devolved into Watergate-style schemes."

Subject: It's Heating Up

Eric Garcetti FOR MAYOR 2013

Dear Friend:

It's the time of year when campaigns heat up. Support for Eric's campaign is surging with the release of several of his innovative ideas to put L.A. back to work and a growing list of supporters, including 1,000 Angelenos who have taken the big step of making a public statement of support for Eric.

The campaign season is also heating up with accelerated fundraising deadlines. The next deadline is September 30, and we need your help today!

Please click here to make a crucial contribution of $50, $150 or $300. Raising $25,000 by the end of the week will ensure we have the resources needed to share Eric's message about how, together, we are going to grow LA's economy, and it will demonstrate the incredible support of all the people like you who are behind Eric's campaign.

Because we have entered the “matching funds” phase of our campaign, every dollar you contribute up to $500 is eligible for a match. Please click here to make your matching funds contribution now.

Eric is running for Mayor to get our city back to work with innovative ideas for jobs and more responsive city services. Your contribution now will be invaluable to electing him and getting our city back on track.

Thank you.

Becky - I listen to some of the talk today about Sylvia's move to HHS. As you may recall , I picked Sylvia and John Podesta to be my two Deputy Chiefs of Staff. I picked Sylvia not only because she is brilliant (Rhodes) , really Becky Quick like nice , informed and smart , but most importantly to me she knows how to run a large organization and run it effectively. If you want to see a large public or private organization really managed and managed well , Sylvia would be my first pick. All you have to do is look at the job she did at the NEC , Treasury , White House , OMB , Gates Foundation , and Walmart Foundation to judge her capability.
Regardless of your politics , any American should be glad that the President picked someone so competent to head such a critically important agency.
Best to you -- Erskine

Subject: Of course

Dear John,

Stop giving billions of taxpayer dollars to rich oil companies. Seems like a good plan, right?

Apparently not.

When you're dealing with radical Republicans in Congress—who put deep-pocketed donors before middle class families, who put their ideology before health care for all, women's rights and the environment —even the best ideas get thrown out.

Last Tuesday, when Republicans blocked our proposal to end huge tax breaks for Big Oil, it only served to highlight how important it is that we prevent a GOP takeover of the Senate.

Republicans only need four seats to gain a majority, and one of the seats they've been eyeing is mine. There's no way I'm going to give an inch. I'm counting on you, my grassroots supporters, to stand with me as I fight to keep my seat and protect the interests of the people I serve—not wealthy oil companies.

Click here to make a donation to my campaign today and help me raise $25,000 by midnight May 31. We need to keep the GOP from making any gains in next year's election.

Republicans have used the last five months to make their extremist agenda perfectly clear. They want to abolish Medicare as we know it. They want to put the desires of corporate America above the needs of middle-class families. They want to keep chipping away at women's rights and access to health care.

Unfortunately, they're only four seats away from having the power to make these outrageous ideas a reality.

My seat is one of the 23 Democratic seats up for grabs next year, and I'm vowing to do everything I can to make sure the GOP doesn't get it. But of course, I can't do this alone. I need all of my supporters to stand up and support my campaign now, before the May 31 deadline. We just need to reach $25,000 to make our goal.

Click here to contribute to my campaign and help me reach my goal of raising $25,000 by midnight May 31. It's up to us—you and me—to protect the Senate from a GOP takeover.

It's disappointing when a bill to curb Big Oil subsidies doesn't go through. But I hate to imagine what will happen if the Republicans ever get their hands on the Senate.

Sincerely,

Kirsten Gillibrand

John --

As we head into the final stretch on health reform, big insurance company lobbyists and their partisan allies hope that their relentless attacks and millions of dollars can intimidate us into accepting the status quo.

So I have a message for them, from all of us: Not this time. We have come too far. We will not turn back. We will not back down.

But do not doubt -- the opponents of reform will not rest. So I need you, the members of Organizing for America, to fight alongside me.

We must continue to build out our campaign -- to spread the facts on the air and on the ground, and to bring in more volunteers and train them to join the fight. I urgently need your help to keep Organizing for America's 50-state movement for reform going strong.

Phil Kerpen was the commentator on Fox News who was spouting the "CRL is corrupt and SH caused the housing crisis" drivel a few years ago. We talked with the Fox editors, believe it or not, to help them understand how unsubstantiated his claims were – in fact, he complained to someone a few months later, saying "Fox News doesn't call me much for interviews anymore." This guy is a total twerp.

Subject: [big campaign] Rassmussen: Republican Voters Say GOP Reps in Congress Still Out of Touch http://www.rasmussenreports.com/public_content/politics/general_politics/august_2009/republican_voters_say_gop_reps_in_congress_still_out_of_touch

Republican Voters Say GOP Reps in Congress Still Out of Touch

Tuesday, September 01, 2009

Seventy-four percent (74%) of Republican voters say their party's representatives in Congress have lost touch with GOP voters nationwide over the past several years. The latest Rasmussen Reports national telephone survey finds that just 18% of GOP voters believe their elected officials have done a good job representing the base.

Most Republican voters (55%) say that the average Republican in Congress is more liberal than the average Republican voter. Twenty-four percent (24%) say the average Republican in Congress holds views about the same as the average Republican voter while just 17% think the Congressional Republicans are more conservative than GOP voters.

Republican voters overwhelmingly believe it is more important for the party to stand for what it believes in rather than trying to work with President Barack Obama. Eighty-four percent (84%) of Republicans hold that view while just 14% favor more co-operation with the President.

As for voters not affiliated with either major party, 58% say the GOP should stand for what it believes in while 33% would like to see more cooperation with the President. Seventy-one percent (71%) of unaffiliated voters believe the Republicans in Congress have lost touch with their base and a plurality of unaffiliateds (41%) believe that the average Republican in Congress is more liberal than the average Republican voters.

Not surprisingly, Democrats have a fundamentally different view.

Those in President Obama's party overwhelmingly want the GOP to work more closely with the President. And they have a wildly different perception of the relationship between Republicans members of Congress and GOP voters. While Republicans and unaffiliated voters tend to see Republicans in Congress as more liberal than Republican voters, a plurality of Democrats (35%) hold the opposite view and believe the average Republican in Congress is more conservative than GOP voters. Nearly as many Democrats (33%) say that ideologically, Republicans voters and their Representatives share common ground. Just 18% of Democrats believe than the GOP representatives in Congress are more liberal than GOP voters.

Overall, among all voters, 51% believe it is more important for the Republican Party to stand for what it believes in than for the GOP to work with President Obama. Forty-two percent (42%) disagree.

In late April, voters were basically tied on this question.

Just 24% of all voters nationwide think Democrats should pass a health care reform bill that is opposed by all Republicans in Congress. Fifty-eight percent (58%) say Democrats should change the bill to win support from "a reasonable number of Republicans."

Thirty-seven percent (37%) of all voters say the average Republican member of Congress is more liberal than the average GOP voter. Twenty-six percent (26%) believe the average GOP congressman is more conservative, and 28% say the two are about the same.

Sixty-seven percent (67%) of all voters believe Washington politics is likely to become more partisan over the coming year. Fifty-one percent (51%) believe that Obama is governing as a partisan Democrat.

This summer brought a significant shift in voter preferences in the Generic Congressional Ballot. Republican congressional candidates have now held a modest lead over Democrats for nine straight weeks, after trailing for several years. It is important to note, however, that the recent shift is not just because Republicans have been gaining support but also because Democrats have lost support.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

For the first time in over two years of polling, voters trust Republicans slightly more than Democrats on the handling of the issue of health care. Overall, Republicans lead Democrats in terms of voter trust on eight out of 10 key issues for the second consecutive month, and the two are tied on one issue.

Those who say economic and fiscal issues are their biggest concerns make up the majority of Republican voters, and Mitt Romney, the former Massachusetts governor, runs best among those voters if the 2012 GOP Presidential Primary in their state was held today.

Former Alaska Governor Sarah Palin is second to Romney as the presidential candidate Republican voters say they'll vote for in 2012 state GOP primaries, but she's also one of two candidates they least hope wins the party's nomination.

In May, 37% of GOP voters said their party had no leader , but that was an improvement over March when 68% felt that way. In the more recent survey, Arizona Senator John McCain was seen as the party's leader by 18% of Republican voters, followed by national party chairman Michael Steele at 14% and Palin with 10% support.

Only 29% of all voters are confident that Congress knows what it's doing with regards to the economy. Fifty-seven percent (57%) say they would vote to replace the entire Congress and start all over again .

I don't think that hrc will want to expand that much.
And given our conversations with the 3 of them, I don't think they expect to be in the conversations.
HRC is ok with doing next week so will get organized. However she mentioned she preferred doing as a call instead of a meeting.

If we have everything done and circualted to her, she would like to do a call tonight.

That means the 930pm call John/PIR is doing to touch base with the consultants will be a call to say that we are still working through content with her and what time should we do a call with them all tomorrow once we have content she is comfortable with rather than anything more until we have something to share.

If you all can be free for a call with her between 11pm - 12am, I am inclined to make sure we send her updated material by 1030pm and tell her we will get on with her at 1130pm.

Will that work for you all?

Good evening-

1. AFSCME is planning to make a HRC endorsement at their next Executive Board meeting, September 10-11, 2015. The vote will take place in Albuquerque, NM. They will not be requesting the Secretary attends.

2. IAM-I flagged earlier today the August 14th endorsement event. Buffenbarger this evening again reiterated his need for her to be in NYC in person for this evening. He is even offering a jet to get her there (!).

3. SEIU-I just wanted to close the loop on the Home Care event. There have been additional conversations between SEIU and the campaign. I just want to make sure we are all in agreement moving forward. We are hosting in New York?

4. We are now up to 21 Union Presidents in attendance for July 14th. There will be 26 Unions represented. New Presidents to RSVP include, Larry Hanley (ATU), Chris Shelton (CWA), Mark Dimondstein (APWU) and Marshall Ainley (MEBA).

We are set tomorrow for the Secretary's call into the AFT Executive Council. I am still working with AFT on Tuesday TEACH logistics.

Have a good evening.

Watchdog Group Again Urges McCain To Fire Davis

Washington, DC – Campaign Money Watch, a campaign finance watchdog group, today reiterated its demand that Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) fire campaign manager Rick Davis after news report raised additional questions about Davis' firm's foreign clients.

The New York Times reported today that McCain's Senate office was asked to intervene in the lobbying firm Davis Manafort's decision to work on behalf of former Ukrainian Prime Minister Viktor Yanukovich as early as 2005. According to the Times, "a staff member at the National Security Council called Mr. McCain's Senate office to complain that Mr. Davis's lobbying firm was undercutting American foreign policy in Ukraine."

Davis' firm, Davis Manafort, handled political consulting for former Ukrainian Prime Minister Viktor Yanukovich, who had close ties to Vladimir Putin and was defeated in that country's 2004 Orange Revolution after persistent allegations of widespread corruption. The firm has continued to work for Yanukovich through 2007 – and helped conduct a political makeover. As the International Herald Tribune reported last year Davis' firm reshaped him into "an anti-corruption reformer."

"This morning's story raises serious questions: Why would the National Security Council turn to John McCain to help with its complaints about Davis' firm and what did McCain do to help? Why would an American lobbying firm work against American interests?" asked Campaign Money Watch Director David Donnelly.

"And finally, why would a candidate for president hire a lobbyist whose firm worked against our national interests?"

Donnelly also pointed to a May 19, 2008 Newsweek report that Davis' business partner, Paul Manafort, was denied the chance to organize the 2008 GOP national convention partly because his Ukrainian work "was viewed as too much," according to one McCain staff member.

"If John McCain wants to rescue his reputation as a real reformer, he should start by firing Rick Davis today," stated Donnelly.

Campaign Money Watch is a project of the nonpartisan Public Campaign Action Fund. The organization works to hold candidates who are against reform accountable for where they get their political donations. It recently launched FireTheLobbyists.com to urge McCain to sever his ties with the big-money lobbyists that run and fund his campaign.

Subject: A Message Regarding Inclement Weather Notifications

Dear Members of the Georgetown University Community,
As the possibility of winter weather approaches, we are writing today with important information about how the university will communicate changes in operating status due to winter weather conditions.

Notifications

Notification of changes in the university's operating status will be sent by text and email, via HOYAlert, and broadcast email on days when snow or ice are expected to impact the Washington Metropolitan area. If you have not already done so, please register for HOYAlert here . Please note that it can take up to 24 hours for your registration to be processed.
The university's operating status can be accessed any time by calling the university operating status line at (202) 687-SNOW (7669) or visiting the university operating status page . Please rely on these University sources for the operating status. Do not rely on local media for the most up to date information.

Operating Status

During inclement weather the university will operate under one of the following statuses:

1. Open
2. Open with liberal leave and instructional continuity
3. Open with delayed arrival, instructional continuity and liberal leave
4. Closed with instructional continuity; essential services for campus residents
5. Closed with instruction suspended; essential services for campus residents
6. Early departure with instructional continuity; essential services for campus residents

Please visit the university operating status page for further details on each status. The Law Center will communicate its status separately.

Instructional Continuity

Instructional continuity is a policy that allows faculty and students to maintain learning activities and academic work during disruptions such as inclement weather or university closures.

- Students, please be prepared to participate in the alternate instructional activities planned by their faculty members instead of attending face-to-face class when circumstances prevent on-campus instruction. If you have questions about instructional continuity in your classes, please contact your professors. See the undergraduate and graduate bulletins for the relevant attendance and instructional continuity policies.
- Faculty, if you have questions about your role in instructional continuity, please contact your department head and visit the instructional continuity page for FAQs and more information.
- Staff and AAPs, some employees will be expected to work remotely during a disruption to the normal operating status to support instructional continuity; your supervisor will notify you of any requirements in this regard.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Additional Information for Staff and AAPs

Emergency employees must report to work on time during inclement weather and other emergencies. If you are unsure of your status as an emergency employee or have questions about your role in instructional continuity, please contact your supervisor. If you have any questions regarding the inclement weather or other emergency policies, please contact your department's HR Client Services Partner. Please note that if you have a telework arrangement in effect, you should contact your supervisor to discuss expectations for working from home during times of inclement weather. Instructions for entering your time in GMS in the event of an inclement weather or other emergency status can be found here . Please see the university's Human Resources Policy on Inclement Weather for more information.

For tips on personal preparedness during winter weather please visit Ready.gov .

Weekly Wrap-up

May 8th, 2015

The Best of Political Animal

- David Brooks makes one of those assertions that reminds y ou of Ronald Reagan and his little index cards with "facts" from Human Events. Read it.
- The time-honored cliche has always been that there are "three tickets out of Iowa." That's always depended on how y ou define "tickets." Read it.
- Huckabee's new policies show that at least some Republicans have become nervous about the large and growing gap between the their party's "job-creators" agenda and the interests of their actual voters. Read it.
- The major parties of the Left and Center suffered catastrophic losses and the Tories won an actual majority in parliament for the first time since 1992. But that doesn't mean that this election represented a national "swing to the Right." Read it.

Freddie Gray was Neurologically Poisoned

The lead-poisoning angle in Gray's story should be more featured in the ongoing news coverage, along with the unemployment, social service denial, educational malpractice, and police abuses raining down on his neighborhood. Read it.

Education's Magic Capitalism Problem

Calling education reform "corporate" sort of implies something standardized, valid, and verifiable, and likely to lead to profit and success. Not really. Read it.

Leveling the Playing Field for Low-Income Students

An interview with an elite private school counselor who quit for a job in the inner city. Read it.

Four Pinocchios for Jon Stewart on Education Spending

Congressional District

By Jessica Parks, Inquirer Staff Writer

POSTED: April 29, 2014

Marjorie Margolies can't tap her general election funds

What was once viewed as a slam-dunk comeback for former U.S. Rep. Marjorie Margolies is turning into a knock-down, drag-out brawl with her three opponents in the 13th Congressional District, political observers say.

Margolies had been considered the front-runner in the race to replace Allyson Schwartz. A poll her campaign commissioned in August found 62 percent of likely Democratic primary voters recognized her, and 55 percent viewed her favorably.

But that early advantage has failed to push her opponents - State Rep. Brendan Boyle, physician Valerie Arkoosh, and State Sen. Daylin Leach - from contention. Each has built niches of support, with endorsements and money matching or exceeding Margolies'.

"I can give you a winning scenario for every one of those candidates," said Larry Ceisler, a political consultant who has ties to all four candidates but who said he wasn't backing one over the others. "As we get closer, it's going to tighten up even more," he said.

The candidates are scheduled to debate at 7 p.m. Tuesday at the Philadelphia Portuguese Club, 2019 Rhawn St.

Over the last six months, Margolies' fund-raising has not kept up with her spending, and she has been battered by negative reports about her charity, her ex-husband's financial crimes, and her campaign's reliance on the Clintons (Chelsea Clinton is her daughter-in-law).

Last week, that criticism was amplified when Leach filed a complaint with the Federal Election Commission, alleging that Margolies misused money designated for the general election.

Six months ago, "I would have said [Margolies] is a 2-to-1 or 3-to-1 favorite," said Neil Oxman, a Democratic consultant who is not affiliated with the race. "Given what's happened with her finances, I think she's no longer the front-runner."

Margolies' campaign has denied breaking any finance laws. Her campaign manager, Ken Smukler, said internal polling indicated that she still had a strong lead in the race.

But with three weeks until the May 20 primary, independent observers said it was anyone's game.

"Each of the four candidates really has a strong argument that they're best equipped to win the primary," said Mark Nevins, a consultant with Dover Strategy Group who said he was "officially agnostic" on the race. He said the result would come down to "who has the most compelling message and the resources to get that message out on TV and by mail aggressively."

Leach and Boyle are running TV ads, and Arkoosh has independent radio ads and direct mail going out.

Margolies' campaign on Monday will open a Northeast Philadelphia office. But as of late March, it had spent no money on advertising or direct voter outreach, according to FEC reports. Her first TV ad is set to air this week.

Geography vs. gender

The nominee will square off in the fall against the winner of the GOP race between retired U.S. Air Force Col. Beverly Plosa-Bowser and businessman Carson "Dee" Adcock.

Any Democrat is likely to have the advantage. The 13th District is reliably Democratic - roughly 60 percent - and the population is split evenly between Northeast Philadelphia and southern Montgomery County.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Margolies, Leach, and Arkoosh hail from Montgomery County - which could give Boyle an edge.

Oxman, a consultant with the Campaign Group in Philadelphia who isn't supporting any candidate, likes Boyle's odds.

He and others praised Boyle's ground game and said his support among trade unions and Philadelphia ward leaders would pay off on Election Day.

Boyle is "certainly going to win the city," Oxman said. "The question is, will he win the city by a large enough margin that whoever wins the suburbs will not matter?"

Ceisler and Nevins agreed the suburban split could be a deciding factor in Boyle's favor.

Margolies and Arkoosh have been campaigning hard on the importance of electing a woman to replace Schwartz, currently the only woman in Pennsylvania's congressional delegation.

Margolies has spent 20 years leading a charity that promotes women's leadership, and she casts herself as the leading proponent for women.

Arkoosh, who lobbied around the country for the Affordable Care Act and its women's health provisions, in the spring received a high-profile endorsement from the Women's Campaign Fund. Last week, the Women's Campaign Fund named Arkoosh one of its 40 "game changers" in U.S. politics.

Emily's List, a leading national women's political group, has yet to issue an endorsement in the 13th District.

Nevins said gender could sway some voters and noted that women tend to vote in "slightly larger numbers in elections like this." But because there are two women in the race, he said, "I'm not sure there's an obvious winner."

Going negative
Last week, the campaign took a negative turn when Leach accused Margolies of deliberately misusing campaign money.

Margolies' campaign has denied the allegations and hired a former FEC commissioner to represent her in the case.

The candidates have also turned up the heat to highlight their few policy differences.

Arkoosh has been attacking Margolies' 1994 plan to cut Social Security benefits and raise the retirement age. "Marjorie Margolies tried to slash our Social Security benefits," one of her campaign mailers declared.

In an e-mail Friday, Margolies called those mailers "intellectually dishonest" and has said she does not agree to benefit cuts or raising the retirement age.

"My opponents continue to attempt to scare seniors by citing positions I took over two decades ago as though they are current," Margolies wrote.

She has criticized Leach for supporting positions she says are politically untenable, among them legalizing marijuana and shifting to a single-payer health-care system.

Leach, Arkoosh, and Margolies have criticized Boyle for voting to tighten regulations on abortion providers. Five of the state's 22 clinics closed after the bill passed.

Boyle said he supported women's right to choose but defended the vote.

"I think it's a reasonable step to say there need to be reasonable health requirements and inspections," he said Friday.

Thank you all for confirming 2pm tomorrow. Brynne will send a race backgrounder shortly so you have relevant information.
Margolies has a poll going in to field tonight so I though we could delay the call until we had some numbers. However, nick/pir report that the NYT (Amy Chozick) is about to write a story and is specifically asking if Clintons plan to provide additional help and her story may run soon.
Do people have ability to call in earlier?
8:30am? Sorry to do this at such short notice. I know cdm is overseas so might not be easy to do.

CDM is in Africa so will try to keep this efficient but ideally we can touch on the 2014 plan for the fall as well.

We are sending this to you for your preliminary ideas, suggestions, or flags. The bottom line is that we would like to begin outreach to filmmakers who would produce short film spots for us in support of the campaign. We've spoken to legal, and they are comfortable with the concept.

We feel that if done right, this could be a great way to reach new audiences and highlight stories that resonate with voters.

Filmmakers for Hillary

Hillary Clinton has lived her life in the public eye for more than 25 years. People have gotten to know her through the lens of the media or the narratives of her political opponents. But not enough people know who Hillary is, or where she came from—and we need to change that.

In order to win the Democratic Party nomination and ultimately be elected president, Hillary needs to reach people who may be disillusioned or disinterested in politics, and connect with them on an emotional level.

We want to enlist talented filmmakers to help tell the untold story, make policy compelling, capture a moment on the campaign trail, and help people get to know our candidate’s background and beliefs.

Getting started

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The digital team will work across the campaign to compile a list of topics, which we will frame as short creative prompts, encompassing a range of topics from personal to policy. A few sample prompts could include:

- Instead of taking a prestigious job after graduating from Yale Law, Hillary chose to work for the Children's Defense Fund. She's dedicated her life and career to fighting for children and families. To understand where that drive comes from, you need to understand the story of her mother, Dorothy.
- Forty million Americans have student loans. Together, they owe more than a trillion dollars. Imagine what we could accomplish as a country if Americans weren't held back by their education debt.
- Hillary was surprised early on in the campaign trail to hear from people in Iowa and New Hampshire who wanted to talk about substance use disorders and addiction. It's come up over and over again, with people from all walks of life asking Hillary to help solve this epidemic and end the shame and stigma surrounding it. This isn't an issue that's driving the polls or popular opinion—d but it has become a topic close to Hillary's heart because of the stories she has heard across the country.

Once we have identified key topics it would be beneficial to help amplify, we will compile a diverse list of filmmakers who are likely to be supportive of Hillary's campaign and who we think may have a connection with any of these topics. If there is a particular subject area or story we believe would be compelling to an individual filmmaker, we will pitch that topic to them. If not, we will provide a list of 8-10 possible prompts to get them started

Once a filmmaker has chosen a topic, they will pitch that topic to the campaign. We will approve the topic and concept or try to guide them in another direction. We will then offer them further background or connect them with a subject matter expert on the campaign if desired. They will cast their film, spend time working on it (using us as a resource when helpful) and return with a final cut. Given that many of these people are likely working on other projects simultaneously, we should allow at least a couple months for them to turn around a finished product.

Approvals

From talking with other organizations who have run similar programs, it's clear that the best way to create powerful and effective film is to allow filmmakers to use their own artistic discretion. While we can and should be involved in shaping content and messaging when possible, stylistic edits from the campaign should be minimal or avoided altogether. Filmmakers will have final artistic say over their product, but the campaign will be able to decide whether or not to share that final product publicly.

Outstanding questions to finalize before launch

- Identify who will be the liaison to filmmakers
- Are members of the research, policy, and political teams willing to make themselves available (in a limited capacity) to support these filmmakers?
- Will every film and filmmaker need to be vetted?

Promotion

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

We will work with the filmmakers and their teams to help promote their films, and the series, to press and on social media. We will publish the short films through a TBD campaign digital platform (though could also provide as an exclusive to press).

For the launch of this series, we would attempt to drum up some fanfare and would like to consider hosting a premiere (either as an actual event, or online).

Timeline

We would like to launch this as soon as we are able, coordinating with the communications team to get the most out of an off-week or call additional attention to a particular topic or event. We would leave this as an open-ended project that could run throughout the duration of the campaign as a way to engage filmmakers, highlight important aspects of our narrative, and engage diverse audiences around key moments.

> The MIF is an innovative and unique entity in the international development sector, being the largest provider of technical assistance for private-sector development in Latin America and the Caribbean. It was formed in 1993 during President Bill Clinton's Administration, with the US and Japan as the largest and most committed original donors. It currently has 39 member countries, the US & Japan remain its largest stakeholders (with about 60% ownership interest), Spain, Canada, U.K and a few other European countries plus Korea account for the next 15% share, and the balance is held by beneficiary countries in the region. The MIF finances about 100 projects per year, with a total finance volume of about US$100 million & leverages these investments with additional resources from private sector sponsors. It has disbursed $2.3 billion in grants and investments for private sector development projects, funding some 1,800 projects with various partners during the last 20 years.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Donors Committee is the governing body of the MIF. It is responsible for the final approval of all proposals for technical cooperation grants, loans, and equity investments. It is presided over by the President of the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB), Luis Alberto Moreno. The IDB is currently coordinating the selection process for the next General Manager. Deadline for applicants is April 27th. President Moreno and the US Department of the Treasury will likely have to reach a consensus on the final candidate. The MIF has had two Managing Directors during its 22 years: Don Terry and Nancy Lee, both Americans.

MIF-"3" is expected to be replenished (re-funded) next year, assuming lead Donors can reach a consensus. Perhaps new Donors will be allowed to join. This critical juncture requires a person capable to lead this process from the inside, having experience with US Government, other Donors and regional stakeholders, along with private sector track record. I bring on these key qualities to the table. In addition, MIF-3 can become a "disruptive" model for multilateral development that involves direct work at the sub-national level, in partnerships with private sector and in three stages: creating conditions for investment in local infrastructure, then financing the projects, and finally consolidating the adoption of best practices. The basis of this model has already been tested in the field. Supporting this largely neglected sector will require no sovereign guarantees. Several other innovations and approaches can be implemented, building on the path already travelled by the MIF 1 & 2.

Your help is very much appreciated and valued. Thank you.

Best regards, Juan Carlos

Subject:	Ron Klain

Ron talked to Steve Case. As they say in the movies, It's complicated. He has two bid deals that are closing in February. Steve is adamant that he stay to close those deals. Once those are done he can transition to more of a full time status with more and more of his physical presence in Brooklyn. I know Ron well and don't think he is playing games about timing, just in a real bind with Case. I have discussed with Jake and I think we both believe that over the longer term general election window, this still remains our best option. In the meantime, I think we should encourage Ron to engage more in the strategic discussions beyond debate strategy. Sorry this wasn't an easier path forward.

John,

There's just one week until Election Day. One week.

We are fighting hard every day – but right-wing SuperPACs are continuing to pour thousands of dollars into negative TV ads against us.

Here's the bottom line: We have a plan to win, but we are $23,000 short of where we need to be to make our last TV buy of the campaign.

Can you help with a $100, $50, or $20 donation right now?

The only way to respond to these SuperPAC attacks is to keep our strong, positive message on the air.

I know we've asked so much of you, but there are only 7 days left.

Please donate $100, $40, or $20 or whatever you can to help us meet our ad buy goal.

Thank you,

Allison
Campaign Manager

Dear John,

At our last book club meeting, Mary was kind enough to say that you would be willing to meet with me to discuss what I might be able to do for Hillary's campaign.

I know you are still at the White House for another two weeks or so and I know that Hillary's plans are still a little bit up in the air but I am very anxious to find a way to help. My position at the Postal Regulatory Commission is coming to an end this spring so the timing is perfect for me to take on as much work (paid or unpaid) as is needed.

I think I can add real value to the campaign with issues and constituencies that are not necessarily well-covered at the moment.

I would very much appreciate it if you could make the time to meet with me some time in the next month. You can respond to me at this email address or on my cell phone, 202-251-4167.

Looking forward to seeing you. Thanks.

Ruth

Up to you, though, if you think it's worthwhile to push.

Martin O'Malley, who once extolled the virtues of centrism, now wants us to believe — in an unintentionally hilarious rewriting of history — that he's more liberal than Hillary Clinton and a "profile in courage" when it comes to fighting for marriage equality.
> In a not-so-subtle jab at Clinton, O'Malley in a February speech said, "History celebrates profiles in courage, not profiles in convenience. The dignity of every person tells us that the right to marry is not a state right, it is a human right."
> A Clinton aide last week, responding to a Blade inquiry, affirmed that the 2016 hopeful views same-sex marriage as a constitutional right. That statement marked a change from her earlier position, articulated in an infamous NPR interview last year, that she viewed marriage as a state issue.
> Clinton, like President Obama and Martin O'Malley and many others evolved on the issue.
> The problem with O'Malley is that he's had more positions on marriage than all the 2016 hopefuls combined. And after pushing for civil unions right up until 2011, he now wants voters to believe that he's a pioneer on the issue. What nerve!
> Let's revisit O'Malley's actual record rather than listen to his calculated amnesia.
> In 2004, O'Malley told a Baltimore TV station, "I'm not opposed to civil marriages." Also that year, he emailed a plaintiff in the state marriage lawsuit that read, "I'm just supporting something I strongly believe in," referring to marriage equality. But by 2006, O'Malley's position was shifting and he said, "I was raised to believe that marriage is between a man and a woman. This is a fundamental issue of the state's public policy, and a decision that ultimately should not be made by a single trial court judge." When confronted by gay activists after issuing that statement, O'Malley disavowed any previous support of marriage equality.
> After a 2007 Maryland court ruling limiting marriage to opposite-sex couples, O'Malley issued the following statement as heartbroken gay residents were busy cancelling their weddings and mourning the court's misguided decision: "I look forward to reading the court's full opinion, but as we move forward, those of us with the responsibility of passing and enforcing laws have an obligation to protect the rights of all individuals equally, without telling any faith how to define its sacraments. I respect the court's decision."
> Privately, O'Malley had assured gay rights activists and plaintiffs in the case that he supported marriage equality, only to reverse course and ultimately invoke his Catholic religious beliefs to justify his support of discrimination.
> From 2008-2010, O'Malley publicly backed civil unions as bills to legalize marriage equality were defeated in committee. He was even booed off the stage at a private LGBT donor gathering after advocating for civil unions over full marriage rights.
> In 2011, O'Malley finally said he would sign a marriage bill if passed. "I have concluded that discriminating against individuals based on their sexual orientation in the context of civil marital rights is unjust." That bill ultimately failed.
> It wasn't until New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo embraced the cause of marriage equality as a civil rights issue — and well after Maryland Attorney General Doug Gansler did the same — that O'Malley evolved yet again. Whereas Cuomo made it clear even before he was elected that he supported full marriage rights and then lobbied for the needed votes to pass it, O'Malley was — until 2012 —the reluctant advocate, offering meek, private assurances of support but refusing to publicly embrace the cause, even after winning a second term in a landslide.

Though he eventually came around to full support and was instrumental in preserving the law after it went to referendum, O'Malley was late to the marriage party and certainly doesn't deserve credit for its success.

O'Malley has, for years, embodied the poll-driven milquetoast politician who checks the wind before staking out a position. Now he wants us to believe otherwise.

"We have the ability as a party to lead by our principles or are we going to conduct polls every time we try to determine where the middle is on any given day," he told NPR this week.

We should welcome O'Malley's more progressive positions without forgetting his disappointing record of saying one thing in private and the opposite when the cameras are rolling.

Together with his son (you guessed it) William G. Martin, they opened the tavern in 1933. Martin says every president from Harry Truman to George W. Bush has had a meal at Martin's, and some had many many meals. Like Richard Nixon, who has his very own booth. It's a fun place to sit to sip a pint, but if you're on a date, see if you can snag the booth that bears a plaque about JFK's proposal to Jackie O.

Many a Jersey girl has made American history. Yes — we've got actresses such as Meryl Streep, athletes such as Carli Lloyd and musicians such as Dionne Warwick to brag about — but New Jersey has also been a place for historical women to make it possible for other women to make their marks as well.

The Annual Spring Scholarship Luncheon (April 27 this year) is now just a month away. As usual, the library asks for your help to prepare the exhibit for this event by sending us copies of your 2014-2015 scholarship if you haven't already done so.

Please send your copies of any book, book chapter, journal article, book review, Congressional testimony, or Supreme Court brief (published in 2014-15 or forthcoming in 2015) to Yelena Rodriguez. Alternatively, you can call her at x9136 or e-mail LibFacPubs@law.georgetown.edu to request pickup of your material. When sending items to the library, please indicate whether the items are on loan or a gift to the library's archives.

As usual, if you have additional questions about this or any other library service, please feel free to contact me.

Thanks,

Dear John and Cheryl—First, the President asked that I forward this draft letter to you for your review. The STB lawyers at our meeting yesterday (Dick Beattie, Jennifer and I) noted that a friendly written confirmation is usual in such circumstances. The President indicated that he would also be more comfortable having a written record. I believe that he intends to discuss this with each of you as to content, timing, and delivery.

Second, we noted that names had been removed from the Teneo website and that one biography had been amended. However, JC's biography as of yesterday still contained an overreaching sentence that the President would like either edited or deleted. He asked that I bring that to your attention so that whoever is having those conversations could ask for this change.

Please let me know if have any questions or would like to speak.

Best regards,

Victoria

Home care providers, consumers will talk with Hillary Clinton about need for quality long-term care

LOS ANGELES—Home care providers and consumers will meet Thursday afternoon in Los Angeles with former Secretary of State and Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton. These providers, including SEIU members, and people who rely on home care will talk about how they have joined together with a focus on providing quality home care that allows older Americans and people with disabilities to live at home with dignity.

Some 19 million seniors need long term care supports and services, and that number is set to nearly double by 2050. But only about 2 million people make up the workforce available to care for these older Americans—and the gap is growing .

This event will be open to press. Workers and consumers will also be available to media after the event to share their stories.

A live video stream of the event will be found at SEIU.org ; details will be provided closer to the event.

WHAT: Remarks and roundtable discussion on home care

WHO:D Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton; home care providers, consumers

WHEN: Thurs., Aug. 6, XX

WHERE: Los Angeles Trade-Technical College, 400 W. Washington Blvd.,

Subject: RE: Podesta Outstanding Docs for Joule

Eryn,

Thanks for sending this set of documents and the original stock option agreement document that John found (and which we did not have in our files probably due to administrative oversight at our end which I will explain further).

First, with respect to the stock option agreement, there is a discrepancy in the stated vesting schedule between the one John signed back in 2011 and the one I sent to Bob which you sent back to me signed. This first document shows a 3 year vesting schedule and the current one shows a 4 year schedule. Accordingly, I dug back further and confirm that the original terms were for a 4 year vesting schedule of which John was ¾ vested (this reflects what John actually exercised – i.e. 75,000 out of 100,000 options). The 4 year schedule is reflected in the "offer" letter which our previous CEO sent to John and John signed and sent back. It is also reflected in the Board minutes where John's grant was approved. Please see the attachments for reference. The good news is that I think John understands these options to be 4 year vesting and that his exercise of 75,000 shares is correct. The original stock option agreement with the erroneous 3 year vesting was sent and signed in error due to scrivener's error by the folks at Joule who were handling this at the time (based on what I can tell, this was prepared by a junior finance person who left the company several years ago). Bob and John Cobb and I can brainstorm on how to deal with this discrepancy – maybe some sort of acknowledgement by the Company and John Podesta that the first version was signed in error.

Second, it is my understanding that John transferred the resulting 75,000 common shares from the option exercise to the Leonidio LLC. As such, we would need to edit the Transfer of Share Agreement to reflect the transfer of 75,000 common shares to the LLC. The LLC would also sign a form of joinder agreement covering the common shares tying them to the provisions of the 2007 Stock Plan. I am comfortable with correcting the applicable page to the Transfer Agreement to reflect the common shares as we assemble the final documentation package. I think the LLC would need to sign a form of joinder agreement with regard to the 75,000 common shares – which I hope you can help coordinate. I think Bob and John Cobb have the final documents on their system with the Podesta/LLC particulars and I can edit them if they can send to me. Everything is dated January 3, 2014 as intended.

Perhaps Bob or John Cobb can jump in with their thoughts on how they would like to proceed.

Thank you,

Mark

Subject:	Strategy meeting--New New Deal

Hi John,

I hope you're having a good holiday.

Sorry that Steve and I didn't get to see you in DC last week. Here's a little about what we wanted to talk to you about. Steve and I have been spending some time trying to understand the opportunities created by the convergence of this terrible economic crisis and the election of Obama. We want to understand what it means to do justice to the opportunities for long-term structural changes that address poverty and security,, regulation, etc.--what is possible in these areas on the New Deal order of magnitude. Given the pace at which things are moving in D.C., we wanted to start this conversation as soon as possible.

I am interested in understanding the best way for my family's foundation to plug into these opportunities, and Steve is interested in exploring these areas both in terms of the Democracy Alliance and PowerPAC (the organization that Steve runs that does electoral and campaign work).

I have two questions for you in relation to this project?

1. I'd love to see if you have time for a phone call—it would be great to get your thoughts on this topic. Steve Daetz would also be interested in participating if we can set something up. Do you have some times that would work?

2. We're inviting a dozen philanthropic, political, labor, think tank, and community leaders whose work and thinking we respect to join us for a day of serious exploration of what might be possible in the near, medium, and long-term.

Do you think you might be able to participate?

We'd like to get a date locked in asap, so if you could let me know your availability for a meeting in D.C. between January 12th and February 13th, that would be great.

Take care,

Susan

John,
I'm retired male veteran, college grad, businessman and lifelong Democrat. I support Hillary as I know she's FAR more competent than Senator Sanders.
I'll be honest, I could support Donald Trump in a general election despite all the warts. Reasons?
*Trumps will get things done. Hillary will rely on triangulation which probably won't work in 2017. Backbone will.
*I'm a dinosaur to the Democratic Party..white, southern, vereran, male senior. Party leaders like Debbie Wasserman-Shultz, Karen Finney, etal make that blatantly apparent.

I don't need my assed kissed. I would like to have my ilk shown a tiny bit of respect by the leaders of the Hillary campaign.

Respectfully,

Mr. Dana Folsom

Subject:	Foundation \| Foreign Contributors Statement

Based on our conversation earlier this evening, below is the statement with the Clintons' feedback that we can start to push out in the morning. Thanks again to everyone for talking this through today.

"Like other global charities, the Clinton Foundation receives support from individuals, organizations and governments from all over the world. Contributions are made because of a strong belief that the Foundation's programs improve the lives of millions of people around the globe. The Clinton Foundation has a record of transparency that goes above what is required of U.S. charities, including peer organizations. This includes the voluntary disclosure of contributions on the Foundation's website. Should Secretary Clinton decide to run for office, we will continue to ensure the Foundation's policies and practices regarding support from international partners are appropriate, just as we did when she served as Secretary of State."

Subject:	Warren staff meeting

As follow up to HRC's meeting with Warren, I spent about an hour and twenty minutes this afternoon with Dan Geldon, a longtime advisor to the Senator. He was intently focused on personnel issues, laid out a detailed case against the Bob Rubin school of Democratic policy makers, was very critical of the Obama administration's choices, and explained at length the opposition to Antonio Weiss. We then carefully went through a list of people they do like, which EW sent over to HRC earlier. We have already been in touch with a number of them and I asked if he would be comfortable introducing me to the others, to which he seemed reasonably amenable. We spent less time on specific policies, because he seemed less interested in that. (Although he did express some flexibility on Glass-Steagall, said too big too fail is the bigger issue, and was open to our ideas on addressing through the tax code assuming it actually works.) He spoke repeatedly about the need to have in place people with ambition and urgency who recognize how much the middle class is hurting and are willing to challenge the financial industry. Starting with her speech at the AFL this week, EW will be pushing back against the President's message that the economy is getting better and urging us not to get distracted by metrics like GDP and unemployment when so much else remains wrong.

Over all, it was a polite and engaged but not exactly warm conversation. They seem wary — and pretty convinced that the Rubin folks have the inside track with us whether we realize it yet or not — but open to engagement and to be proven wrong. He mentioned that everyone will be watching carefully any leaks about who HRC is meeting and talking to.

We agreed to stay in touch and I'll follow up, including to ask for introductions to specific people he mentioned.

Dan

could we do:
Thurs SEC/CFTC/Fed-bd
Fri Labor/USTR/Transp
Sat Science roll-out - taped friday for saturday radio address

I don't want to short change the scientists, but the Labor/USTR/Transp seems like a lot to fit into a radio address (if we've got decisions and are ready to all 3 of those before PE goes away?)

just spoke to Dan Pfeiffer, he says Labor may feel slighted if we don't give them an announcement, there's already rumblings that we announced the whole Econ team and not Labor, so journos may write that we aren't taking Labor seriously. We also wondered if like Education today, we should go somewhere to do the Labor/ Transp announcement?

Breaking News: Bush Coming to Colorado
Launch of ShiftySchaffer Website and Video to counter visit

For Immediate Release
Wednesday, January 9, 2008
Contact: Michael Huttner
(303) 931-4547

Denver: ProgressNowAction launched a new website and the first in a "Shifty" Schaffer video series to promote awareness of President Bush coming to Colorado on Thursday, January 31, 2008 for a fundraiser benefiting Bob Schaffer's campaign for the U.S. Senate.

"Why has Schaffer been hiding Bush's visit from the media and people of Colorado?," asked Michael Huttner, Executive Director of ProgressNowAction, Colorado's largest online progressive advocacy organization. "Schaffer, like Bush, has a history of not being straight with the people of Colorado."

This morning, ProgressNowAction launched a 30 second video--the first in a "Shifty" Bob Schaffer video series which highlighted Schaffer's record of lying to the public. The video can viewed at:

http://ShiftySchaffer.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

ProgressNowAction also launched its "Shifty Schaffer Accountability Project" to call on the public to visit http://ShiftySchaffer.com to submit anonymous tips on Schaffer's record.

"We are calling on the public to submit their ideas to http://ShiftySchaffer.com on how to raise awareness of Bush's visit and for any information on Schaffer's extreme, and often unethical record," noted Huttner.

The Bush-Shifty Schaffer Tie

Schaffer now claims he is not a DC insider, but once bragged to the press that President Bush fondly referred to him as "Bobby Boy." (Rocky Mountain News, July 15, 2004)

Schaffer now claims he's against pork barrel projects, but as a Congressman lobbied for a $400,000 earmark for a train museum named after the Bush family. [Schaffer letter to Rep. Regula, 10/29/2002; Papers of Congressman Schaffer]

ProgressNowAction learned of Bush's visit following a tip from one of its members.

Before You Begin
Before you can install and use the Georgetown VPN (Virtual Private Network), you will need the following:

- Intel-based Mac (Mac OS X 10.6 or higher)
- Internet connection
- Most recent Mac OS critical updates
- Latest virus definitions (check with your antivirus program for details)

Downloading and Installing Georgetown SafeConnect

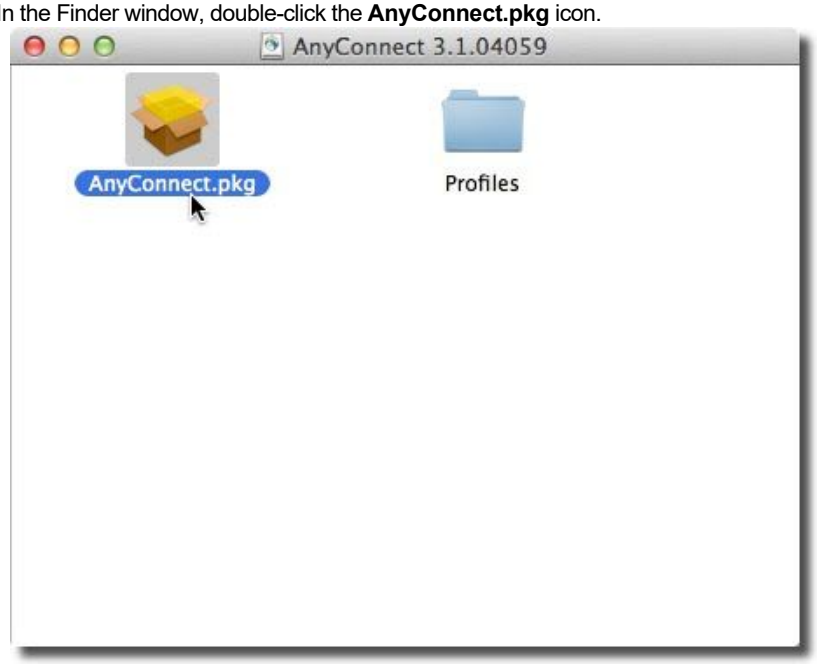

1. Click https://sites.google.com/a/georgetown.edu/uis-docs/internet/anyconnect-macosx-i386-3.1.04059-k9.dmg . The installer file, anyconnect-macosx-i386-3.1.04059-k9.dmg, will be downloaded automatically to your computer.

2. Click on the down-pointing arrow next to the installer file listing at the bottom of your screen, and then select Show in Finder from the drop-down menu.

3. In the Finder window, double-click the AnyConnect.pkg icon.

4. In the installer welcome window, click Continue.

5. In the Software License Agreement window, click Continue.

6. In the next window, click Agree.

7. Click Continue in the next window.

Subject: Say hello to the new Starbucks Rewards

This April, enjoy Green status and more exciting changes | View Online

Dear John,

We have exciting news to share, and we wanted our members to be the first to know. This April, My Starbucks Rewards becomes Starbucks Rewards, a new program that reflects the #1 request we heard from members: more Stars awarded based on what you buy, no matter how often you visit. It's another great reason to stop by and get rewarded for what you buy with your Starbucks® App or registered Card.

WHAT'S CHANGING

As part of the launch, we will upgrade you to Green status, giving you access to a new benefit of free in-store refills on brewed coffee or tea. You'll also earn 2 Stars for every $1 you spend on coffee, food, drinks, mugs–and more. After you've collected 300 Stars within one year through purchases and Bonus Star offers, you'll reach Gold status.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

WHAT THIS MEANS FOR YOU

We'll take care of everything. Any Stars in your account will multiply to reflect the change once we launch the new program in April.

MORE GOOD THINGS TO COME

The benefits you currently enjoy will stay the same, and you'll enjoy even more with your new Green status. And that's just the beginning—we'll also be launching new ways for you to earn more Stars, both in and out of our stores.

Over the next few weeks, we'll continue to share more details about the new program. In the meantime, everything you need to know is available at Starbucks.com/MoreStars

Sincerely,

Aimee Johnson

Senior Vice President, Starbucks Rewards

Subject:	on the air

Dear John,

Thank you for your help in delivering an overwhelming victory in Tuesday's Democratic primary. Now on to November. With less than seven weeks left before Election Day, I want to give you a quick update on the state of the race.

Just this week, Kirsten launched her first TV ad of the campaign. It is a great ad that focuses on her leading role as a reformer in Washington, fighting for more accountability and transparency in government. The ad is running in Buffalo, Rochester, and Syracuse, but we want to run it in New York City and across the state and you can help us with that.

Click here to watch the ad and make a contribution to help us keep it on the air.

Also, after months of bickering, the Republicans have selected former Congressman Joe DioGuardi to try and defeat Kirsten. A Congressman turned lobbyist, DioGuardi is completely out of step with New York.

He opposes a woman's right to choose and actually wants to overturn Roe vs. Wade. He even opposes reproductive rights in cases of rape and incest.

DioGuardi, who is also running on the Conservative line, has proposed dangerous cuts to Social Security and Medicare benefits and favors failed economic policies that actually reward companies that ship jobs overseas.

The national Republican Party has made taking control of the Senate a top priority. Already outside groups are outspending Democrats by 10 to 1. With just 46 days until election day, we expect the New York airwaves to be flooded with false and negative attacks on Kirsten very soon.

Click here to make a contribution of $200, $500 or more and help us be prepared to fight back.

It will be a sprint between now and Election Day and we need you with us. Thanks for all you do.

Hey everyone! I forgot to mention something critical on the pace calculator: the estimated time is done according to relative miles (which factors in elevation as best it can). If your pace has changed drastically, let me know and I'll update the calculator accordingly in another week or so. Final versions will go in the binders I'll make for each van (including the race bible and directions to exchanges and to/from hotel).

Van 2, Emily has been training like a beast and offered to switch running slots if anyone has been having difficulty training or physical ailments. Let her and me know if you want to switch.

Now if any of you are math geeks, here's where I might need your help! If you notice any gross errors (don't nitpick me over 30 seconds--sometimes I rounded up or down), please let me know, as I'm not getting much more than 2-3 ours of sleep at a time these days and my math could be off. Hopefully this helps everyone with training.

Many of us have crossed paths over the years, but it would be nice to get to know each other better outside of conference calls and email chains.

I know everyone's swamped and we're split between at least two cities, but maybe we could all get together for a social, connecting-names-to-faces gathering, no agenda, minimal shop talk. This group and anyone else that makes sense.

Not breakfast at the Four Seasons for all to see, but somewhere we won't be spotted. I'd also be more than happy to host at my place - the New Yorkers can Skype in!

[Fair warning: a cornerstone of my resolution to improve my conference call manners has been to shift to video conferences as much as possible. It's easy and Skype can handle up to 10 users. If you aren't able to video in, you can dial. It's a much more pleasant way of interacting.]

Knowing Huma this idea is on her to-do list. But on behalf of the DCers, I wanted to preempt her...

We just emailed our members about the hawks' call for a big escalation in Afghanistan. We encouraged them to write to the White House asking for a clear exit strategy and opposing a rush to escalate.

We thought that it was important to push back as quickly as possible to give the voices in the administration pushing for a strategy shift room to make their case. Greg Sargent just posted about it at http://theplumline.whorunsgov.com/afghanistan/moveon-to-call-on-obama-to-pull-out-of-afghanistan/ and the email is below.

Dear MoveOn member,

U.S. policy in Afghanistan has reached a pivotal moment. President Obama is poised to make a critical decision about the Afghanistan war in the next few weeks. And there's a big debate happening right now about what to do.[1]

Pro-war advocates both inside and outside the administration—including John McCain and Joe Lieberman—are calling for a big escalation.[2] The general in charge of Afghanistan is expected to request tens of thousands more troops, and that may just be the beginning.[3] They're cranking up the pressure for an immediate surge.

But other powerful voices are urging caution: Vice President Biden and White House Chief of Staff Rahm Emanuel have raised real concerns about the idea of sending more troops to Afghanistan without a clear strategy[4], as have Democrats in Congress.[5] And a majority of Americans oppose increasing troop levels.[6]

Can you write to the White House and tell them we need a clear exit strategy—not tens of thousands more US troops stuck in a quagmire? You can send the President a message by clicking below:

http://www.moveon.org/r?r=51843&id=&t=1

Some administration officials are arguing for a smaller, nimbler approach with a narrow focus on the threat from al-Qaeda. But cheerleaders for the war refuse to acknowledge that there could be any viable strategy other than more and more troops. So they're trotting out the same tired old lines and questioning the motives of those who disagree with them.[7]

They figure they can cut off any debate about our ultimate goals in Afghanistan and the region. But President Obama has consistently shown a willingness to stand up for his more thoughtful approach to foreign policy, and that's what he needs to do here, too.

The hawks are making their position heard. Now, the majority of Americans—those of us who are for as quick and as responsible an end to the war as possible—need to make our voices heard, too.

Can you write to the President now?

Subject: Hi Angel and Tina -- running stuff by you re Clinton/Trump story in tomorrow's NYT

Hi Angel, hi Tina,

Hope you're both well. Amy Chozick and I are doing a story about how the Clinton campaign and its supporters view Trump as a general election opponent and plan to run against him. The story will run in tomorrow's paper.

One part of the story deals with how Secretary Clinton, President Clinton, President Obama, and other Dems regard Trump as a potential general election opponent.

I wanted to run some points by you about President Clinton, based on our reporting with allies and campaign advisers and other Dems who have spoken to him.

We're told that President Clinton (like Mrs. Clinton and some other Dems) thinks that Trump would be a formidable opponent in the general election, and that Dems are in a form of denial if they dismiss Trump as a joke who would be easily defeated in November. President Clinton, like others, thinks that Trump has his finger on the pulse of the electorate's mood and that only a well-financed, concerted campaign portrayed him as dangerous and bigoted will win what both Clintons believe will be a close November election.

We're told that President Clinton (like Mrs. Clinton and many other Dems) thinks the single greatest weapon against Trump is Trump's own instinct to make outrageous, divisive, even hateful comments that can come across as unpresidential. He, Mrs. Clinton, and the campaign all agree that they will need to seize on opportunities to paint Trump as extremist and recklessly impulsive.

We're told that President Clinton, like Secretary Clinton and some others, think Trump could pose a real threat in battleground states that President Obama carried in 2008 and 2012 -- like Virginia and Ohio -- and he will be competitive in Florida, Pennsylvania, Michigan, and Wisconsin.

We're also told that the campaign intends to unleash President Clinton on social media and the campaign trail when Trump lashes out/tries to sway the news cycle.

Happy to talk this over by email or phone before 6pm today. Thanks, Patrick

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE June 16, 2008

NARAL Pro-Choice America Releases Presidential Battleground Poll

Survey shows choice issue can move key blocs of women voters to Obama

Washington, DC – Today, NARAL Pro-Choice America released a general election battleground poll that shows choice creates a sharp contrast between the pro-choice candidate Sen. Barack Obama and the anti-choice Sen. John McCain and is a top issue for moving pro-choice Republican and Independent women to support Obama. When this critical bloc of swing voters hears just how anti-choice McCain is and his belief that Roe v. Wade should be overturned, they leave him in significant numbers. Additionally, the poll shows that choice helps Obama shore up the Democratic women voters that some thought would not support him following Sen. Hillary Clinton's suspension of her campaign.

Greenberg Quinlan Rosner Research conducted the poll, which included an oversample of pro-choice Republican and Independent women from 12 presidential battleground states: Colorado, Florida, Iowa, Michigan, Missouri, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Wisconsin.

"The data shows that choice is an important issue that can move key voting blocs of pro-choice Republican and Independent women who can play an important role in building Obama's winning coalition," said Al Quinlan, president of Greenberg Quinlan Rosner Research. "Because NARAL Pro-Choice America communicates extensively with this unique swing constituency, NARAL's efforts in 2008 can help Barack Obama win what may be a close election."

Greenberg Quinlan Rosner Research's poll shows that once pro-choice Republican and Independent women hear a balanced description of the candidates' respective positions on choice, Obama gains ground:

> Obama gains 13 points among pro-choice Independent women (who make up nine percent of this electorate) and nine points among pro-choice Republican women (who account for five percent of this electorate), when they hear McCain's anti-choice record.
> When these groups are combined, this movement equates to a gain of 1.6 points overall in the general election race against McCain.

Choice is the top issue for moving these key audiences to Obama, trumping other traditional Democratic issues and attacks on McCain. Among key voting blocs of pro-choice Independent and Republican women, McCain's anti-choice record concerns them more than attacks on his economic plan and his position on the war in Iraq.

> Among pro-choice Independent women, 83 percent said that McCain's opposition to abortion for many women – even in cases of rape, incest or when a woman's life is in danger – causes serious doubts about McCain.
> For these same voters, 79 percent say that McCain's votes against birth control access raises serious doubts in their minds about McCain.
> Among pro-choice Republican women, 71 percent said that McCain's opposition to abortion for many women

– even in cases of rape, incest or when a woman's life is in danger – causes serious doubts about McCain.

For these same voters, 61 percent say that McCain's votes against birth control access raises serious doubts in their minds about McCain.

Finally, the polling shows that choice can help Obama gain more ground among women voters considered to be Hillary Clinton strongholds: non-college educated women, older women, and suburban women.

Among non-college women, Obama's margin over McCain grows by 12 points between the initial vote and the vote after their choice positions are known.

Among older women, Obama's margin over McCain grows by 11 points between the initial vote and the vote after their choice positions are known.

Among suburban women, Obama's margin over McCain grows by nine points between the initial vote and the vote after their choice positions are known.

Among Democratic women generally, Obama's margin over McCain grows by 12 points between the initial vote and the vote after their choice positions are known.

"This poll confirms what we've known for a long time now," said Nancy Keenan, president of NARAL Pro-Choice America. "NARAL Pro-Choice America is uniquely positioned to help pro-choice candidates win elections from the White House to the state house. We will be working tirelessly over the next five months to ensure NARAL Pro-Choice America's endorsed candidate, Sen. Obama, becomes president-elect Obama on November 4, 2008."

Greenberg Quinlan Rosner Research conducted this poll for NARAL Pro-Choice America between May 29 and June 8, 2008 in 12 battleground states. This survey of 1,788 likely November voters (1,000 representative likely voters plus oversamples of 424 likely-voting Republican women and 364 likely-voting Independent women) is subject to a margin of error of +/- 3.1 percentage points.

John,

It was good to run into you, however briefly, at the Vice President's holiday party. I've been wanting to connect with you in the year or so I've been leading the DA, but since it coincided with your return to the White House, I wanted to give you a wide berth.

I'm writing for two reasons. First, the DA is meeting in San Francisco April 12-15 for its tenth anniversary conference. Since you and I were among the handful of non-donors who were present for the first meeting at the Boulders in Arizona ten years ago, I'd love you to attend this anniversary gathering, and to play a part in the program. As you may know, in the new DA strategy for now through 2020 — I'll be happy to share a copy with you — climate change is one of our key areas of emphasis.

Second, I'd love to get together when you have some breathing space to have coffee or lunch and catch up. There are a few things I'd love your advice on.

Let me know whether you can join us in San Francisco and whether I can have Gwen Roby follow up to make us a date.

Hey John,

Happy Weekend to you, Mary and the Podesta gang!

I'm going to be in DC this coming Tuesday and Wednesday, seeing Neera and a bunch of folks you know. If you're in town, I'd love to catch up briefly...

Any chance you could grab lunch at DC Coast on Tuesday? Lemme know if that or any other options work, and hope to see you soon. All best,

Jim

Senate President Niehaus Agrees Ohio Health Care Referendum Will Have No Legal Force Or Effect

In an interview with Bill Hemmer of FOX News yesterday, Senate President Tom Niehaus agreed that even if the Tea Party's "Ohio Health Care Freedom Act" does pass, state law will not trump federal law meaning the vote for the Ohio Consitutional Amendment will have no legal force or effect whatsoever.

HEMMER: What I read is that there might be a court challenge even before you get to November. I don't know if that's the case or not. But critics contend even if it does pass, state law will not trunk (sic) federal law here. Are they right?

NIEHAUS: Well, that's true, but again I think it's important that voters have an opportunity to tell their elected officials in Washington, and in particular the president of the United States, how they feel about some of his initiatives.

Interview with State Senator Tom Niehaus

A constitutional amendment that is known to be legally null and void before it is even voted upon? Why would the leader of Republicans in the Ohio Senate be for that? Could it be that he recognizes the need to try to stir up the referendum's tea party supporters to get them to the polls this fall hoping they will vote for maintaining SB5?

Peeved Paul Ryan Cryin' about GOP Hypocrisy

The Daily Beast reported Monday that 'Young Gun' Paul Ryan thinks GOP House leadership has misfired by not embracing his plan to cut taxes for the rich at the expensive of the middle class, instead embracing its own plan to cut taxes for the rich at the expense of the middle class.

> Ryan, 40, is supposed to be the bullet-proof numbers guy, ranking on the House Budget Committee, who is eager to take the chairmanship in the new Congress following the promised wave election; he is supposed to be the gifted ingénue who spent these last years in the minority bent over his spread sheets while he tweaked his grindingly wonkish genius of 2008, "A Roadmap for America's Future."
> Instead, the Paul Ryan talked about these days on the Hill is withdrawn, conflicted, chagrined, and unavailable. And most importantly, he was missing in action last week at the ballyhooed Republican roll-out of "The Pledge to America" in a Virginia hardware store.

Well, not completely unavailable and not completely withdrawn it seems. According to audio obtained by One Wisconsin Now, Ryan has taken his pout fest on the Wisconsin campaign trail.

Ryan, appearing at a fundraiser Monday morning in Monroe for Republican Dan Henke, who is trying to succeed Kleefisch Kasualty, Brett Davis, in the state Assembly had this to say about "Republicans":

> So, the mistake we made -- the Republicans -- was we committed the greatest sin in politics: the sin of hypocrisy. When you run as fiscal conservatives, when you run on the principles of economic liberty and you don't govern that way, that's hypocrisy. That's what happened to the republicans. Republicans, a lot of us, fought the earmark culture and all those other things, but we lost. Because, the more senior, you know, uh, power guys, they kind of had this belief: we can take this Democratic machine and make it a Republican machine. And what happened was our principles atrophied. We've got to get that back.

Pretty damning stuff. To hear it for yourself, listen here: Paul Ryan.mp3

He's right, though. The hypocrisy of Republicans is particularly galling this year.

Actually, it raises the question: What is hypocrisy about hypocrisy called?

After all, the presently-parsimonious Paul Ryan spent the lights out for eight years while Tom DeLay and Company ruled the House of Representatives.

Consider, the spending packed into the Young Gun's holster:

- Ryan voted for eight straight GOP budgets which hiked spending by $1 trillion - all told, Ryan voted for $20 trillion in budget spending alone.
- Ryan helped finance two wars of the budget books
- Ryan voted for the Medicare Part D plan, which former GAO head David Walker called an $8 trillion unfunded mandate.

Indeed, Paul, hypocrisy is an unseemly trait.

A few things.
I don't know what a "no ceilings economy" is and I don't think the theory -- America can only live up to its potential... Really works. America's problem hasn't been a lack of success it has been the inequality and leaving people out or behind.
If our core Econ philosophy is based on strong growth is fair growth that will creat good paying jobs and break down barriers to opportunity should be we use that?

We're standing again after the crisis, but big changes in our economy have made it harder for families to get ahead. Costs rising faster than wages. Too many barriers to opportunity. Too much talent stuck on the sidelines. And a return to failed Republican policies will make it even harder. So I'll fight to create good-paying jobs, raise incomes, and actually make a difference in people's lives. Bring down the cost of prescription drugs and health care. Guarantee equal pay for women. And make sure no one has to borrow a dime to pay tuition at a public college or university. We need a "No Ceilings Economy" where everyone who works hard has a ladder of opportunity. Because America can only live up to its potential when you can live up to yours. You can count on me to get up every day and fight for you and for our country. (169 words)

Thanks Karen -- we want to be sure we get this right. There are only very passing references to Iran and climate change, just as the set-up when she says she's not just focusing on those issues, she's focusing on the issues keeping people up at night. Then she talks about raising wages and supporting families. If you have specific suggestions for places you think this hits the wrong notes, maybe you could send edits or notes in tracked changes to Lauren so she can work them in.
Thanks

Got a fairly lengthy confidential briefing from WH sherpa tonight on draft G20 communique. It's still subject to two days of negotiation, so may chabge a good bit. There are no dramatic immediate steps -- instead lots of principles, action plans,etc. Some we'd like more than others, but I didn't hear anything that's just horrible.

One big point, though, is intention to have another Leaders meeting no later than 3/31/09.. Wd probably be hosted by UK -- possibly by Japan. This wd obviously be BO's fist big int'l gig. Don't know how much we cd influence this if we wanted to, and I don't know that we'd want Bush guys in any way acting on our behalf. But I wanted to let you know right away

Hi John,

Sorry I didn't get to say hello in person today. Everyone rushed the stage and you were gone! I enjoyed the panel discussion....including hearing my hometown Mayor, Julian Castro. I wanted to say hello via email and propose that we grab coffee and sit down in person some time soon, either when you're in NYC or when I'm in DC. Peter Baker and other colleagues speak highly of you, and I am really looking forward to hopefully working with you over the next couple of years.

All the best,

Subject: [big campaign] True Colors: GOPers Cheer Victory For Big Corporations

GOP Is Overjoyed At The Unprecedented Influence Corporations Will Now Have In Federal Campaigns

http://thinkprogress.org/2010/01/21/gop-citizens-united/

During the 2008 presidential campaign, the conservative group Citizens United made a movie critical of Hillary Clinton but was barred from distributing it on local cable systems because federal courts said it "looked and sounded like a long campaign ad, and therefore should be regulated like one." The Supreme Court then took up the case and in its much-anticipated decision, today ruled 5-4 to allow corporations and unions to spend unlimited funds in support for, or opposition of, federal candidates. The monumental ruling throws out a "a 63-year-old law designed torestrain the influence of big business and unions on elections.

One Republican attorney said that the new ruling basically turns the political landscape into the "Wild Wild West." Another GOP election lawyer said that the ruling represents "a huge sea-change in campaign finance law. The Court went all the way. It reallyrelieves any restrictions on corporate spending on independent advertising."

As Common Cause noted, the ruling "will enhance the ability of the deepest-pocketed special interests to influence elections and the U.S. Congress." U.S. PIRG called it a "shocking burst of judicial activism" that treats corporations "in the same manner as ordinary citizens." Fred Wertheimer of Democracy 21 said the ruling will "create unprecedented opportunities for corporate 'influence-buying ' corruption."

The ruling is a giant win for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the big corporations, which tend to donate heavily to Republicans. Many Republicans have therefore come out and praised today's decision:

– Sen. John Cornyn (R-TX): "It is about a nonprofit group's ability to speak about the public issue. I can't think of a more fundamental First Amendment issue. … [The ruling could] open up resources that have not previously been available [for Republicans]." [NYT]

– Rep. Steve King (R-IA): "The Constitution protects the rights of citizens and employers to express their viewpoints on political issues. Today's Supreme Court decision affirms the Bill of Rights and is a victory for liberty and free speech." [Statement]

– Rep. Mike Pence (R-IN): "If the freedom of speech means anything, it means protecting the right of private citizens to voice opposition or support for their elected representatives. The fact that the Court overturned a 20-year precedent speaks volumes about the importance of this issue." [Statement]

– Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-KY): The court took a step toward "restoring the First Amendment rights [of corporations and unions]. … By previously denying this right, the government was picking winners and losers." [AP]

– RNC Chairman Michael Steele: "Today's decision by the Supreme Court in Citizens United v. FEC, serves as an affirmation of the constitutional rights provided to Americans under the first amendment. Free speech strengthens our democracy." [Statement]

– Senate Candidate Marco Rubio: "Today's SCOTUS decision on McCain-Feingold is a victory for free speech." [Statement]

The Court's ruling also struck down part of the McCain-Feingold campaign finance reform legislation "that barred union- and corporate-paid issue ads in the closing days of election campaigns." Sen. Russ Feingold called the Court's ruling a "terrible mistake ," but pointed out that it "does not affect McCain-Feingold's soft money ban, which will continue to prevent corporate contributions to the political parties from corrupting the political process." "The Supreme Court chose to roll back laws that have limited the role of corporate money in federal elections since Teddy Roosevelt was president," he said. Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) reacted similarly, saying he was "disappointed " in the decision.

Germany's Defense Budget Increase: Analytically Wrong but Politically Right

Christian Mölling — January 29, 2016

BERLIN—This week, German Defense Minister Ursula von der Leyen announced that she wants to spend €130 billion ($140 billion) on defense equipment until 2030 — increasing the overall defense spending by €3-4 billion annually over the next 15 years. The bold announcement was actually the latest step in a longer-term plan by the German government to reverse the decline of the defense budget. But though the budget increase is analytically wrong, it is politically right...

Subject: [big campaign] Cheney: On GM, Bush Passed The Buck

Video at the link.

Cheney Acknowledges Passing The Buck On GM: Bush Didn't 'Want To Be The One Who Pulled The Plug'

Last night on Fox News, Vice President Cheney admitted that the Bush administration deliberately decided to pass the buck on GM and let President Obama deal with the problem. Cheney admitted that he thought the "right outcome was going to be bankruptcy," but that President Bush didn't want to "be the one who pulled the plug." Instead, the Bush administration put together a costly auto bailout to stem the tide until President Obama took office:

> CHENEY: Well, I thought that, eventually, the right outcome was going to be bankruptcy. … And the president decided that he did not want to be the one who pulled the plug just before he left office.

So he put together a package that tided GM over until the new administration had a chance to look at it, decide what they wanted to do.

I think it's — it does damage to our long-term economic prospects when we get government involved in making those kinds of decisions.

Watch it:

When announcing his $17.4 billion auto bailout in December 2008, Bush said that "bankruptcy now would lead to a disorderly liquidation of American auto companies." Cheney is now saying that they were thinking about bankruptcy all along, but instead used billions of dollars of taxpayer money to push their problems onto the Obama administration.

Even former Republican senator Rick Santorum last week went on Greta's show and chastised the Bush administration, saying that officials "blew it" for punting the problems onto Obama:

> SANTORUM: President Bush blew it. You know, he went out and convinced the Congress to give him a bunch of money to save the financial sector and then decided to take a little piece of that and give it to General Motors and Chrysler. Why? He punted. He basically said, I don't want this failure to be on my watch. I want to let Obama deal with it. And we all knew at the time that letting Obama deal with it means the government's going to come in and run the show, and that's exactly what's happened.

Of course, even though Obama has managed to prevent a "disorderly liquidation of American auto companies," it isn't good enough for Cheney. Of course, Cheney offered no alternative vision during last night's interview.

Transcript:

VAN SUSTEREN: On last question is on GM. We've spent an awful lot of money since last fall on GM to only have them end up in bankruptcy. Going back to last fall, would you have let them go into — or would you have pushed them into bankruptcy, do you think then, I mean, now that we've spent billions, or did you think that it was sort of a good idea to do what we've been doing?

CHENEY: Well, I thought that, eventually, the right outcome was going to be bankruptcy. They had to go through such a dramatic restructuring to have any chance of survival that they had to be able to renegotiate labor contracts, and so forth. And the president decided that he did not want to be the one who pulled the plug just before he left office.

VAN SUSTEREN: Why?

CHENEY: Well, I think he felt, you know, these are big issues and he wouldn't be there through the process of managing it, but in effect, would have sort of pulled the plug on GM and that was one of the first crises the new administration would have to deal with. So he put together a package that tided GM over until the new administration had a chance to look at it, decide what they wanted to do.

VAN SUSTEREN: But it's cost us billions to get — I mean, you know –

CHENEY: It has.

VAN SUSTEREN: I mean –

CHENEY: And now the government –

VAN SUSTEREN: I mean, and we've now spent billions.

CHENEY: And now the government owns a big chunk of General Motors. That bothers me. I don't like having government own those kinds of major financial enterprises. I think it's — it does damage to our long-term economic prospects when we get government involved in making those kinds of decisions.

The private sector then I think will be very different, function differently, if it's full of government-owned enterprises, than would otherwise be the case.

Hi Secretary,

Thrilled to be in touch. We are hoping that you'll help us out by penning an op-ed that we can try to place into Colorado hitting Bernie Sanders for some of the votes he's made that were harmful to immigrants and stopped our country from making progress toward a fair immigration system. Attached are some of the key points we'd want to hit. We can draft for you, and get placed, but wanted to run the idea by you. Thank you!

Let's def discuss when we review scripts but I think we gotta do this in IA and Nh. Our thesis is that our stuff doesn't cut through as well because it doesn't intersect w the crap they hear about her on the news. I feel like this is the kinda stuff we need to do to actually move numbers right now.
At least worth trying this month. If numbers don't move then we can go back to plan A.

Just wanted to send a quick update on where we are following today's HRC call:

- All three TV firms are script writing, we'll review drafts tomorrow afternoon. Research had pulled for us some of our best news clips. The trick, of course, is to connect Benghazi to emails in a way that's credible. But we discussed different ways to do it.

- The difficult part here is testing – if we want to ship something early next week, our testing options are very limited, and I feel like we really need to understand whether voters will believe that we can credibly conflate Benghazi and emails. But we do have groups tonight and tomorrow afternoon – so tonight, we're testing some video clips tonight in the groups and this spot that the digital team mocked up: https://app.frame.io/f/2Kh530dn

- GMMB is working on a more polished spot for tomorrow afternoon's groups.

Looking ahead to next week, I think we still need to resolve whether this is limited to a national cable buy or whether we're really going into IA and NH with this (currently mixed opinions on team). To do the latter, we'd be pulling other spots off the air before otherwise planned.

Please let me know if you'd like to further discuss any of this.

Subject:	Mitch McConnell is Wrong - President Obama's Supreme Court Nominee Must Get an Up-or-Down Vote

Dear Activist,

Shortly after Justice Antonin Scalia's death, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell declared, "this vacancy should not be filled until we have a new President."

Absolutely no one in America is fooled by this raw Republican partisanship; if this was the last year of a Republican Presidency, McConnell would adamantly insist on a speedy replacement. And even Justice Scalia would concede there is nothing in the Constitution that cancels the President's appointment power in an election year.

Please join our friends at CREDO Action in urging the Senate to hold fair hearings and an up-or-down vote on President Obama's Supreme Court nominee.

Thanks for all you do!

Bob Fertik

President Obama's Supreme Court nominee must get an up-or-down vote

The petition to Senate Republican leadership reads:
"Your partisan threats to block President Obama from replacing Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia would be an unprecedented and unconstitutional act of sabotage to our judicial system. It is your duty to hold fair hearings and an up-or-down vote on President Obama's nominee."

Dear Friend,

Within hours of news breaking that Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia had died, Senate Republicans were already promising to block confirmation of his replacement until the next president takes office.

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell issued an official statement declaring, "this vacancy should not be filled until we have a new President."[1] Sen. Charles Grassley, chair of the Judiciary Committee, agreed that a "new president" should "select the next Supreme Court justice."[2] Presidential candidates Sens. Ted Cruz and Marco Rubio both made statements suggesting that "the next president" should name Scalia's replacement.[3]

President Obama has almost a year left in office. As president -- twice elected by the American people -- he has the constitutional power under Article II to nominate a new Supreme Court justice with the advice and consent of the Senate. It is unprecedented that senators from the opposing party would preemptively challenge that power and promise to undermine it.

In the last year of President Ronald Reagan's second term, the Democratic-controlled Senate -- including current Republican Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell -- unanimously confirmed Justice Anthony

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Kennedy with a 97-0 vote.[4] In the last year of President Obama's term, partisan obstruction from Senate Republicans will be an anti-democratic power grab that would violate their duty to the nation. We have to show that the political cost of obstruction will be too high.

Tell Senate Republican leadership: You must hold fair hearings and a timely up or down vote for President Obama's nominee for Justice Scalia's replacement on the Supreme Court. Click here to sign the petition.

If there's no replacement for Justice Scalia until the inauguration of the next president, the highest court in the land is effectively hindered for two terms. In the likely event of a 4-4 tie, the lower court's decision is upheld but is not considered binding precedent.[5] That means that countless important cases -- and lives -- will remain in limbo if Senate Republicans succeed in their attempt to undermine the Constitution.

Here are just some of the issues before the Court this term:

- Whether President Obama has the authority to provide a path to legal status and work permits for people who entered the United States as children, and for the undocumented parents of U.S. citizens.[6]
- Whether President Obama's attempts to curb carbon emissions violate the Clean Air Act.[7]
- Whether states can pass legislation under the guise of "protecting women's health" that actually takes away women's access to abortion.[8]
- Whether institutions have the right to use religion as an excuse to deny women birth-control as mandated in the Affordable Care Act.[9]
- A case that could decide the future of public sector unions.[10]

The next Supreme Court justice may also have the opportunity to overturn the disastrous Citizens United decision, which poses an existential threat to our democracy.

Senate Republicans are already making it clear that they are willing to subvert the Constitution in order to have a chance to appoint a justice who opposes women's health care, sides with corporations over workers, will allow big money to continue to hijack our elections, and more. We can't wait while Republicans try to spin a false narrative that their malfeasance is in defense of the will of voters. We need to put as much pressure as possible on Senate leadership now and force them to back down.

Tell Senate Republican leadership: You must hold fair hearings and a timely up or down vote for President Obama's nominee for Justice Scalia's replacement on the Supreme Court. Click here to sign the petition.

We don't yet know who President Obama intends to nominate. At CREDO, we will be pushing for the president to pick a strong progressive who will take seriously the Court's responsibility to the American people. But right now, the immediate need is to draw attention to Republicans' radical refusal to act at all, in direct contradiction of our Constitution.

Tell Senate Republican leadership: You must hold fair hearings and a timely up or down vote for President Obama's nominee for Justice Scalia's replacement on the Supreme Court. Click the link below to sign the petition:

Subject: saying hello

Dear John,

I know you are swamped, but wanted to say hello.

I have been in my position since November and am finally getting my arms around how to function in government!

Monday, along with other appointees, I will be at the WH from 8:30-1pm and would welcome the opportunity to say hello.
I remember when you suggested I come and work during transisition in '07/8. Finally, I made it!
This is an amazing experience and I am so proud to be able to serve the President and our country.

Hope to see you soon.

Best regards,
Ellen

Bibi, Herzog Spar on Breaking the Silence , anti-Rivlin Comments

Knesset session on Israel's staggering poverty levels went wildly off-topic on Wednesday, as Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and opposition leader Isaac Herzog challenged each other to condemn the dovish Breaking the Silence NGO, and right-wing criticism of President Reuven Rivlin, respectively. The raucous Knesset session, which drew cheering and applause from lawmakers from both sides of the aisle, prompted Knesset Speaker Yuli Edelstein to take the unusual step of calling a time-out, with Herzog's microphone cutting off mid-speech.

Ex-Shin Bet Chief Yuval Diskin Defends Breaking the Silence

The attack on Breaking the Silence (Bts) and other human rights groups in Israel is "tempestuous, populist and completely unnecessary," according to former Shin Bet chief Yuval Diskin. In a Facebook post, Diskin wrote that while he opposes the activities of NGOs and journalists "who don't love their country," after reading nearly every article and report by BtS, B'Tselem or the Public Committee Against Torture in Israel, "even if they are aggravating, even if they are often inaccurate and don't always do their work properly from a professional perspective, their contribution is very important and helps us to maintain the required vigilance about the most sensitive human issues."

Ex-ICC Prosecutor Hails Israeli Report on Settlements' Legality

The former chief prosecutor of the International Criminal Court this week praised Israel's Foreign Ministry for the recent publication of a report arguing that Jewish settlements in the West Bank are legal under international law. While not endorsing the report's content, Luis Moreno Ocampo, who was visiting Israel this week, said a thorough discussion about the settlements' legality was sorely needed and could be beneficial to all sides involved.

Loving to Hate: Social Media Incitement on the Rise

A sense that this year has been one of extreme rhetoric and violent, politically- and racially-motivated attacks on social media is now backed up by statistics. A new report published by the Berl Katznelson Foundation that studied the phenomenon of incitement and violence shows a 20 percent increase over the past year in the number of inciting and racist statements on social media in Israel. An even bigger increase of 40 percent has been recorded in the number of calls for physical violence on social media.

Indictment: Terrorist Tried to Stab Elementary School Students

The Jerusalem District Prosecutor on Thursday served an indictment against one of two Arab terrorists who committed a stabbing attack in Beit Shemesh , which left a yeshiva student hospitalized with multiple stab wounds. Muqdad Alkhikh, a 20-year-old, is charged with attempted murder and possession of a knife. Alkhikh traveled to the Ramat Beit Shemesh neighborhood on the morning of October 22 along with an accomplice with the intent to murder as many Jews as possible. When a school bus filled with elementary school-age children stopped to pick up students, the two would-be murderers attempted to board with the intent of slaughtering the children on board, but were prevented by the driver, who shut the doors and told them it was not a public bus.

Jordanian Pilot Loses His Wings After Refusing to Visit Israel

A Jordanian pilot has been discharged from the Hashemite kingdom's air force after refusing to visit Israel as part of a joint military venture between the two neighboring countries. Social media users on the east bank of the Jordan River were outraged after hearing the news that Majdi al-Samdi, a pilot in the Royal Jordanian Air Force, was dismissed from active duty by his commanders after notifying them that he would not be participating in a military delegation to Israel. "I was trained as a pilot not to cooperate with Israel, but to fight it," al-Samdi is reported to have told his superiors.

Israeli Customs in Ashdod House the 'Intifada Warehouse'

Weapons, incitement materials, and smuggling rings occasionally make headlines in Israel, with the most recent find being thousands of dolls dressed as terrorists. But these stories are just a few of the finds customs make every day, a top customs official revealed Wednesday - as hundreds of thousands of ammunition, weapons, and military equipment have been sitting in a secured customs warehouse for months. The Customs Building in the port city of Ashdod houses a heavily-secured room known as the "Intifada warehouse," director Rafi Gabai revealed to Walla! News. Within it: 50,000 knives, tens of thousands of tasers, and thousands of keffiyehs and balaclavas, camouflage uniforms, air guns, swords, clubs, knives, pocket knives, slingshots and brass knuckles, night vision systems and tools for encryption and disrupting communications.

Home Front Command Prepares for Syria's Rising Rocket Threat

The IDF Home Command Front is in the process of setting up a subdistrict on the Golan Heights, in response to the proliferation of terrorist organizations and projectile threats from neighboring Syria, a senior military source told The Jerusalem Post. The high-ranking officer, from the command's northern district, said the subdistrict on the Golan Heights will operate alongside an older subdistrict that operates in the Galilee serving border communities. "The Golan is a very important component of our preparations," he said. "The subdistrict has its own commander and headquarters. It is already fully operational, but will hold its first full headquarters at the end of 2016," he added.

My Ha'aretz "Q": Can We Talk? Seriously, Can We?

By Andrew Silow-Caroll

The liberal pundit Peter Beinart has an idea for building support for the two-state solution among hawkish American Jews who visit Israel. "If it became the norm to spend a day with Palestinians, living generations under military occupation, and seeing what it's like to live under military law, the political [polarization] would crumble," said Beinart, speaking at Sunday's all-day conference for pro-Israel liberals sponsored by the Israeli newspaper Ha'aretz and the U.S.-based New Israel Fund. "It's a shattering experience."

Great idea, I thought, as I sat in the crowded ballroom at New York's Roosevelt

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hotel. Setting up visits between Jews and Palestinians might be a nice easy warm-up for the hard part: creating dialogue between the Jewish Left and Jewish Right. After attending the conference, and following the reaction to it in the Jewish press and on social media, I found myself despairing for the state of the Israel "debate," which is less a debate than two distinct monologues taking place in parallel universes.

The "Ha'aretz Q" conference (the "Q" stands for "questions) featured speakers and panels making the case for a two-state solution, based on the idea that Israel cannot remain a Jewish democracy so long as it controls the lives of the Palestinians in the West Bank. Keynoters, although not necessarily ideological compadres, included Israel's president, Reuven Rivlin; Tzipi Livni, of Israel's opposition Zionist Union party; U.S. Ambassador to the UN Samantha Power; and a who's who of representatives of various left-leaning organizations, including J Street, T'ruah, B'Tselem, and the Foundation for Middle East Peace. It felt like a nominating convention for an as-yet-to-be named political party, and you could almost sense the relief of those in the room at being able to speak in ways that would get them shouted down or shunned at many American synagogues.

And if you think I am being hard on the Right, just read the reactions of those on the outside. Right-wing newspapers here and in Israel focused on the fact that Roger Waters, the Pink Floyd front man who supports the cultural boycott of Israel, was in the audience; that Rivlin dared to speak at a convention of American Jews that included representatives of Breaking the Silence, an Israeli group that likes to lecture overseas audiences on the "immorality" of the Israeli army; and that Saeb Erekat, the PLO secretary general, asked that the Israeli flag be removed from the podium before his speech.

That last concocted "controversy" represented to me the hopelessness of the current moment, in which small symbolic gestures are allowed to undermine the serious business of making peace. Erekat gave an extremely well-received speech in which he endorsed the two-state solution, rejected the boycott of Israel, and blasted the notion of a "binational" state. Yet headlines about the conference focused on Erekat's request that he not speak in front of an Israeli flag that had been specifically placed on stage at the request of Rivlin.

Clearly, Rivlin understood the flag as a symbol of his office and the state he was representing. This was New York, not Tel Aviv. So why do we pretend to be "shocked, shocked" that Erekat would not want to deliver his remarks in front of a flag of a country he does not represent?

As for Breaking the Silence, both Rivlin and Livni criticized the group in their remarks, earning scattered hisses. Later, in a panel discussion, an NIF staffer defended their funding for the group. To me, that is exactly how dialogue and conversation are supposed to work. One side defends the inclusion of a group that even many left-wing Israelis feel crosses the line, and other speakers criticize them — and it's all happening in the same room. Instead, we've grown accustomed to exclusion and censorship, blocking groups from speaking in our various Jewish institutions, blackballing organizations and speakers because they have the "wrong" friends.

Not that Ha'aretz or NIF offered the ideal model of inclusion and dialogue. My friend J.J. Goldberg pointed out in the Forward, the day's speakers were more likely to frame the conflict in terms of "Palestinian rights and interests" than in terms of the "security challenges and threats facing Israel internally and externally." That's the kind of imbalance, Israeli author Ari Shavit suggested in his remarks, that has led the Israeli Left to be "perceived as detached from reality."

But don't get the impression that Ha'aretz Q was a gathering of the arrogant, naïve, or lunatic fringe. Most of the people I recognized in the audience and breakouts were from mainstream synagogues and uncontroversial left-of-center groups.

They are the sort of people who give to federation, travel to Israel frequently, and care deeply about its future. Their biggest worry, however, is that the future is cloudy unless Israel finds a way to separate itself from the Palestinians.

They also worry about the state of Jewish dialogue. Many of them were inspired by Rivlin, who even as he acknowledged that he rarely agrees with the left-wing Ha'aretz, admitted that he's read it for 70 years and saluted the democratic culture of free speech that it represents. "The free market of ideas is a holy principle," declared Israel's president.

And the headline that day in Israel Hayom, Israel's free right-wing newspaper? "Rivlin says he never agrees with Ha'aretz."

The 'Neo-Palestinians'

By Ben Caspit

The "new Palestinian," or "neo-Palestinian," is the name the Israeli security establishment has coined to refer to the generation of young Palestinians leading the current terror wave that Israel continues to find difficult to define, characterize and restrain some two and a half months after it began. Israeli security officials have compared the struggle against this brand of violence to jousting with windmills. There is no infrastructure, no planning, no hierarchy, no leaders, no organizations and no intelligence.

"This is something else entirely, something we have not completely identified," admitted a higher-up in Israeli security speaking on condition of anonymity. "It is a social phenomenon, maybe even a mental one. It is the outcome of circumstances and deep processes that have come to fruition. At this stage, we don't have a clue where this is going and how long it will last," he said.

Israeli security has described the so-called new Palestinian as young, slightly older than 20 years of age. That said, there have also been much younger assailants — for example, one 13-year-old , girls aged 15 and even an 11-year-old. The new Palestinian wears fashionable jeans, a patterned tricot shirt, and carries a smartphone in his back pocket and wears earphones connected to it by Bluetooth. He wraps a patriotic, Palestinian kaffiyeh around his neck, and in his hand he holds a large rock. The new Palestinian rages and fumes, defies authority, does not owe anything to anyone and is not subject to any kind of higher hierarchy. He doesn't listen to his parents, teachers, police, mukhtars (village leaders), family members or extended clan. He cleaves to the global "independence rights" discourse.

He was around 3 or 5 years old during the second intifada (2000-2005) and doesn't really remember the horror of those years. In the early 2000s, more than 1,000 Israelis and more than 3,000 Palestinians were slaughtered. The new Palestinian goes to college but nothing will become of his education. It is estimated that at least 30,000 young Palestinians earn undergraduate degrees every year in the West Bank, and another 20,000 or so do the same in the Gaza Strip. They are discharged from university campuses into a total wasteland. There is nothing they can do with their degrees. There are no decent positions, no high-tech jobs and no serious economic infrastructure . At best, a young

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Palestinian graduate or academic can hope to secure a work permit in Israel and wash dishes in the bowels of a Tel Aviv restaurant.

The new Palestinian has no tangible hope of building a modern life for himself, accomplishing the things that he sees others achieving on social networks. The new Palestinian is convinced that he is in the right, blind to the positions of others, and follows the international community's stance on the Palestinian-Israeli conflict and draws encouragement from it. He is held captive to the narrative of the Israeli occupation, completely open to the various conspiracy theories about Israel that spread like wildfire through the Arab street. He nurtures authentic inner rage that simmers while looking for an outlet.

There are approximately 800,000 Palestinian youths between the ages of 15 and 29 in Judea and Samaria. They are the engine of the current terror wave. They go out to demonstrate almost every day, defiantly and stubbornly.

A significant percentage of these young demonstrators are female. If one removed the stones or Molotov cocktails from their hands, they would look like girls their age in calmer regions of the world. They are up-to-date, angry, frustrated and want change.

According to Israeli security experts, Israel is now "paying" for things that it is not even guilty of, such as Arab society restricting women and depriving them of equal rights. Also, the economies of the Arab states in general have long been weak, and the Palestinian economy in particular cannot give its youths any real hope of improvement to their standard of living.

The new Palestinian is unaware that compared to the other Arabs in the Middle East today, his situation is relatively better than theirs. The only Arab region in which electricity is available 24/7 is in Judea and Samaria.

The distress of the new Palestinian also extends to the sense of the "end of the Abbas era." Mahmoud Abbas, chairman of the PLO and president of the PA, announced many months ago that he is considering resigning, thus igniting a fierce war of succession among the various elements and dragging everyone toward extremism.

These developments have generated aggravation, which in turn has produced the events of the last 10 weeks. To this, one must add the Islamic State (IS) phenomenon, which engages the hearts and minds of Arabs in the Middle East and elsewhere. IS is transforming violence, including beheadings, into romanticized, legitimate behavior. International recognition of Palestinian rights is also fueling the fury and frustration. But that's not all.

A Dec. 16 Ha'aretz article statistically characterizes Palestinian attackers to date and has served to increase confusion among those attempting to analyze the phenomenon. It turns out a segment of these Palestinians has never been exposed or connected to "incitement on the social networks." In most cases, the decision to perpetrate an attack, grab a knife or axe and strike out at Jews has been impulsive, a flare-up triggered by any number of factors: an earlier terror attack that "inspires" the would-be assailant; an injury suffered by a relative, neighbor or friend at Israel's hands; a malicious rumor that reaches the potential terrorist's ears.

In short, a Palestinian youth might not have planned on carrying out an attack, but several factors stewed in his mind and heart until the startling outburst. "Under such circumstances it is impossible to fight, to thwart, to avert or to halt [an attack]," said a senior Israeli security source requesting anonymity. "All our intelligence and special resources become irrelevant."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

So what's the solution? Al-Monitor asked a senior Israeli security source, who responded on condition of anonymity, "There is no solution at the moment. We have 800,000 youths who are going somewhere, but we have no idea where. Even they don't completely know. We're talking about atmosphere, mood, and until it changes, we are stuck."

The Israel Defense Forces assess that the terror wave will continue for the foreseeable future, at the least the coming year. At the moment, they are trying more to contain it and prevent the situation from further deteriorating, rather than attempting to stop it. "It will disappear suddenly, just the way it arrived," a senior Israeli diplomat said hopefully and confidentially, "but we don't really know if, and when, that will happen."

Subject: Drugs and Terror Monster Conjugated Aggravation in the Middle East

SALVATION OF MANKIND BY NARCOTIC VEGETATION ERADICATION FROM THE AIR BY UNMANNED AIRCRAFT VEHICLES

Mr. President,

Unmanned Aircraft Vehicles

Development proved being capable of hitting even point targets. It is well known that Afghanistan has World record of Poppy Opium Production of about 200 tons annually yielded from a cultivated 157,000 hectares area. That enormous dope amount (90% of world opium production) is in my opinion the main financial source for Terror Organizations' Weaponry Acquisition. According to my assessment, UAV could have been Redemption for Entire Mankind if being utilized as follows: 2,4 D Defoliant is splashed on the Narcotic Vegetation causing its Desertification within several days inevitably. The following favorable consequences might have been anticipated:

1) Severing of Terror Organizations from their Financial Source that dry up with Narcotic Vegetation Desertification
2) Salvation of millions of Potential Drug Addicts from Awful Agony and Death
3) Rehabilitation of US Deterrence that has weakened considerably after Nine Eleven Horrendousness
4) Precipitation of NATO Troops Evacuation from Afghanistan as a result of UAV Bombardment Intensification resulting in Terror Suppression Reinforcement
5) Deterrence of El-Qaida Reactivation by leaving a Souvenir of dry Poppy-Opium Bushes from pulling out NATO Troops
6) I suggest having a Debate in the Senate that might hopefully lead to successful termination of the Afghan War after being stuck in its Marsh for 12 long years
7) Waiting for your Response as US friend since 1948
8) There could not have been any doubt about terminating the Armed Conflict in Afghanistan Honorably averting an Ignominious ending up as currently impending.
9) Similarly, Central American Dope Smuggling could have been drastically diminished by UAV Utilization for Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Grown on Mountainous Gradients. Very large amounts of Dope are smuggled annually into the US having found hitherto no efficacious way of overcoming that calamity
10) Please contact me by scheduling a meeting at US Embassy in Tel -Aviv for Clarifications with your experts' participation specializing in Explosives, Electronics and Aviation
11) I have got all the required specifications for getting mankind be extricated from the two conjugated calamities, Drugs inundation and Terror attacks of Innocent Population thanks to UAV activities.
12) To my great astonishment, my correspondence versus US Senate Committee on Armed Services has been irresponsive despite the extraordinary importance for entire Civilization Meanwhile as many as one billion of Muslims are threatening America encouraged by their Nine Eleven Precedent Success
13) In reminiscence, as many as 50,000 Aircraft were ordered according to Presidents' Roosevelt Ordinance after the Japanese Attack of Pearl Harbor while 7000 UAV by comparison are being idled in Storage letting the Afghan Armed Conflict be continued indefinitely.
14) Please let me explicate for US Air-Force an efficacious way emerging victorious from Afghan Entanglement in favor of Entire Mankind instead of suffering an ignominious defeat.
15) To my great surprise, US Does not exercise its Self Defense Right according to UN Charter Chapter 51 (1946), enabling Criminal Organizations of Third World Countries attacking it with impunity. Nine Eleven Catastrophe could have been averted if the US had utilized its complete Arsenal particularly UAV in high numbers instead of being kept idle in Magazines.
16) I propose meeting your Experts for UAV, Explosives and Electronics at US Embassy in Tel Aviv for thorough debate about Dual Headed Monster Decapitation in favor of beleaguered Mankind believing in great success of my Innovative Unprecedented Method as an only feasible efficacious expedient against it.
17) Is White House Correspondence Team busy to such an extent being unable responding even most important letters?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

18) To my great Astonishment Dereliction of US Air Force results in smuggling of Tremendous Dope Amount from Central America via Mexico into the US with its Awful damage for many millions American's Health
19) I don't see any reason for hesitancy! The President may issue tomorrow an ordinance in order to open emergency Magazines, getting ten thousands of UAV
Aloft in order to achieve Narcotic Vegetation Desertification with achievement for Posterity
20) Emerge preferably with an Upper hand honorably instead of being ignominiously defeated!
21) Despite being Non US Citizen I think to have done my best in assisting ending up
Afghan War victoriously thanks to my Innovative Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Method, however not a single word of Acknowledgement has hitherto Reached my mailbox! In my opinion, Disparagement and Ungratefulness are conjugated at least according to my feeling!
22) There could not have been any justification keeping as many as 7000 UAV unused in magazines instead of operating them against Nine Eleven Cruel enemy. Moreover, US taxpayers have already paid for that arsenal!
23) I believe Mr. Attorney General that Narcotic Vegetation Desertification Utilizing UAV is the only Feasible way of getting Mankind been extricated from the Doubling Stricken Menace Grabbing, Drug and Terror Simultaneously.
24) November election is going to be beginning of President Obama last Congress Tenure working with but if the President is being able Indicating Monumental achievements. He might have been eligible into the Parlor of great Leaders having annihilated Drugs and Terror calamities for Posterity affluence
25) Wiping out Narcotic Vegetation and launching consequently an Overwhelming
Strike on Terror Organizations by UAV Utilization might have been an Unprecedented Achievement of Entire Mankind and President Obama personally.
26) Incredibly, no reaction has come from the White House in latest four years despite
My pure intention for assistance for the US as well as Entire Civilization!
27) In my opinion Nobel Institute might have contributed to a very great extent to Drug and Terror Monster Decapitation in favor of Entire Civilization.
28) Prime Minister of Israel might have contributed a great role in exerting an influence on US and Western Governments in General in a Universal Effort of Dual Headed Monster, Drugs and Terror simultaneous eradication

Be successful

Gideon Rodeh

There is no justification losing an Election Campaign Ignominiously instead of emerging Victorious honorably! The Democrats should have mobilized the entire US Media attacking the Republicans for an Exploitation of US Contingency to vote against their own Interests in favor of big Oil Corporations! Such incessant Transmissions would have been a very efficacious Deterrence for most Democratic families to abstain from voting against their own Interests!

Be successful

"A new state poll shows Republican Arizona Senator John McCain could be in for a tight race to keep his seat in the US Senate."
- KNAU, 11/18

John,

Arizona is a key race in the fight to flip the Senate for the Democrats -- and next year's election could be even closer than expected. In fact, a new poll shows John McCain only six points ahead of Ann.

We've made a lot of great progress this month -- and we know that if we roll up our sleeves and get to work, we can diminish that six point margin. If you can, make a donation to help make sure we have all the resources necessary for Ann to win.

This race is going to be a tight one, with plenty of battles ahead of us -- but Ann grew up in the White Mountains and knows a thing or two about tough uphill climbs.

John McCain himself has admitted he's nervous for this election. But he's not the only nervous one -- we have a deadline to reach and we're just shy of hitting it.

We are still short of our $50,000 goal this month -- and we could use help from folks like you. Contribute $5 or whatever you can today to keep Ann climbing to the top of the polls.

Thank you!

Subject: A Rare Breed

Dear John,

They don't send Green Berets on easy missions. So when I heard Tommy Sowers -- an 11-year Army officer who served as a Combat Engineer, Airborne Ranger, and Green Beret -- was running for Congress, I knew I had to help.

Tommy is a rare breed of leader, a warrior and scholar whose desire to serve is complemented with honor, courage, and intellect. But that won't be enough to win in Missouri's 8th district, where he faces a 13-year incumbent who is bankrolled by the corporate special interests.

Tommy needs your help.

Please donate $5 or more to Tommy's campaign today!

Tommy left his promising career in the Army this summer and returned to Missouri take on this new fight -- to serve his home in Congress. Seeing the deteriorating condition of the area where generations of his family have lived, he knew this is something that has to happen now.

During his deployments -- once in Kosovo and twice in Iraq -- Tommy was sent to places where the people had no hope, and he was tasked with achieving things that people said could not be done.

Again, there are no easy missions for Green Berets, and this challenge is no different.

Help Tommy and me bring hope to Missouri's 8th district. Contribute $5 or more to his campaign today!

Missouri's 8th is an expansive district that encompasses the entire southeastern corner of the state. There you see the worst problems befalling rural America: a disappearing manufacturing base, worsening access to health care, and a vanishing way of life that once helped these small communities thrive.

There are nearly 70,000 veterans in the district, and they feel that there is nothing to keep their children and grandchildren in the communities where they grew up. Tommy needs your help to bring a better future to southeastern Missouri.

Tommy's opponent is a special-interest-fueled former lobbyist. He needs your help to level the playing field and fight in the U.S. House to bring economic opportunity back to his home.

Please donate $5 or more to Tommy's campaign today!

At a time when the number of veterans in Congress is at its lowest point since World War II, we need to come together to put more common sense leaders like Tommy in Congress to help get this country back on track.

Gratefully,
Wes Clark

Anti-War Leader: General Casey's Comments Contradict President's Iraq Policy

Army Chief of Staff Wants Plan To Keep US Combat Troops In Iraq For 10 More Years

Former Congressman Tom Andrews, National Director of the Win Without War Coalition, released the following statement today:

Yesterday's comments by Army Chief of Staff General George Casey that the Pentagon needs to begin planning to leave U.S. combat troops in Iraq for another decade stands in direct conflict with the current Status of Forces Agreement between our two countries, the stated policy of President Obama and the wishes of an overwhelming majority of American and Iraqi citizens.

Gen. Casey's statement represents the latest attempt by Pentagon officials to influence policy and subvert President Obama's commitment to ending the war in Iraq. Rather than contradict the president's policy, Pentagon planners should be preparing to implement that policy. The President and Congress must act immediately to reassert control of U.S. policy in Iraq if they are to meet their campaign promises and end the war in Iraq.

This underscores the importance of Congressional action that would hold the Pentagon accountable. The House version of the Supplemental Defense Appropriation passed earlier this month declares support for the president's policy to remove all U.S. forces from Iraq and directs the Pentagon to present plans to implement that policy. It also directs the Pentagon to provide Congress with regular updates on progress toward implementation of the plans.

It is critical that this language be included in the final bill that is sent to the president's desk. Meanwhile, it is far past time for the Pentagon to start telling the American people how they plan to support the president and his Iraq policy and not how they plan to undermine it.

The Pentagon's resistance to the president's policy on Iraq is well documented. In December 2008, Commanding General in Iraq Ray Odierno revealed he intended to keep U.S. combat troops in Iraqi cities past their June 30, 2009 withdrawal deadline, creating a firestorm of protest in the Iraqi Parliament. And this April, the New York Times reported that Iraqi officials were being asked to reconsider the definition of "city" to allow combat bases within some Iraqi cities to remain after that deadline.

The Associated Press today reports that General Odierno "is leading a study to determine how far U.S. forces could be cut back in Iraq and still be effective". It is not hard to predict what this "study" will conclude under Odierno's command.

The goal of President Obama's policy in Iraq is clear – to return control of and responsibility for Iraq to the Iraqi people. Requiring, as General Odierno and the Pentagon would like, that Iraq be free of any violence before U.S. forces are removed only undermines that goal and risks keeping the United States mired in Iraq for years to come. The President is right: It is time to return sovereignty to the Iraqi people, as 80% of the Iraqi population want. It is time for U.S. forces to go.

Washington Post military reporter and best selling author Tom Ricks reports that there is a "consensus within the military" that U.S. combat operations are only half over in Iraq – that we will have combat troops fighting there in 2015!

President Obama and Congress must not allow that to happen.

Friend,

The same national organization that's already spent more than $5 million attacking Terry McAuliffe just gave Ken Cuccinelli's campaign another million dollars!

Math's not my strong suit, but that means they've spent a total of $6.8 million so far — almost approaching a dollar per Virginian.

That much money will make a real difference for the Cuccinelli campaign. It could pay for direct mail to thousands of voters, go towards blanketing the state in radio ads, or (and this is most likely) buy a whole lot of attack ads on TV across the Commonwealth.

If Terry is going to keep up, he needs our help. When I heard about the donation, I knew I had to do everything I could — and that I had to check in with you to see if you'd join me.

Will you donate $5 right now to help Terry? His team needs to raise $25,000 by midnight tonight to counter these damaging RGA-funded attacks.

Terry is the only person that can stop Ken Cuccinelli's extreme right-wing agenda from becoming a very scary reality for Virginia and national Republicans know it.

News just broke that Jeb Bush is coming to town to raise money for Cuccinelli's campaign. And that's on top of the fundraising trips already planned by Rand Paul, Ted Cruz, and Marco Rubio!

There aren't a lot of competitive races this year, so Republicans — who want a big win to build momentum for next year's elections — know electing Tea Party darling Ken Cuccinelli is their best shot.

They're all in. And they'll come out on top if we're not all in for Terry McAuliffe, too.

Chip in $5 right now to make sure Terry hits his fundraising goal before midnight.

I can't emphasize enough that this is a critical moment for you to support Terry. We need to stop Jeb Bush and his friends from pushing Cuccinelli into the lead right now — it'll be much harder to fight our way back from behind.

We're all counting on you,

James Carville

Haim is right - we should be jamming this all the time.

A and X - can we think about what else we should do? Issue a broader challenge? Do something tied to Fourth of July were we declared all equal? Get CHC to do a letter?

Homecoming 2015

Return to the classroom to discuss some of today's most interesting topics with your favorite professors.

Join us for Alumni College Day during Homecoming Weekend on Friday, October 9.

Register today at homecoming.georgetown.edu .

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 9

2-2:50 P.M.

- "Terrorism, ISIS and the U.S." with Professor Anthony Clark Arend
 The purpose of this talk will be to explore the challenge posed by the group known alternatively as ISIS (The Islamic State in Iraq and Syria), ISIL (The Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant), IS (The Islamic State) or Da'ish (from the Arabic acronym). Professor Anthony Clark Arend will examine the current state of U.S. policy toward the group and alternatives for a U.S. strategy.
- "Bitcoin and the Payment Revolution" with Professor Jim Angel
 Bitcoin is not really a currency, but a payment system and an open ledger that can be used for many things. There is a revolution going on in payments, and Bitcoin and Apple Pay are just some of the innovations. Although Bitcoin 1.0 may go the way of Esperanto, blockchain technology has many valuable applications. This session, led by Professor Jim Angel, will explore the payment revolution along with the exciting new applications of blockchain technology.

3-3:50 P.M.

- "Changing Minds or Just Your Profile Picture: The Role of Social Media as a Source of Political Information" with Professor Leticia Bode
 Use of social media has exploded in the past decade. Political campaigns are trying to capitalize on this new medium, but is it working? Who sees political information on Facebook, Twitter, YouTube, or other platforms? And how does that matter for modern American politics? Professor Leticia Bode will discuss the state of political information on social media and its implications.
- "Flourishing in College and Community" with Professor Sarah Stiles
 A student culture of excellence and ambition can become counterproductive when it escalates to the extent students seriously compromise their health in the name of grades and resume-building. A recent report released by Gallup indicates a person's undergraduate experience has a huge impact on their post-graduate well-being. Professor Sarah Stiles examines the reasons why Hoyas are happier than most and how we can all flourish over the course of our lives.

4-4:50 P.M.

- "Francis Comes to America: Debriefing the Papal Visit" with Reverend Kevin O'Brien, S.J. and John Carr
 Join Kevin O'Brien, S.J., Vice President for Mission and Ministry, and John Carr, Director of the Initiative on Catholic Social Thought and Public Life, for an animated conversation about Pope Francis' recent visit to the U.S. What did we learn about the Pope and his priorities? What message and challenges did he leave us? What impact will the visit have on the Church in the U.S.? How can we personalize what we saw and heard so that the visit makes a lasting impact on our lives?
- "The Supreme Court: Law or Politics?" with Professor Michael Bailey
 The Supreme Court plays a central role in vast swaths of U.S. public policy, ranging from criminal justice to gay marriage to environmental policy. Are the justices following the law? Or are they simply using legal language to justify policy outcomes they most prefer. Professor Michael Bailey will discuss the role the Supreme Court plays in U.S. public policy.

John --

In one hour, I will deliver my first State of the City speech. I will take this moment to focus our attention on both the challenges we must face and the opportunities we must seize if our city is to live up to her true potential.

I've set up a space on my website where you can watch the speech live. I hope you tune in.

Every day I am reminded of the task you have entrusted to me: to bring city government back to basics so our city is prosperous, safe, livable, and well run. This has been my focus since taking office, and today I will proudly lay out the progress we have made and some next steps.

Tune in to watch the speech. You'll also be able to see a real-time conversation on twitter among members of my senior staff.

I might be the one speaking tonight, but we're all in this together.

Thanks for being there.

Subject: Following up on discussion on the Equitable Growth Steering Committee call

Hi Bob and Alan: On our steering committee call last week, John Podesta raised the issue of changing trends in the nature of work, which Bob referred to as the "casualization" of work and is sometimes called the "on-demand" economy, 1099 economy, Uberization, etc… We have been following these trends and are interested in the potential implications (e.g. on issues like the safety net, bargaining power over wages/benefits, distribution of wealth, consumer protections, etc…). The issue seems to be getting more popular media attention, but the policy landscape seems stuck in a different era.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Herb and I spoke briefly with John yesterday about what else might be done.

On the policy side, John is encouraging CAP to be more engaged, which Neera wants to do. We think CAP plans to start by doing one or more policy-oriented convenings, and then decide what else to do. I have spoken with CBPP to encourage them to reflect further on how these developments may impact the safety net policies they work on, both federally and in the states. For example, some of their key policy issues, such as the EITC, are often dependent on traditional "employment" to receive the benefits.

We're not sure how much serious academic work is being done in this area. From the steering committee call, Alan noted that Alan Krueger is doing a paper on Uber and we know Heather hopes the RFP may yield some relevant research projects. I also plan to reach out to Rob Johnson to see if INET or its network are thinking about these topics.

We'd be interested in:

- Your thoughts on whether it would make sense to try and convene some academics on the topic, including to understand where there might be disagreement among them
- Whether such a convening might be done through WCEG, or might be better done separately
- Any other thoughts you may have for how to pursue this topic further in the academy, and whether it is a worthwhile pursuit

It probably makes sense to try and have a brief call by phone, rather than do this by email. Herb and I are pretty flexible the rest of this week, and also the week of Nov 16-20. Would any times work for you in those windows? John would try and join the call, schedule permitting.

As background, if interested, here are a couple items that provide a pretty good overview of some of the issues:

Sen. Mark Warner, who is interested in the topic, wrote an op ed in the Washington Post.

The Economist had a survey piece on this topic of freelance workers that covered a broad range of issues

Thank you.

Subject: [big campaign] INVITE: Romney University

Afternoon,

Think the campaign has not been substantive enough? Well, we have all the substance on Mitt Romney you could ever want. We're holding Romney University next week to take a very close look at his policy proposals and the true cost of a Romney presidency. Take a look at the invite below for all of the details.

I hope you can join us.

Josh

http://www.americanprogressaction.org/events/2012/07/romneyu.html

Please join the Center for American Progress Action Fund for a special presentation:

Romney University

July 31, 2012, 9:30am – 2:30pm

Admission is free.

RSVP to attend this event

Earn your advanced degree in Republican presidential nominee and former Massachusetts Gov . Mitt Romney 's policy platform at Romney University!

Aimed at influential policy- and opinionmakers inside the Beltway and beyond, "Romney Univ ersity " will kick off a series of seminars by the Center of American Progress Action Fund that will tell you every thing you need to know about Gov. Romney's policy proposals in his race for the presidency.

The half-day event will be comprised of discussions and keynotes focused on the economy, health care, women, and foreign policy/national security. Each discussion will feature Center for American Progress Action Fund staff and prominent outside experts and policymakers, and will include time for audience Q&A.

Course materials will include a packet containing CAP Action Fund's analysis on each of the issue areas discussed and one-page summaries of Gov . Romney 's policy proposals.

9:30 a.m.: Introduction
Tom Perriello , President and Chief Executive Officer, Center for American Progress Action Fund

Keynote
Ted Strickland , former Gov ernor of Ohio

Gov. Romney has announced tax and budget positions that have more giveaways to the wealthy at the expense of the middle class. Former Gov. Strickland of Ohio will help frame the exploration of Gov. Romney's economic vision for America and will lay out the true implications of outsourcing, along with Gov. Romney's dangerous tax and budget agenda.

10:00 a.m.: Romneynomics: The Costs of a Romney Presidency
Michael Ettlinger , Vice President for Economic Policy, Center for American Progress Action Fund
Heather McGhee , Vice President, Policy and Outreach, Demos
Tom Perriello , President and Chief Executive Officer, Center for American Progress Action Fund, moderator

In the wake of the Great Recession, our nation needs policies that will help America regain its economic strength and improve the competitiveness of our economy . The worst-case scenario for the U.S. economy would be implementing the kinds of budget cuts and policies that Gov. Romney has been calling for, which would stifle job creation and most certainly be devastating for middle-class families. This discussion will focus on the ways in which a Romney presidency will disproportionately impact America's working families and those hit the hardest by the economic downturn, including young people, women, and workers of color.

11:00 a.m.: The Anatomy of Romneycare
Jonathan Gruber , Professor of Economics, Massachusetts Institute of Technology
Neera Tanden , President, Center for American Progress; Counselor, Center for American Progress Action Fund
Vivek Murthy, Doctors for America, MD, MBA
Igor Volsky , Deputy Editor, ThinkProgress; moderator

Throughout the primary, Gov . Romney has tried time and again to disown his own health care plan that he implemented as governor of Massachusetts because of its similarities with the president's reform plan. This conversation will focus on the shared history of market-based health care reform, the sameness of Romneycare and Obamacare, and how candidate Romney has no "replace" with his plan to repeal health care reform.

Lunch is served.

12:00 p.m.: Women's Health and Economic Wellness
Introduction by: Jessica Arons , Director, Women's Health and Rights Program, Center for American Progress Action Fund
Anita Dunn , Managing Director, SKDKnickerbocker
Karen Finney , Democratic strategist
Sandra Fluke , Women's Health Activist
Anna Greenberg , Senior Vice President and Principal, Greenberg Quinlan Rosner
Tara McGuinness , Senior Vice President, Center for American Progress Action Fund; moderator

On August 1 , a provision of the Affordable Care Act will guarantee preventiv e serv ices for women, including no-cost coverage of contraception, lactation supports, gestational diabetes screening, annual well-woman care, and much more. Gov. Romney has pledged to repeal Obamacare, including its prov isions to end gender discrimination in the health insurance market. Beyond just health impacts, this will be a discussion on what a Romney presidency will mean for women's economic security and well-being.

1:00 p.m.: Romney Foreign Policy 101
Heather Hurlburt , Executive Director, National Security Network
Doug Wilson , former Assistant Secretary of Defense
Brian Katulis , Senior Fellow, Center for American Progress Action Fund, moderator

Gov. Romney has staked out national security positions that align his campaign closely with the more ideological neoconservatives of the Bush-Cheney era. This panel will analyze Gov . Romney 's national security proposals and assess Gov. Romney's overseas trip this month. It will also examine his positions on Iran, China, and the global financial crisis, as well as the likely impact his calls for large defense spending increases would have on America's overall strength and fiscal position.

July 31, 2012, 9:30am – 2:30pm

Space is extremely limited. RSVP required.
Seating is on a first-come, first-served basis and not guaranteed.

Breakfast and lunch will be served.

Yes it with absorb the liquid, but no that's not what you want to do. The slower add process and stirring causes the rice to give up it's starch which gives the risotto it's creamy consistency. You won't get that if you dump all that liquid at once.

Guest Opinion: Chickenhawks – Be Afraid!

Terrorist attacks in Lebanon, the Sinai and Paris have triggered widespread condemnation of ISIS from world leaders. The United Nations Security Council passed a unanimous resolution condemning ISIS, and Muslim clerics in Turkey and other Muslim nations described ISIS as blood-thirsty criminals who have no basis of authority with Islam.
Meanwhile, Republican officials are wringing their hands, stoking fear over the threats of immigrants seeking asylum in America.

PROGRESSIVE TURNOUT PROJECT

John, we're reaching out to say thank you.

With your support, we've been able to accomplish so much over the past few months. When we launched, we were cautiously optimistic about developing a grassroots effort to boost Democratic voter turnout in 2016.

But so far, the response has been incredible!

The tremendous outpouring of support we've received has truly blown us away:

We believe that boosting voter turnout and getting more Democrats to the polls is the first step in ending the Republican reign over Congress.

Because in 2014, Democrats didn't just lose -- we got crushed. The 2014 election also had the lowest voter turnout in 70 years. That's not a coincidence, John.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

So in response, only three months ago, a small group of Democrats from President Obama's home state of Illinois came together to launch the Progressive Turnout Project -- a group dedicated to connecting with voters, one-on-one, and getting Democrats to the polls.

And now, thanks to your support, we're well on our way toward building the grassroots framework we'll need to have a significant impact in 2016.

But in order for us to be successful, we need to hear from you about what you think are the best strategies moving forward.

Please click the link below to take our brief 2015 Survey. It'll take just a minute and will help us map our strategy to get more Democrats to the polls:

Look, we only have a few chances left to do everything you and I set out to do together.

You are receiving this message as an Obama for America supporter.
The Democratic National Committee is solely responsible for the content of this message.

Dear John --

Folks like you know what I believe: We have no more important priority than confronting and solving the climate crisis.

Luckily, we have a President who has taken up that task with both determination and seriousness of purpose, and it's amazing what a difference that can make.

In June, President Obama empowered the Environmental Protection Agency to cut carbon pollution, a move which will help reduce dangerous CO2 from power plants by 30 percent in 2030. On top of that, he has established new fuel economy standards that reduce CO2 levels and will save us all money at the pump. With the Recovery Act, he made the single biggest investment in clean energy in the United States, ever. All these steps will have a lasting impact on the planet our children and grandchildren inherit -- and they wouldn't have happened without your support, John.

If you stand with President Obama, add your name to support Democrats working with him to address climate change.

As Bob Dylan sang, "You don't need a weatherman to know which way the wind blows." We're seeing real, important progress in the fight against the climate crisis -- and it's coming not a moment too soon.

But you and I both know there are still a lot of deniers out there, John. The time for leadership in the face of this threat has not passed. If ever there were a moment to send leaders to Washington who make climate legislation their top priority, this is it.

Support Democrats, and tell Congress to address climate change:

Really quiet day--been good for paperwork and contact updates. Sorry I was just on the phone with Chris Niedermeier for 15 minutes, just letting her talk. Here's what's going on:

3 Missed calls:

Sean Sweeney
202-697-3206
Wants to follow up on last call with you. Could wait til tomorrow if you want.

Deputy Secretary Liz Sherwood-Randall
Scheduler Direct: (202) 586-8472 (Kathryn)
Office Main Line: (202) 586-5500
Wants to speak with you about China before she leaves for China on Friday. Also could wait until tomorrow, but she has a window tonight, 6:30 - 7 pm, while you're on the train, if you'd like to call her then. Shall I get a cel l# for her, or should we try for tomorrow?

Chris Niedermeier
203-556-6314
Biden's campaign is interested in her if he runs. She really just wants an indication one way or the other if she should be holding her breath for Hillary. Made lots of wild speculation. I acted like I know nothing but tried to be very nice and said I'd pass on to you.

And Bill Daley emailed you so you know about that one of course.

Other:

Inquiry from Daschle: He'd like to get on the list for PM Abe State Dinner. Shall we contact someone?

Tomorrow:

CONFIRMED: Denis McDonough, 12-12:45 pm at Starbucks at 14th and NY. Might go for a walk from there if weather is nice. Figuring 12:45 pm end time, just in case, since you told Bob and Ed you'd call them at 1 pm.

RSVPs for reporter dinner--you saw from Jesse that we're at 40 confirmed (including you, me, and Milia). 4 staff are unconfirmed. That list is reattached, if you need it. That's more than you bargained for, clearly. When do you need me to come over? I can also run errands if we need more food. We've got the draft Facebook here for you in the morning, and also attached to this email.

Ceasefire Broken: Gaza Militants Resume Rocket Fire on Israel

At 12:40 pm [Israel time] on Monday the unofficial ceasefire between Israel and Hamas was broken when Code Red sirens blared in the Hof Ashkelon Regional Council as four rockets were fired from Gaza. It was reported that the rockets fell within the Gaza Strip. Palestinian sources reported that a four-year-old child was killed by IDF artillery fire in the Jabalia area in the afternoon. The political establishment, led by Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Defense Minister Moshe Ya'alon, has attempted to reach a ceasefire with Hamas. A political source said that "the ceasefire will continue according to the situation on the ground."

Even Gaza Truce Is Hard to Win, Kerry Is Finding

After failing to win a deal to end fighting in Gaza last week, Secretary of State John Kerry is trying to salvage Plan B: a succession of temporary cease-fires that he hopes might yet open the door to Israeli and Palestinian negotiations for a long-term solution. On Sunday, however, Mr. Kerry was having difficulty accomplishing even that, despite a phone call in which President Obama, in a sign of mounting impatience, urged Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu of Israel to embrace an "immediate, unconditional humanitarian cease-fire" while the two sides pursued a more lasting agreement.

USA Today

Security Council Calls for Immediate Gaza Cease-Fire

Fighting between Israel and Palestinian militants continued Monday despite a strong statement from the United Nations Security Council calling for an "immediate and unconditional" cease-fire. The Security Council called for the truce at its meeting just after midnight Monday morning and urged Israel and Hamas "to accept and fully implement the humanitarian cease-fire into the Eid period and beyond." The statement is not a resolution and is not binding.

Ha'aretz

Obama to Netanyahu: Must Reach Immediate Humanitarian Cease-Fire

U.S. President Barack Obama called Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu on Sunday, the third such call since the launch of the IDF operation in Gaza. Obama stressed to Netanyahu that it is "strategically imperative" to reach an immediate humanitarian cease-fire "that ends hostilities now and leads to a permanent cessation of hostilities based on the November 2012 ceasefire agreement," following operation Pillar of Defense. Obama told Netanyahu that the U.S. supports the Egyptian cease-fire initiative as well as the international and regional efforts to bring about an end to hostilities. The president also stressed that the Palestinian Authority must be part of the solution in the Gaza Strip, and that any solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict must include the disarmament of terrorist organizations and the demilitarization of the Gaza Strip.

Ha'aretz

Netanyahu Talks Demilitarization of Gaza in U.S. Interviews

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu took his message to the American talk shows on Sunday, accusing Hamas of "violating its own ceasefires," and asking how Americans would react if they were the targets of what he called a "terrorist operation."... "Imagine that 75 percent of the U.S. population is under rocket fire and they have to be in bomb shelters within 60 to 90 seconds, the prime minister said on CNN's State of the Union. "You can't live like that. So I think we have to bring back, restore back a reasonable, sustained quiet and security. And we will take whatever action is necessary to achieve that."

Israel Disputes US Account of Kerry's Ceasefire Effort

Amid strains between Israel and the US over diplomatic moves to resolve the conflict with Hamas, Israeli official sources on Monday flatly rejected a series of American assertions Sunday about Secretary of State John Kerry's ceasefire efforts. In a briefing late Sunday, a senior American official told Israeli journalists that the document conveyed by Kerry to the Israeli leadership on Friday was not a ceasefire proposal but rather "a draft… that emerged from discussions between a number of parties." The official, who asked not be named, added that the document "was provided for comment and input, not for rejection or acceptance," that it was "fully consistent with the Egyptian proposal," and that it did not aim to satisfy Hamas demands. The official also castigated parts of the Israeli media for misreporting Kerry's work, mischaracterizing his strategy and motivations, and launching gratuitous attacks on him, including accusations of betrayal.

Reuters

West Bank Glows with Anger over Gaza Destruction

While the Gaza Strip burns, the occupied West Bank is smoldering, with violent clashes between Palestinians and Israeli forces raising the specter of a new popular uprising after years of relative calm. In just a three-day period late last week, 10 Palestinians died and some 600 wounded during a spate of angry protests against the prolonged military offensive in nearby Gaza. On Sunday, Israeli police said they foiled a potentially deadly attack when they stopped a car laden with explosives as its driver tried to reach Israel via a West Bank checkpoint, while riots broke out once more overnight in East Jerusalem.

Jerusalem Post

Yadlin: Hamas Won't Voluntarily Demilitarize

Asking Hamas to demilitarize Gaza is like asking a priest to convert to Judaism, former military intelligence head Amos Yadlin said Sunday. "This is their ideology, what they believe in, their resistance," he added. "They will not demilitarize Gaza voluntarily. The only one who can demilitarize them is the IDF." Yadlin, who is currently the head of the Institute for National Security Studies in Tel Aviv, said that Israel needed to apply "much more military pressure" on Hamas' military wing, which he acknowledge has been "beaten," but not hard enough. Neither Hamas' leaders, nor its "main terrorist fighters," have been killed, Yadlin said in a conference call organized by The Israel Project.

An Israel without Illusions

By David Grossman

Israelis and Palestinians are imprisoned in what seems increasingly like a hermetically sealed bubble. Over the years, inside this bubble, each side has evolved sophisticated justifications for every act it commits.

Israel can rightly claim that no country in the world would abstain from responding to incessant attacks like those of Hamas, or to the threat posed by the tunnels dug from the Gaza Strip into Israel. Hamas, conversely, justifies its attacks on Israel by arguing that the Palestinians are still under occupation and that residents of Gaza are withering away under the blockade enforced by Israel.

Inside the bubble, who can fault Israelis for expecting their government to do everything it can to save children on the Nahal Oz kibbutz, or any of the other communities adjacent to the Gaza Strip, from a Hamas unit that might emerge from a hole in the ground? And what is the response to Gazans who say that the tunnels and rockets are their only remaining weapons against a powerful Israel? In this cruel and desperate bubble, both sides are right. They both obey the law of the bubble — the law of violence and war, revenge and hatred.

But the big question, as war rages on, is not about the horrors occurring every day inside the bubble, but rather it is this: How on earth can it be that we have been suffocating together inside this bubble for over a century? This question, for me, is the crux of the latest bloody cycle.

Since I cannot ask Hamas, nor do I purport to understand its way of thinking, I ask the leaders of my own country, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and his predecessors: How could you have wasted the years since the last conflict without initiating dialogue, without even making the slightest gesture toward dialogue with Hamas, without attempting to change our explosive reality? Why, for these past few years, has Israel avoided judicious negotiations with the moderate and more conversable sectors of the Palestinian people — an act that could also have served to pressure Hamas? Why have you ignored, for 12 years, the Arab League initiative that could have enlisted moderate Arab states with the power to impose, perhaps, a compromise on Hamas? In other words: Why is it that Israeli governments have been incapable, for decades, of thinking outside the bubble?

And yet the current round between Israel and Gaza is somehow different. Beyond the pugnacity of a few politicians fanning the flames of war, behind the great show of "unity" — in part authentic, mostly manipulative — something about this war is managing, I think, to direct many Israelis' attention toward the mechanism that lies at the foundation of the vain and deadly repetitive "situation." Many Israelis who have refused to acknowledge the state of affairs are now looking into the futile cycle of violence, revenge and counter-revenge, and they are seeing our reflection: a clear, unadorned image of Israel as a brilliantly creative, inventive, audacious state that for over a century has been circling the grindstone of a conflict that could have been resolved years ago.

If we put aside for a moment the rationales we use to buttress ourselves against simple human compassion toward the multitude of Palestinians whose lives have been shattered in this war, perhaps we will be able to see them, too, as they trudge around the grindstone right beside us, in tandem, in endless blind circles, in numbing despair.

I do not know what the Palestinians, including Gazans, really think at this moment. But I do have a sense that Israel is growing up. Sadly, painfully, gnashing its teeth, but nonetheless maturing — or, rather, being forced to. Despite the belligerent declarations of hotheaded politicians and pundits, beyond the violent onslaught of right-wing thugs against anyone whose opinion differs from theirs, the main artery of the Israeli public is gaining sobriety.

The left is increasingly aware of the potent hatred against Israel — a hatred that arises not just from the occupation — and of the Islamic fundamentalist volcano that threatens the country. It also recognizes the fragility of any agreement that might be reached here. More people on the left understand now that the right wing's fears are not mere paranoia, that they address a real and crucial threat.

I would hope that on the right, too, there is now greater recognition — even if it is accompanied by anger and frustration — of the limits of force; of the fact that even a powerful country like ours cannot simply act as it wishes; and that in the age we live in there are no unequivocal victories, only an illusory "image of victory" through which we can easily see the truth: that in war there are only losers. There is no military solution to the real anguish of the Palestinian people, and as long as the suffocation felt in Gaza is not alleviated, we in Israel will not be able to breathe freely either.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Israelis have known this for decades, and for decades we have refused to truly comprehend it. But perhaps this time we understand a little better; perhaps we have caught a glimpse of the reality of our lives from a slightly different angle. It is a painful understanding, and a threatening one, certainly, but it is an understanding that could be the start of a shift. It might bring home for Israelis how critical and urgent peace with the Palestinians is, and how it can also be a basis for peace with the other Arab states. It may portray peace — such a disparaged concept here these days — as the best option, and the most secure one, available to Israel.

Will a similar comprehension emerge on the other side, in Hamas? I have no way of knowing. But the Palestinian majority, represented by Mahmoud Abbas, has already decided in favor of negotiation and against terrorism. Will the government of Israel, after this bloody war, after losing so many young and beloved people, continue to avoid at least trying this option? Will it continue to ignore Mr. Abbas as an essential component to any resolution? Will it keep dismissing the possibility that an agreement with West BankPalestinians might gradually lead to an improved relationship with the 1.8 million residents of Gaza?

Here in Israel, as soon as the war is over, we must begin the process of creating a new partnership, an internal alliance that will alter the array of narrow interest groups that controls us. An alliance of those who comprehend the fatal risk of continuing to circle the grindstone; those who understand that our borderlines no longer separate Jews from Arabs, but people who long to live in peace from those who feed, ideologically and emotionally, on continued violence.

I believe that Israel still contains a critical mass of people, both left-wing and right-wing, religious and secular, Jews and Arabs, who are capable of uniting — with sobriety, with no illusions — around a few points of agreement to resolve the conflict with our neighbors.

There are many who still "remember the future" (an odd phrase, but an accurate one in this context) — the future they want for Israel, and for Palestine. There are still — but who knows for how much longer — people in Israel who understand that if we sink into apathy again we will be leaving the arena to those who would drag us fervently into the next war, igniting every possible locus of conflict in Israeli society as they go.

If we do not do this, we will all — Israelis and Palestinians, blindfolded, our heads bowed in stupor, collaborating with hopelessness — continue to turn the grindstone of this conflict, which crushes and erodes our lives, our hopes and our humanity.

Yedioth Ahronoth – July 28, 2014

Gazan Roulette

By Alex Fishman

The nerve-wracking back-and-forth of the past couple of days has cast the Israeli government in a very problematic light, ostensibly making it appear to be begging on its knees for a cease-fire while the other side has been able to dictate the pace of the fighting. That is a distorted picture.

The twilight zone in which we find ourselves—between reaching an arrangement and continued fighting—belongs to the family of psychological disorders that are characteristic of leaders in times of crisis. The Hamas leaders, who had overseen the fighting thus far in an orderly fashion, have begun—and this was particularly salient yesterday—to act like compulsive gamblers. Like the fellow who sits by the roulette table, loses and loses, and believes that if he goes just another round he'll get the big win he's been waiting for: kidnap a soldier or have a major terror attack carried out. Anything that will allow him to leave the table not completely broke. The sense in the Hamas leadership is that an end to the fighting now could be more costly than the price that they will pay if they continue to fight, since the battle today could affect Hamas's future.

That profit-loss equation became most patently evident on Saturday, when the Gazans emerged to see the devastation. There are dozens of "Dahiyas" in the Gaza Strip at present, and people are asking what they gained as a result. That grim public sentiment is, apparently, one of the reasons that Hamas decided to raise its bet on firepower. On the one hand, it wants a cease-fire; on the other, it suddenly seem to it that it has an opportunity to make that achievement and so it fires once again.

Israeli officials believe that despite the zigzagging, Hamas is gearing up for a negotiated cease-fire arrangement. If it becomes evident that Israel has erred in its assessment of Hamas's behavior, that will result in an expansion of the military operation to a scope far broader than anything we have seen thus far.

The back-and-forth of the past two days was preceded by the political initiative that was sponsored by US Secretary of State John Kerry, who presented a compromise paper that left Hamas with a sense of achievement and with motivation to continue to fight. Meanwhile, on Friday, Hamas Gaza and Khaled Mashal requested a humanitarian lull so as to allow the population in Gaza to make preparations for Eid el-Fitr. From Israel's perspective, every lull serves the central objective of demolishing the tunnels. On Saturday Israel destroyed twice the number of tunnels in comparison to the number it was able to demolish under fire. On Saturday afternoon Hamas once again asked, through the same channels, for another 24-hour lull, with the option of keeping things quiet until after Eid el-Fitr. On Saturday, during the lull, PA officials in Gaza who are employed by Ramallah, received their salaries. So as not to annoy the Israelis, the Qataris transferred the funds to pay Hamas salaries via the Islamic bank, and they were doled out in the mosques, allowing Israel the option of looking the other way. The request to extend the lull by another 24 hours ran into the sanctity of the Sabbath. Until the security cabinet could be convened on Saturday night, Hamas was informed that Israel would agree—for the time being—to extend the lull by another four hours. Hamas did not reply, but could not understand why its request for a 24 hour extension had not been met, and opened fire, killing Barak Refael Dagorker. Kerry once again asked Israel for a 24-hour cease-fire.

This is where the rift between Khaled Mashal and Hamas Gaza became evident. Behind the request for a cease-fire that would continue into Eid el-Fitr was Mashal. The Israeli security cabinet agreed. But Hamas Gaza, which was supposed to be coordinated with Khaled Mashal, announced a rejection of the lull and independently presented a precondition of its own: an Israeli troop withdrawal from the Gaza Strip. Hamas Gaza had to present the local population with some sort of achievement. An IDF troops withdrawal would have allowed the hundreds of thousands of refugees to return to their homes. Moreover, the IDF troops' presence in the Gaza Strip is one of the signs of Hamas's military failure. Naturally, Israel rejected that precondition outright. The decision by Hamas Gaza not to accept Mashal's decision to opt for a lull indicates a deepening rift and loss of faith between the people bearing the brunt of the war and the person representing them at the negotiations.

On Sunday morning Hamas renewed its rocket fire. Israeli officials waited to see where the gambler was heading. Late in the morning, when the rocket fire mounted, Israel announced that it was stopping the lull and was renewing its offensive. In the afternoon, Hamas zigzagged back, Hamas Gaza made an urgent request, and practically begged for a construction freeze by means of UN Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process Robert Serry, saying that they were prepared to allow for a humanitarian lull from the middle of the day. Apparently, Hamas Gaza had come to toe Khaled Mashal's line. Israel decided to change its public image and announced that the game was over. It was not going to accept any decision until Hamas announced publicly that it wanted a cease-fire unconditionally. Hamas's spokesman quickly posted a tweet asking unconditionally for a cease-fire. This time Israel decided to change the orders to the troops, instructing them to open fire only defensively.

That is how it came to happen that the troops in Gaza received three different orders for the rules of engagement within a number of hours: in the morning they were told to hold their fire; before noon they renewed the warfare; and in the afternoon they were told to fire defensively only. The officers on the ground were confused. That is an unhealthy situation, to understate matters. Now they are cautiously looking to see whether the gambler has come to realize that the casino is closed and that he needs to go home with nothing in his wallet.

In the meantime, the IDF has continued to operate against the tunnels at full pace. The moment it completes that work the government will have to decide: do we leave as part of an agreement, in keeping with the Egyptian initiative; do we leave unilaterally; or do we expand the fighting. The ball is still in the compulsive gambler's court.

John --

In 2008, busloads of volunteers left from DC to help win some of the most important races in the country.

This year, we're doing it again.

Every day between October 30th and November 2nd, volunteers will board buses to key states and districts to go door to door, have conversations with key voters, and make sure they get to the polls.

Will you join them?

You can travel for any length of time -- there will be one, two, three, and four day trips. And if you stay overnight, we'll get you a place to stay.

These races are incredibly close and every voter we talk to could mean the difference between winning and losing on Election Day.

Already, hundreds of volunteers have signed up to go and get out the vote.

Please join them -- and us -- in the final stretch:

Subject: [big campaign] Wash. Post editorial blasts Corsi

Par for Mr. Corsi
An expert at misrepresentation takes on Barack Obama.

http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/08/14/AR2008081403051_pf.html

Friday, August 15, 2008; A20

THERE'S A cottage industry in books about Barack Obama; by one count, more than 20 are just out or are in the works. But few debut in the No. 1 spot on the New York Times bestseller list, as Jerome R. Corsi's "The Obama Nation" will do among nonfiction hardcover titles this week. Unfortunately but unsurprisingly, given his earlier hit job on the last Democratic nominee, Mr. Corsi's latest is rife with inaccuracies and innuendo. If the fundamental smear of "Unfit for Command" was that John F. Kerry was no war hero, the insinuation of Mr. Corsi's latest is that Mr. Obama is a closet Muslim and militant, black activist drug-user.

"The Obama Nation" -- the ungainly play on words (abomination, get it?) is "fully intended," the author tells us -- reprises the Corsi method. Mr. Corsi boasts that "I fully document all arguments and contentions I make, extensively footnoting all references" and asserts that "my fundamental opposition to Obama's presidential candidacy involves public policy differences." But footnoting to a discredited blog item does not constitute careful scholarship, and the bulk of Mr. Corsi's book has nothing to do with issues.

He gets facts wrong, from the date of Mr. Obama's marriage to whether he dedicated his autobiography to his family (he did) to whether he revealed that he took his future wife on his second trip to Kenya (he did.) He makes offensive statements: "The sexual attraction of his mother to her African husband jumps out from the page."

When facts are lacking, Mr. Corsi makes his point by suggestive questions. Noting that Life magazine could find no record of an article that Mr. Obama remembered reading as a child about a black man who tried to lighten his skin, Mr. Corsi asks, "How much more imagining, hypothetical lying, or just plain lying is Obama capable of doing?" When facts are present, he twists them to make Mr. Obama bad.

Mr. Corsi's discussion of Mr. Obama's drug use -- disclosed by Mr. Obama in his autobiography -- manages to combine a few of these techniques. "Still, Obama has yet to answer questions whether he ever dealt drugs, or if he stopped using marijuana and cocaine completely in college, or whether his drug usage extended into his law school days or beyond. Did Obama ever use drugs in his days as a community organizer in Chicago, or when he was a state senator from Illinois? How about in the U.S. Senate?" In fact, Mr. Obama has said that he stopped using drugs when he was 20. Mr. Corsi is similarly misleading about Mr. Obama's religious background, questioning his claim to be Christian. "Obama had to know that running for political office, even state office, would be much more difficult to do if voters suspected he was a Muslim," Corsi writes. "Yet once Obama became a member of Trinity, he had proof he was a Christian, as he professed to be."

Mr. Corsi has dismissed criticisms of his book as "nit-picking," an odd defense coming from an author happy to inflate any possible omission into a full-blown evasion. Mary Matalin, the Republican political strategist who heads Threshold Editions, the Simon & Schuster division that published "The Obama Nation," described the book to the New York Times as "a piece of scholarship, and a good one at that." That would not be our description.

Subject: A Huge Victory In Congress For Us

Dear John,

We've just scored a major win in the House of Representatives, and I wanted to write to you to let you know. For weeks, VoteVets.org has fought hard to pass the American Clean Energy and Security Act, and it just passed the House! With your help, VoteVets.org ran over a million dollars worth of television ads in key districts, brought vets to Washington to push for the bill, and met with key lawmakers to help bring about this successful vote.

This is a huge win for troops and America. Billions in Middle East Oil profits have gone to the same terrorists we're fighting, including al Qaeda. Literally, our addiction to Middle East oil has helped fund both sides of the wars we're in. Now, we're poised to make major investments in American energy sources, renewable energy that we won't run out of.

We're not done yet. We now need to get this through the Senate and on to President Obama, and then we have many more battles moving ahead, from funding equipment for troops to health care reform that benefits all veterans. YOU CAN HELP US. Here's three things to do, right now, that will take 30 seconds.

- Click here to tell your friends and family to sign up with VoteVets.org, and join this fight
- Click here to join our network at Facebook
- Click here to get the latest on this and other news at our blog, VetVoice.com .

We need as many voices as possible, moving ahead. This is huge, but we're not done yet.

You didn't hear him knocking (Obama's Cuba policy)

Dear Friends:

From today to the inauguration of the next U.S. president, two themes will likely shape our analysis of U.S.-Cuba relations over the next 67 weeks.

The first is what we call the "Power Shift," the ongoing transformation in "who calls the shots" in the Cuba policy debate; the second is the growing, and increasingly broad-based interest in creating "facts on the ground" that will make the Obama reforms that started on December 17, 2014 irreversible.

Together, these themes explain why there's more political space to think differently about Cuba and the conversation around the policy.

Think back to last summer. The Treasury Department made news when it released a nine-page report by its Office of Inspector General (OIG) which concluded that Jay-Z and Beyoncé had traveled to Cuba legally, had not violated U.S. sanctions, and that OFAC's decision not to start a formal investigation of their visit, as demanded by Reps. Ros-Lehtinen and Diaz-Balart in 2013, "was reasonable."

Sure, it was fun to read a U.S. government report that began with the words "This memorandum represents the results of our review of a trip to Cuba by the couple Shawn Carter (whose stage name is Jay-Z) and Knowles-Carter (Beyoncé) to determine whether the trip violated U.S. sanctions."

But, the facts that this ginned-up controversy lasted over a year, wasted taxpayer money, and trivialized a big issue (Cuba as the one destination for U.S. travelers where it is a crime to be a tourist) were vivid examples of where hardliner dominance over Cuba policy had taken us.

Developments just this week illustrate how much the entire conversation has changed.

On Wednesday, the Washington Post reported, in its "Power Moves" column, that former Senator Olympia Snowe (ME) and former Homeland Security Secretary Janet Napolitano joined The Cuba Consortium, a bipartisan group formed to advise businesses and others about the normalization process.

Good story placed in an important, pro-embargo paper, and no backlash.

Arkansas Governor Asa Hutchinson returned from his trip to Cuba saying "he looks forward to the possibilities of trading with Cuba," according to KARK-TV news.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Former Bush Administration Homeland Security official, who took special pride in making Cuba sanctions bite harder, pirouettes on the policy, no suffers no pushback.

Meanwhile, U.S. Representative Rick Crawford, who represents the First Congressional District of Arkansas, introduced legislation cosponsored by the Chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, Michael Conaway, and Rep. Ted Poe, both Texas Republicans, to remove restrictions in U.S. law that impede the sale of agriculture products to Cuba.

The Miami Herald, which editorialized again this week against lifting the embargo, also covered a big new positive development in the Cuban reality; namely, progress in getting more Cubans access to the Internet in this excellent article "Cuba: A nation gets connected."

Perhaps, most remarkable of all, Commerce Secretary Penny Pritzker visits Cuba, delivers a message to Cuban officials "to make sure that you understand how our regulations work, because I think there's business opportunity in that," and adds "What we're trying to do is be as open as we can until the blockade is lifted."

Blockade? As the New York Times helpfully explained, blockade is the word that Cubans use to refer to the U.S. embargo.

In covering the trip, neither the New York Times nor the Washington Post quoted any blowback from the entrenched sources of pro-embargo political support. None.

They could have quoted - or called - Senator Bob Menendez (NJ) who delivered a stinging indictment of President Obama's Cuba policy in a floor speech on Wednesday.

Although it might seem a little snarky, another sign of the Power Shift can be found in the meager coverage Menendez's speech attracted. He could barely be heard.

On Google this morning, we found 234 articles on Secretary Pritzker's trip. A similar search found the Senator's speech was covered by El Nuevo Herald , the Voice of America, Texas Tribune , PJ Media , and three news distribution services (including "noodls ," the self-described "killer app" for the media relations industry).

This is not to say the battle's won; the Obama policy rules! No. There is still much work to be done.

As Nick Miroff wrote in the Washington Post after Pritzker's trip, there are economic impediments on the Cuban side -- along with serious human rights issues and related concerns on both sides -- that are slowing the creation of "facts on the ground." These delays mean fewer incentives for U.S. corporations and political figures in the U.S. Congress to speed the ultimate removal of the embargo.

Of course, given the inability of the House to elect a presiding officer, it's easy to understand why repealing the embargo will take more time.

But, our point is this. At last, we're talking about big things rather than small ball; we're directly engaging with Cuba's government on matters ranging from trade to human rights, and not debasing ourselves with debates over Rihanna showing her backside in Vanity Fair or whether the Rolling Stones should ask Cubans when they tour next March, "Can't you hear me knocking?"

U.S.-Cuba

Commerce Secretary Pritzker concludes trip to Cuba, encourages trade and reform

Concluding a two-day visit to Cuba, U.S. Secretary of Commerce Penny Pritzker reiterated President Obama's goal of ending the trade embargo saying "The president wants to see the embargo lifted, but the president realizes it will take time."

During her brief stay, Secretary Pritzker met with Cuba's Minister of Foreign Trade and Foreign Investment, Rodrigo Malmierca, Cuba's Minister of Foreign Affairs, Bruno Rodriguez, and the Vice-President of the Council of Ministers, Ricardo Cabrisas.

A statement from Cuba's Foreign Ministry said the purpose of the dialogue with Secretary Pritzker was to "exchange over the reach and limitations of the measures recently taken by the U.S. government to modify some aspects of the application of the embargo against Cuba."

Secretary Pritzker began her trip to Cuba with a tour of the Mariel Special Development Zone (ZEDM) where she was briefed by port officials. The ZEDM, 28 miles to the west of Havana, opened in 2014 and is designed to incentivize foreign investment, and anticipates an increase in maritime commercial activity in Cuba once the expansion of the Panama Canal is operational in 2016, and trade with the United States becomes more active.

Under current U.S. law, vessels that dock in Cuba must wait six months before docking in the United States unless they are issued a specific license from the U.S. Treasury Department. A Cuban port official told Secretary Pritzker that this "hamstrings" business between the U.S. and Cuba. Among three Cuba-related amendments adopted the Senate Appropriations Committee, one offered by Sen. Jon Tester (MT) would repeal the 180-day quarantine, as we reported in July .

The Mariel Port is both a practical example of Cuba's desire to increase economic growth and a symbol of its increasing involvement with the global economy. It was financed largely by Brazilian capital, operates using Chinese equipment, and is managed by a Singaporean port management firm.

Secretary Pritzker dined with Cuban entrepreneurs on Tuesday night and co-chaired a Regulatory Dialogue with Cuban officials on Wednesday .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Secretary noted that Cuba's dual currency and "inadequate " regulatory system are obstacles to attracting large-scale foreign investment, issues which Cuba is addressing in its plans to update key aspects of its economic system .

She concluded her visit to Cuba by encouraging Cuba's government to ease trade for Cubans saying, "We urge President Castro and his government to make it easier for Cuban citizens to trade and travel more freely, to enjoy the fruits of their labor, to access the Internet and to (be) hired directly by foreign companies."

To address the island's economic problems, Cuba's government has trimmed roughly half-a-million positions from the state payroll, and actions it has taken to update its economic model have spurred the creation of cooperatives and non-state sector businesses, as the Havana Times reported, "have primarily benefited private activity in the food and services industries but have not yet reached higher professional spheres."

It was reported in June by 14YMedio that the self-employed sector now exceeds half-a-million.

Secretary Pritzker's trip follows the release of new regulations from the Department of Commerce and the Department of Treasury in September, as we reported here . The new regulations allow U.S. businesses to open offices and bank accounts in Cuba as well as establish joint ventures with some of Cuba's government entities and hire Cuban workers, reported the Washington Post .

The Center for Democracy in the Americas, which publishes the Cuba Central Newsblast, published a book about Cuba's contemporary economic evolution, which is available here .

Illinois Representatives to Visit Cuba

U.S. Representatives Cheri Bustos (Il-17) and Rodney Davis (Il-13), Democratic and Republican officeholders from Illinois, will depart for Cuba next week with officials from Illinois business and farm groups.

According to the Galesburg Register Mail , they plan to visit Cuba to promote new economic development and trade opportunities for Illinois farmers.

The delegation is said to include officials from the Illinois Chamber of Commerce, the Illinois Farm Bureau, Illinois Soybean Growers, Illinois Corn and AGCO, an American farm equipment manufacturer based in Duluth, Georgia, and is sponsored by the Illinois Cuba Working Group.

Bustos released a statement saying, "Illinois farmers have what it takes to compete and succeed on the global economic playing field. So I'm deeply concerned about how the Cuban embargo has limited their ability to grow and create jobs across our state. Congressman Davis said, "We've allowed the sale of certain agricultural products to Cuba since 2000 but because of government restrictions we've put Illinois farmers, and the Cuban people, at a disadvantage. I'm looking forward to learning more about how improving agricultural trade with a country that imports roughly 70 percent of its food and is located just 90 miles from our coast can create greater opportunities for Illinois farmers."

As the trip was announced, Reuters reported that Cuba has resumed purchasing U.S. chicken "ending a two-month suspensión that Cuba attributed to a bird flu epidemic affecting the U.S. poultry industry."

Representative Crawford introduces legislation to increase agricultural trade with Cuba

Congressman Rick Crawford (AR-1) has introduced legislation that would steadily increase trade with Cuba. If enacted into law, the Cuba Agricultural Exports Act would

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"repeal restrictions on export financing and give producers access to Department of Agriculture marketing programs that help the U.S. compete in foreign markets."Representative Crawford's bill would allow the U.S. to export more food commodities without wholly lifting the embargo.

The bill amends the Trade Sanctions Reform and Export Enhancement Act of 2000 (TRSA), which allows exports of agricultural goods and medicines to Cuba with restrictions prohibiting financing.Crawford's proposal removes the requirement for Cuban buyers to provide cash in advance, a definition which was loosened by the Obama administration this year , and goes further by allowing the extension of private credit.

The bill also provides for use of the federal agricultural export promotion programs and for direct investment in the Cuban agricultural sector. The application of these programs would be restricted to entities not affiliated with Cuba's government. ALIMPORT is the Cuban government entity that oversees all agricultural imports from the U.S.

The bill is co-sponsored by House Agriculture Committee Chairman Michael Conway (TX-11), Representative Ted Poe (TX-2), and Representative Ralph Abraham (LA-5). In a press release, Representative Crawford stated:

> "The Cuba Agricultural Exports Act would allow our producers to compete on a level playing field in the Cuban market, a significant opportunity for American farmers and ranchers. I believe that agriculture trading partnerships with Cuba will help build a foundation of goodwill and cooperation that will open the door to long-sought reforms in the same the way that American influence has brought reform to other communist states."

The Cuba Agricultural Exports Act has been referred for consideration to the House Agriculture Committee where it awaits further review. It is similar to Senator Heidi Heitkamp's (ND) and Senator John Boozman's (AR) Agricultural Export Expansion Act, the Crawford's legislation adds to the growing number of legislative proposals that lift restrictions on travel and trade with Cuba. Most recently, Representatives Tom Emmer (MN-6) and Kathy Castor (FL-14) introduced legislation to lift the embargo in late July, as we reported here .

C uban Immigration Surging

According to the Pew Research Center, more than 27,000 Cubans entered the U.S. during the first nine months of the 2015 fiscal year, a 78% increase over the same time period last year. Pew reported that the majority of the Cubans who came into the U.S. arrived through the Laredo sector in Texas. Entries through Miami, while smaller, doubled over the previous year.

As EFE reported, "Cubans who immigrate to the U.S. receive special treatment," compared to migrants of all other nationalities, enabling them to stay by arriving on dry land, and are able after one year of residence in the U.S. to apply for permanent residence.

IN CUBA

Internet Access Expands in Cuba

The Telecommunications Company of Cuba (ETECSA) announced last weekend that it would allow people in other countries to pay for Cubans' Internet use, according to the Havana Times . To receive a top up of Internet service, the Cuban on the island must have a permanent Nauta Internet account with ETECSA.

The service took effect on Tuesday and, for approximately $11.50, an individual outside Cuba can pay for five hours of Internet service for someone in Cuba. Over the summer, ETECSA rolled out 35 new WI-FI hotspots on the island. By the year 2020, Cuba's government pledged to expand Internet access to all of its citizens.

Today, only about 5 percent of Cubans can connect to the web . The WI-FI offered by ETECSA offer meager coverage and it is difficult to obtain. According to NPR, Cuban citizens must purchase a card from the government and pay about "$2 for an hour of Internet use, while the average state salary in Cuba is about $20 a month."

Further, access is predominantly available in tourist areas or downtown parks; away from where most citizens spend the majority of their time. Despite these challenges, Cubans do seek out the Internet to connect with loved ones abroad according to the Miami Herald. Further desire for Internet and media access is seen by the widespread and growing use of "El Paquete Semanal ;" a digital package of media sold on the island containing news and entertainment from abroad, which we reported on here .

Last month, the Obama administration announced policy changes that would allow telecommunications companies access to Cuban markets in an effort to improve infrastructure and increase connectivity. However, this action has been met with some skepticism from the Cuban government. Vice President José Ramón Machado Ventura said, "Some want to give it to us for free, not so Cubans can communicate but to infiltrate us for ideological work. ... We have to possess the Internet our way, knowing the imperialists aim to use it to destroy the Revolution."

The Rolling Stones are considering a concert in Cuba

When septuagenarian rockers ask Cubans, "Can't you hear me knocking?" they really mean it.

News sources ranging from Cuban state media to the Guardian are abuzz with reports that Mick Jagger is in Cuba this week to scout out a possible concert venue for the Rolling Stones' upcoming Latin America tour.

Mick Jagger told Granma, Cuba's state newspaper, little about his trip except that "...it could be related to a concert that the Rolling Stones want to give in Cuba." Stones' bassist Darryl Jones performed in Havana in February with the group The Dead Daisies, according to Travel Pulse . Jagger's comments build on speculation started by lead guitarist Keith Richards when he told Cuban sources that the band is eyeing Havana's Latin American stadium for a March 2016 concert.

CUBA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS

Representatives from Chad, Slovakia and the UAE visit Cuba

Chad's foreign minister, Moussa Faki Mahamat, and Solvakia's Prime Minister, Robert Fico, and the United Arab Emirates, Foreign Affairs Minister Sheikh Abdullah, each visited Cuba in separate official visits this week. Chad's foreign minister came to Cuba to reaffirm bi-lateral relations with Cuba while Slovakia's Prime Minister made his first visit to meet with President Raúl Castro and discuss existing accords, reports Cuban news sources.

Cuba's Foreign Minister, Bruno Rodríguez Parrilla, met with Foreign Minister Moussa Faki Mahamat on Wednesday. Minister Rodríguez emphasized the importance of Cuban relations with the Africa Union and Cuba's continued commitment to strong bi-lateral relations with Chad. Minister Mahamat expressed solidarity with Cuba's government and praised Cuba's "independence" and "resistance" before signing new agreements regarding diplomatic passports between Chad and Cuba.

Slovakia's Prime Minister Robert Fico was greeted by Cuba's Vice Minister of Foreign Relations, Ana Teresita González Fraga, upon his arrival in Cuba on Wednesday. During his official visit, Prime Minister Fico will meet with President Raúl Castro and visit the José Martí Memorial. Between 2012 and 2015, Slovakia and Cuba have signed several agreements related to education, finance, culture, and the economy. Since 1996, Slovakia has voted in favor of an end to the U.S. embargo at the United Nations.

Foreign Affairs Minister Sheikh Abdullah arrived Wednesday and was greeted by first vice president Miguel Diaz-Canel. During his 24-hour visit, Sheikh Abdullah signed new according to "deepen cooperation" between Cuba and the UAE regarding renewable energy and aviation.

We had a good meeting today to ratify the research plan and discuss staffing structure and talent. Few things to report out:

1. We seem to have a settled on a team for the research project--we just need to lock in the media people. Attached is the latest draft of the one pager. I'm hoping to get the team discussing and editing the project design over the holiday so we can present a proposal to HRC at the beginning of Jan. Fingers crossed.

2. Good discussion about digital and tech. I think we have some good digital options...she approved setting up an interview process for CTO candidates, since we want someone outside politics for this role and we need outside advice on candidates.

3. Self research: Cheryl, she wanted to keep Heather and the team going from DC. I flagged that we will likely need to expand the team to 5-10 people, which she seemed fine with. I also flagged that self research is so integral to rapid response, vetting, content, etc that we'd probably want a contingent in HQ to prevent bottlenecks. We agreed I'd loop back with you to discuss options--I think a hybrid model may work. Let's discuss.

4. We had a good discussion about communications. John there are some WH people I'd like to discuss. I'll follow up. Any names welcome!

For the reference to what she said earlier, could you please say:

Improving health care is one of those issues and will be central to my campaign and my Presidency. We need to strengthen the Affordable Care Act—not scrap it. I talked to Iowans today about my plan to crack down on skyrocketing prescription drug prices. My proposal starts by capping how much you have to pay out of pocket for prescription drugs each month and really helps those people suffering from chronic diseases like rheumatoid arthritis of serious illnesses like cancer. And my plan will hold drug companies accountable and drive down prices. Later this week I'll be releasing additional ideas to rein in out-of-pocket costs for working families.

Subject:	Advice and possible help

Hi John:

I am hoping to get your advice and, possibly, your help on a hiring/recruitment decision. Hewlett has term limits, and the term for the head of our Environment Program is about to end. Tom Steinbach will be leaving in August and I need to replace him.

The position is unique in the philanthropy world. At $100M/year for climate, Hewlett is by far the largest and most significant funder, double the next largest funder. (We also do $20M per year on western land conservation, and are the largest funder there too. The position oversees both portfolios.) We created ClimateWorks originally and spearheaded the 2.0 version on whose board you sit, and our role at the Funder Table is pivotal. So the position matters and I need to get the very best person.

It's a special opportunity for a couple of reasons:

(1) The overstated claims of the importance of philanthropy tend to make me crazy. Foundations aren't going to save the world, solve poverty, or eliminate racism. We do good, given our resources, and that's plenty. Climate is different, though. Here, I think the next 10-15 years really will determine the fate of the planet in a significant way, and philanthropy really does have an important role. And Hewlett is the 800lb gorilla in the philanthropy world. So the person with this position has an opportunity to affect history and the lives of hundreds of millions (I feel sheepish writing that, yet I think it's true). He or she won't be famous, but it's a unique opportunity to make an enormous difference for the better.

(2) The person in this position will have much more freedom than is typical. Grants in our climate initiative don't require board approval, and I am a very hands off manager. So the director has $100M per year to deploy with few external constraints.

But who should it be? I would be eager to hear your thoughts, if you have any, about who would be right. The person needs to see the importance of what we have been doing till now (actions to make clean fuels competitive with dirty fuels), but also to see that the next stage means going beyond this and finding a way to catalyze trillions in investments to transform infrastructures to use the now-cost-effective clean fuels. It's a big challenge. Plus, the person needs to be able to herd the cats (other funders, grantees, our staff, etc.), meaning high EQ.

One person I would love to interest is your successor at the WH: Brian Deese. Do you think he might be interested? I imagine he will be in high demand, but I doubt there are many opportunities that are comparable in making a difference. Could you help me feel him out or see? Do you have other ideas?

Thanks for your time.

Best,

Larry

LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS – Purgatory has never seen a better celebration. The Clinton enterprise may be in limbo between one former president and a potential future one, but it's all the more reason for one last hurrah.

The tenth anniversary of Bill Clinton's presidential library brought hundreds of people together, from old friends and some entertainment (Kool and the Gang for the baby boomers, Nick Jonas for the younger set) to a dash of celebrity (Kevin Spacey) and plenty of lengthy symposia. The soiree could also be seen as a grand finale, as Bill's era may soon give way to a period dominated by his wife, especially if her expected run for the presidency in 2016 succeeds.

Bill Clinton's story has largely been written, contained in the millions of documents locked away in the archives of his presidential library here. But Hillary's story is, as her Twitter bio states, "TBD…"

"This weekend we're concentrating on President Clinton," said Sheila Bronfman, an Arkansas Democratic activist who met the Clintons in 1976 and has been a friend and supporter ever since. "There will be another day and we'll look forward to what's happening" with Hillary Clinton, she said.

Bronfman was a leader of the 200 or so Arkansans who helped save Bill Clinton's 1992 presidential candidacy during the New Hampshire primary after it was rocked by draft dodging allegations. On their own volition, the "Arkansas Travelers" packed into buses and headed north to go door-to-door in the brutal New Hampshire winter to vouch for their governor.

"I would still follow him to the ends of the earth," said Kathy Roth-Douquet, a former Clinton defense advisor who now runs the veterans charity Blue Star Families.

The spotlight was meant for the former president, but the looming 2016 presidential election caused the other Clinton to steal the show. "As soon as the midterm elections were over, the New Hampshire primary began," said Terry Shumaker, a New Hampshire native who co-chaired Clinton's 1992 campaign in the state and later served as an ambassador under the president.

Ready for Hillary, the super PAC trying to draft Hillary Clinton into the 2016 presidential race, had no official presence in Little Rock, though several of the Clinton alumni who came in from as far away as Los Angeles and London are involved in the RFH effort. One handed his business card with the super PAC's logo sheepishly to a reporter, making it clear he was not here on that kind of business.

Mostly, the alumni wanted to look back and share old war stories.

There were also reflections of the night Clinton first won the presidency: When the campaign staff pushed all the tables together in a long row to celebrate at Doe's Eat Place, a Clinton favorite that serves up no-frills three pound steaks. While others were ebullient, Rahm Emanuel, now the mayor of Chicago, felt vengeful, listing off names of people who had undermined the campaign and stabbing a steak knife into the table to punctuate each one. 'Dead!" he screamed as the brought the knife down each time.

"It was like the Godfather, really," Paul Begala, a longtime Clinton political advisor, recalled Saturday with a chuckle. A waitress at Doe's said the former president still comes in at least once a year, though there's little for him to eat there now that he's a near-vegan.

Wes Clark, the former four star general who briefly sought the Democratic presidential nomination in 2004, recalled first meeting fellow Arkansan Bill Clinton at a conference at Georgetown when they were in college. "He was escorted by a young lady on each arm," Clark said. He's been loyal to Clinton ever since.

Late that night at the bar, economics advisor Gene Sperling recounted a time when the president intervened in his love life, urging him to call back a staffer with whom a senator had personally set Sperling up on a date.

Other former White House aides groused about how George Stephanopoulos, Clinton's former communications director, became what The New York Times dubbed a "thinking woman's sex symbol."

Karen Finney, a former aide to Hillary Clinton in the White House, recalled a warning given on their first day: “Anyone who leaked [to the press] would be punished accordingly. It was a little different on the president’s side,” she said at event hosted by Politico.

At the center of everything was the Clinton family, who looked relaxed among friends in their former hometown. Usually cloistered off from the public by barricades and Secret Service, there were no rope lines here. Bodyguards mostly kept their distance.

On Saturday morning, the Clintons mingled freely in the lobby of the $165 million presidential library building, which also has an apartment on the top floor for the family’s use when they’re in town.

Begala entered wearing a vintage denim jacket embossed with a giant logo of the 1992 Clinton/Gore campaign logo on the back. “Begala’s still got his jacket!” Bill Clinton said upon seeing former political advisor, pointing it out to his wife. “Oh, I love that one, oh my gosh!” she said.

In her first public appearance since the midterm elections, Hillary and her daughter, Chelsea, discussed empowering women and girls at a panel of their “No Ceilings” project. “You have to look at the past, you have to see what we’ve done and why we did it and we learned from it in order to think about what you can do for the next ten years,” the former secretary of state said of their effort to help women.

Three panels of former officials on Friday made for the official retelling of what had been done at the Clinton White House. And reminiscing continued each night with the aid of bourbon at the venerable Capitol Hotel, where Barbra Streisand was staying and Kevin Spacey could be seen sharing photos of his dog on his iPhone.

Bill Clinton is inescapable in Little Rock, and everyone here seems to have a story about meeting him as attorney general or governor. Many restaurants have a picture of him on the walls, and some are even named named after him.

But even so, and with his approval ratings sky high, he could no longer save his own party in his home state. Democrats lost almost every major race in the Arkansas this month, despite Clinton’s best efforts.

“We’ve been riding on the back of Bill Clinton for so long, but he hasn’t been in office here for 23 years,” said Charles Blake, a Democrat from Little Rock who was just elected to the Arkansas state House. Democrats have seen their numbers halved in the lower chamber since 2006, dropping from 72 seats to just 36 after this month’s elections.

On Saturday night, 6,000 people filled into a giant tent set up outside the library for the final party: A concert featuring Kool and the Gang and Nick Jonas, among others. The Clinton Foundation had given away thousands of tickets to locals, especially teenagers eager to see one third of the Jonas Brothers.

The former first couple sat up front and center among friends and bobbed their heads to the music.

Outside, John Youngblood sold t-shirts and buttons of Clinton swag, including several promoting a Hillary Clinton presidential run. He said he had gotten some negative feedback from the crowd for focusing on 2016, but that the best-selling button of the night was one that featured a photo of the first couple as college students, with the labels “42” and “45.” (Bill was the 42nd president, Hillary would 45).

Finally, after the musical acts concluded, the man everyone came to honor appeared again to conclude the weekend. “I am the old horse that can run around the track one more time,” Bill Clinton joked.

Then, standing outside the library he built on the street named after him and looking out at his people in his home town, the former president draped his arm around his wife’s neck. “This is a good thing for us to do, but it’s just the beginning. And the whole idea is for it to go on and on and on and on,” he said.

USA Today: "Voices: For the Clintons, the past is not even past"

By Susan Page

November 17, 2014, 11:44 a.m. EST

LITTLE ROCK — As former Virginia governor Gerald Baliles wrapped up a day of discussion at the Clinton Library about the 42nd president's legacy, he quoted writer William Faulkner: "The past is never dead," he said. "It's not even past."

Standing just behind him, former president Bill Clinton nodded and silently mouthed the second half of the familiar quotation himself.

Over the past few days, the Clinton Presidential Center has celebrated its 10th anniversary and the University of Virginia's Miller Center, which Baliles heads, has released the first batch of oral history interviews with veterans of the Clinton administration. The center has conducted similar oral history projects with officials who worked for presidents Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan, George H.W. Bush and, now underway, George W. Bush.

While every presidency carries consequences for those who follow, the past that is the Clinton White House has the potential to be all too present for the current president, and, perhaps, the future one.

For President Obama, the parallels between him and Clinton are unmistakable, although the two men are not particularly close — not as personally close, interestingly, as Clinton is with the Republican presidents who bookend his tenure, the elder Bush and the younger one. (In a teasing exchange on social media last week, George W. Bush referred to Clinton as his #BrotherFromAnotherMother.)

Obama and Clinton are the only Democrats to be elected twice to the White House since World War II. Both staked their early presidencies on pushing health care overhauls (Clinton's flopped, Obama's passed). Both watched Democratic majorities in the House and Senate give way to solid Republican control during their tenures, in part as a result of the controversies over their health care plans.

At a panel discussion I moderated Friday, former domestic-policy adviser Bruce Reed, former Labor secretary Alexis Herman and political scientist Andrew Rudalevige of Bowdoin College recalled how Clinton responded to that changed political landscape. He built relationships with Republicans, even with the mercurial new House speaker, Newt Gingrich of Georgia, and cut compromises that often put him at odds with congressional Democrats.

And he got things done, including balancing the federal budget and signing a major welfare bill.

"If I got re-elected, I didn't want to be a lame duck," Clinton told the audience Friday. At a weekend event sponsored by Politico, he called "this whole lame-duck deal" a "mindset" to be avoided. He urged Obama to devise an aggressive agenda and use the budget process to make deals with Republicans on issues from immigration to taxes.

"Now that they have both houses, they have a much greater vested interest in not just being against everything," he said.

So far, Obama doesn't seem to be heeding that advice. Since this month's midterm elections cost Democrats control of the Senate, Obama has signaled that he may chose confrontation instead with the GOP by issuing an executive order on immigration and vetoing a measure authorizing the Keystone XL pipeline.

For Hillary Rodham Clinton, her role as a powerful policy adviser as well as first lady in the Clinton White House continues to be fodder for scrutiny as she moves toward a decision on whether to run for president in 2016. In his oral history interview, former White House chief of staff Leon Panetta described her role as "chief of staff-in-waiting," not hesitant about stepping in and speaking up.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The events at the Clinton Library didn't deal with such controversies as the Monica Lewinsky affair, the president's impeachment and his last-minute pardon of fugitive financier Marc Rich, though those were topics in some of the oral history interviews.

Meanwhile, Hillary Clinton these days is more likely to cite the record of her husband's administration than that of the current one, even though her tenure as Obama's secretary of State is of more recent vintage. In an interview with USA TODAY in June, she expressed concern about growing income inequality and said the issue could be effectively addressed.

"I go back and look at what my husband achieved, and it wasn't easy," she said, saying that on easing poverty and other fronts he built "a better record than other administrations that pursued other policies."

That is an argument we are likely to hear again.

The Columbus Dispatch: "Beatty signs onto 'Ready for Hillary' campaign"

By Jessica Wehrman

November 17, 2014, 12:34 pm. EST

Rep. Joyce Beatty says she's ready for Hillary.

Beatty, a Jefferson Township Democrat just elected to her second term in Congress, announced in an email to supporters that she supports former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton as a Democratic contender in 2016.

Beatty has signed onto the "Ready for Hillary" campaign – a super PAC aimed at generating support for a Clinton presidential bid.

She's not the first Ohio lawmaker to sign on. Rep. Tim Ryan, D-Niles, signed onto the campaign in November 2013.

Beatty's support comes during a "Ready for Hillary" "Organizing Bomb," aimed at finding 100,000 new grassroots supporters for the campaign. In her email, Beatty urges others to sign on to support Clinton as well.

"What many people don't realize is that Hillary had to give up all of her political organizing activities when she became Secretary of State," she writes. "That means it's up to us to build the foundation Hillary will need when and if she decides to run for president."

Yahoo: "Facebook slams the door on political campaigns"

By Jon Ward

[Subtitle:] An upcoming code change means Obama's groundbreaking 2012 outreach on the site won't happen again

WASHINGTON — Barack Obama's reelection campaign pioneered a pathway for political campaigns to reach voters through Facebook when it released an app that helped supporters target their friends with Obama-related material.

But as the 2016 presidential campaign approaches, Facebook is rolling out a change that will prevent future campaigns from doing this, closing the door on one of the most sophisticated social targeting efforts ever undertaken.

"It's a fairly significant shift," said Teddy Goff, who was Obama's digital director in 2012, and oversaw the effort that helped the Obama campaign gain a Facebook following of 45 million users that year. Goff's team used Facebook and other tools to register more than a million voters online and to raise $690 million online in 2011 and 2012.

"The thing we did that will be most affected — by which I mean rendered impossible — by the changes they're making is the targeted sharing tool," Goff said.

More than 1 million Obama supporters in 2012 installed the campaign's Facebook app. These supporters were given the option to share their friend list with the Obama campaign. Goff said most of the app users did so. And when they did, Goff's team would then "run those friend lists up against the voter file, and make targeted suggestions as to who [supporters] should be sharing stuff with."

This was a powerful new form of voter outreach. The Obama campaign had concluded that many voters — especially younger Americans — viewed TV and other forms of advertising from the campaign with suspicion and skepticism. But they were still open to messages that came from friends and acquaintances.

The key to getting persuasive messages in front of persuadable voters going forward, the campaign decided, was to have them come from people they knew.

"It's extremely powerful for a campaign to be able to say to [a user], 'Hey, here are your persuadable friends, ranked in order of where they live: Ohio first, Virginia second, et cetera. Go share this video directly with them,'" Goff said.

The Romney campaign also started doing this, but only in October, a month before the presidential election.

Then in the spring of 2014, Facebook — responding to growing privacy concerns — cracked down on how much information third-party applications could gain about those who installed the apps.

"We've heard from people that they're often surprised when a friend shares their information with an app," wrote Facebook engineering manager Jeffrey Spehar in a blog post. "So we've updated Facebook Login so that each person decides what information they want to share about themselves, including their friend list."

Today, when Facebook users choose to share their friend list with an app, only those friends who also use the app become visible, Facebook spokeswoman Tera Randall told Yahoo News.

The changes went into effect for new apps on April 30, and existing apps were given a year before the change applied to them. (In technical terms, what Facebook is doing is changing its Graph application programming interface, or API, as well as the terms of service for app developers.)

What this means in practice is that a group like Ready for Hillary, the grass-roots network of supporters for a Clinton presidential run, has been able to use targeted sharing over the past year. That means it has the Facebook friend lists of all the people who've installed Ready for Hillary's app on the social network.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But when the API and terms-of-service changes become permanent for all apps, Ready for Hillary — as well as any campaign that has bought its voter information — won't be able to keep up to date with its supporters' most recent lists of friends, and will learn nothing about the Facebook friends of new supporters. Facebook's change becomes permanent on April 30, 2015.

Most of the Republican presidential hopefuls, meanwhile, will not get the chance to use the tool at all.

Aside from a brief article over the summer in Campaigns & Elections, the political press has not taken notice of the change.

Already, though, the National Republican Senatorial Committee has decided not to put time and resources into using Facebook's targeted sharing tools.

"We could have continued to use it just for this cycle, and it could have been useful to some degree, but for me it was a question of resource prioritization," said a senior NRSC official. "I wanted to focus on getting the fundamentals right first, then building up the chain of sophistication."

The NRSC official said that when the committee did use targeted sharing in the Massachusetts special election in June 2013, it showed results, but "we just didn't see the engagement numbers we needed to see to indicate that it was going to be transformative this [past] cycle."

"Plus, the API and News Feed changes have been so frequent over the past several years that we somewhat doubted the assurances that it would still work on [Election Day]," the NRSC official said. "Even if so, anything we built would have to be scrapped after the cycle; it couldn't serve as the foundation for future cycles, like email list development."

But the quest to reach voters through their friends will continue to be a highly competitive space in politics.

"I'm not convinced there aren't going to be ways [to work around the Facebook change]. But nobody has found a way yet," Goff said.

Stu Trevelyan, CEO of NGP VAN, the top software tool for Democratic campaigns, said that there are still ways to "track relationships in non-Facebook ways."

NGP VAN's interface, which taps into voter databases, is used by virtually every Democratic campaign up and down the ballot. So the level of volunteer use around the country is high. And NGP VAN has also created an Action Center tool that has been mapping relationship data among Democratic volunteers and Ready for Hillary supporters.

"[Ready for Hillary] said, 'Hey supporters, go to the Action Center and share with your friends that they should come and sign up for a free Ready for Hillary bumper sticker,'" Trevelyan said. "Let's say I clicked on your link and went and asked for a bumper sticker. My record would show in the VAN database that I was recruited by you and you recruited me. There's a whole level of observed activity."

"There is an element of our tool currently that uses that Facebook API, but it's not the only way or even the predominant way that we are mapping relationships," Trevelyan said.

But as the NRSC official put it, "It seems that the days of getting 1 million users to scrape all of America's social data are gone."

Washington Post: "O'Malley voices opposition to Keystone pipeline in posts on Facebook and Twitter"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By John Wagner

November 17, 2014, 12:42 p.m. EST

Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley (D) took to social media on Monday to urge the U.S. Senate to reject the Keystone XL oil pipeline, saying the country needs to look beyond "smallball choices facing us on energy."

O'Malley, who is weighing a 2016 White House bid, wrote on Facebook that the pipeline would produce "too much carbon dioxide and not nearly enough jobs" and should be rejected. He also expressed his opposition on Twitter.

The Republican-led House voted last week 252-to-161 to move forward with the project, while a planned Senate vote on Tuesday is expected to be very close. President Obama could also veto the measure.

O'Malley's posture plays well with environmental groups and positions him to the left of Hillary Rodham Clinton, whom O'Malley would like face for the Democratic presidential nomination and who has not taken a position on pipeline's construction.

Environmental groups have argued that the pipeline, which would stretch from Canada's oil sands to the Texas Gulf Coast, would adversely affect climate change.

"We need a jobs agenda that meets our climate challenge — we need solutions that simultaneously reduce carbon emissions and create jobs," O'Malley wrote on Facebook. "With a bold focus on renewable energy, we can solve the climate challenge, unleash America's innovative spirit, and re-invigorate American economic dynamism."

The Hill blog: Briefing Room: "O'Malley urges Senate to reject Keystone"

By Peter Sullivan

November 17, 2014, 10:31 a.m. EST

Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley (D), a possible 2016 presidential candidate, urged the Senate to reject the Keystone pipeline, tweeting his opposition on Monday.

Gov. Martin O'Malley @GovernorOMalley: We need a jobs agenda that meets our climate challenge. I hope the Senate rejects #KeystoneXL: it's too much CO2, & not nearly enough jobs. [11/17/14, 10:02 a.m. EST]

O'Malley's opposition could bolster him with green groups and position him to the left of potential 2016 rival Hillary Clinton.

Clinton has declined to take a position on the Keystone pipeline. In June, she cited her tenure as secretary of State, when she had oversight over the approval process for the pipeline, as the reason why she "can't really comment at great length."

Environmental groups are strongly opposed to the pipeline, citing its effect on climate change.

The Senate is set to vote on a bill approving the pipeline on Tuesday, and it is expected to be close. The House last week also passed a bill approving the project. A Keystone bill though would still have to get past a potential veto from President Obama.

Obama indicated at a press conference on Sunday that he intends to let the administration's approval process continue, rather than have his hand forced by the bill out of Congress.

"We're going to let the process play itself out," Obama said. "And the determination will be made in the first instance by the Secretary of State.

"But I won't hide my opinion about this, which is that one major determinant of whether we should approve a pipeline shipping Canadian oil to world markets, not to the United States, is does it contribute to the greenhouse gases that are causing climate change," he added.

Bloomberg: "Jim Webb Vs. 'Humanitarian Intervention' (and the Clock)"

By David Weigel

November 17, 2014, 1:11 p.m. EST

[Subtitle:] The dark-horse candidate takes on the administration and the Clinton record, as few watch.

If the advantage of being a front-runner is getting the rest of the world to adapt to your time, the curse of the dark horse is living by other peoples' stopped clocks. On Monday morning, after a weekend that saw a substantial press corps descend on Arkansas to cover the Clinton family's 2016 plans, former Virginia Senator Jim Webb found himself in a Hyatt basement ballroom, waiting to address a Washington meeting of Economists for Peace and Security. And waiting. And waiting.

Webb, who has not ruled out a 2016 presidential campaign, was scheduled to speak at 11:30. At that time, as a panel on trade and jobs dragged on, Webb was sitting in a corner, his London Fog topcoat bundled on the same table as a rapidly depleting coffee carafe. The panel dragged on as people recognized him, bent over and handed him their business cards.

Webb didn't get to take the stage until 11:55. "I was told to be here by 11:15," he said, pre-apologizing for truncating his speech. Over 15 minutes, he boiled down the argument he's been making in Washington and in Iowa, about an America that had "fallen into that Pandora's box of the killer of empires" by over-committing and occupying in the Middle East and Arab world.

Webb focused his criticism of the Obama administration's policies on the 2011 Libyan intervention, which happened to be closely identified with the leadership of then-Secretary of State Hillary Clinton. "It was not a civil war," he said. "The logic that we used to go in was different than any situation that I can remember in terms of the use of force. There were no treaties at risk, there were no Americans at risk, there were no terrorist attacks coming out of Libya ... in the name of what was called 'humanitarian intervention'–this was the new concept that was enunciated–we established a new concept that the president can unilaterally decide what humanitarian conditions are, anywhere in the world."

When Webb wrapped, his fellow former Republican, Michael Lind, asked him about the difficulty of explaining actual policy and strategy choices to the average voter. "It's very difficult for any administration to engage with Iran without being criticized," said Webb, by way of an example. "I'm not saying we should completely trust them, but I'm certain we should be having that discussion."

Why did Webb's old colleagues in the Senate fail to discuss these matters sensibly? "It's very difficult for many people who've been elected for reasons other than foreign policy reasons to go through this kind of a drill," he said. "You need clear talking-point kind of advice for them, so they don't go out and make a mistake in public ... they defer to the administration so they don't have to enter into very complex debates."

The only quasi-praise Webb had for the Obama administration came when he discussed its plans, punted after the election, to ask Congress to authorize continued action against the Islamic State. "It's a very smart move, finally, for the president to say he wants a vote of Congress to say what we're going to do with ISIS," he said. In a short conversation after the speech, Webb declined to dictate what Congress should ask for.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"The administration should come forward, to the Congress, with the rationale for continuing to do so," he said.

I asked Webb what he'd made of the confused presentations that the Defense Department made the previous week, and the confused response of Congress.

"Presidents need to lead!" said Webb. He punctuated that line with a loud, sharp laugh.

The Hill blog: Ballot Box: "Walker: I could run in 20 years and be Clinton's age"

By Peter Sullivan

November 17, 2014, 12:37 p.m. EST

Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker (R), a possible 2016 presidential candidate, raised the subject of Hillary Clinton's age when discussing when he might run for president.

"Whether it's two years, six years, 20 years from now, because at 47, I mean I think about Hillary Clinton, I could run 20 years from now for president and still be about the same age as the former secretary of State is right now," Walker said in an interview with the local Fox affiliate published Sunday night.

The comments about Clinton, who is 67, came as Walker was discussing the toll of being president.

"I say this only half-jokingly, that you have to be crazy to want to be president," Walker said. "Anyone who's seen the pictures of this president or any of the former presidents can see the before and after, no matter how fit, no matter how young they are, they age pretty rapidly when you look at their hair and everything else involved with it."

Walker said last week that Clinton was the "biggest loser" in the midterms and that she embodies an "old, tired top-down approach from the government."

A range of possible Republican presidential candidates could use the strategy of portraying themselves as a new alternative in contrast to Clinton.

Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal, for example, previously told The New York Times that Democrats have "old, tired ideas being produced by old, tired candidates."

Walker is coming off of a high-profile reelection victory over Democratic challenger Mary Burke. He has stoked presidential speculation by saying governors would make better presidents and telling NBC: "Not only do I care about this great state, I care about this country."

He was noncommittal in the local Fox interview, though, saying he thinks someone should run if "they feel called to."

"Right now, I still feel called to be governor of the state of Wisconsin," he said. "And I'm going to do the best job I can over the next four years."

Herb,

Thank you for your willingness to convey my interest in an appointment with the Obama administration. I am attaching a PDF version of my resume. Please forward it as you deem appropriate.

As David mentioned, my principal areas of interest would be the Federal Communications Commission, the Department of Interior - Bureau of Indian Affairs, or Treasury. My practice for the past ten years has been in the field of telecommunications and cable law so I am fairly wired for issues addressed by the FCC. My interest in the Department of Interior stems from my membership in the Blackfeet Tribe, growing up in Montana and maintenance of ties there. I have followed developments within the Office of the Special Trustee for American Indians (an office within the Department of Interior) with great interest and believe that the Special Trustee will continue to be faced with many challenges. Strong management and problem solving skills will be imperative if the problems are to be addressed and managed successfully. I believe that I possess such skills - - and I am a committed advocate for the tribal members whose interests are at issue. Finally, the knowledge and skills I developed during my years as a bankruptcy lawyer in Chicago and as Chief of the Finance Division for the Texas Attorney General lend themselves toward positions that are finance oriented. Most important, I believe that I possess leadership and management skills that would serve me well in any capacity.

I was very pleased with the outcome of the election and am excited about the direction of the incoming administration. It will be an inspiring time to be in Washington. Thank you again for your support and assistance. Please give my regards to Marion and tell her that I hope she is feeling better. I heard that she is recovering from a nasty run-in with an unforgiving surface. It is possible that David and I will be in your neck of the woods soon. If that is the case, we will make every effort to get together with you - - if Marion is feeling up to it.

Best regards,

Diane Barlow

Although I've switched career tracks from investment banking to strategic communications, and am loving my new job with the Brunswick Group in New York, one of my core interests has always been foreign policy. When we met, you suggested it was important for me to continue to engage in this pursuit, even as an extracurricular activity. As such, I thought a terrific way for me to contribute would be to get involved with Secretary Clinton's campaign, although I realize it's far from official that she's running. You mentioned that it was very important for me to be involved in a capacity of this sort, particular as I'm out of the DC day-to-day orbit given that I live in New York City. She's a candidate I believe in, representing a party whose values I enthusiastically subscribe to, and after following her time in public life it's clear to me she has a strong and terrificly informed world view.

I have, in the past, been appointed a "Next America Fellow" by the Center for Strategic and International Studies, and did an internship at the Council on Foreign Relations while I was in college. I'd love to have the opportunity to contribute my spare time to Secretary Clinton's campaign, whether it be in the form of helping to write position papers or helping with her foreign policy effort in any way. As you had suggested this sort of engagement as a useful endeavor when we met, I was hoping you would kindly be able to put me in touch with the appropriate people. I realize there may be no formal structure just yet, but I'll await your guidance as to how best to proceed.

- She is not meeting with any pollsters except for Benenson for a general check in meeting. Robby will proceed with Anzalone and GSG to do what needs to be done now.
- CDM confirmed Wendy Clark for Dec 6th meeting.
- John will follow-up on Ed Reilly.
- Everyone else (Campaign Manager, Media, and DNC leadership) is getting scheduled for meetings with HRC. Guy Cecil and Stephanie Schriock are confirmed. Others in the works.

Huma and I were reviewing her list of meetings for next week and it reminded me that we have not ratified a path forward on pollster(s) and media consultant(s) to get started on research. According to our timeline, drafting should begin next week.
Our action item from the call was to see if there are private sector people like Reilly who should be included. Cheryl did any of the people on Wendy's list fit into this category? John did you hear anything from Reilly? Do we have anyone we want to suggest in addition to or in lieu of the political folks? I want to keep this ball rolling so (ideally) we can keep on schedule.

Dear John,

While our opponent continues to rely on Republican billionaires to fuel his campaign, Congressman Mike Honda is focused on helping working families by expanding Social Security benefits, pursuing educational and income equality, and ensuring that America is a country focused on fairness and justice for each and every one of us.

That's why the California Democrats proudly endorsed Mike this weekend by saying he: "embodies the best of our Democratic Party" and "there is no doubt which candidate represents the values of the Democratic Party in this race."

With Mike Honda and the California Democrats working together, we can overcome the odds in this election and keep our advocate for justice and equality working for us in Congress.

Say you're with our campaign and make a contribution of $10, or whatever you can afford, before tonight's fundraising deadline. Join us in re-electing Mike Honda this year.

Yesterday was a great day for our campaign -- let's make sure today is another one.

Thank you,

Team Honda

New 527 Group Plans Attack on Obama Themes

by Josh Gerstein
Mon, 8 Sep 2008 at 12:56 AM

Print | Send | RSS | Share:

Republican political strategists in California are setting up a new political organization which hopes to run television commercials undermining the central themes of Senator Obama's presidential campaign while underscoring the strengths of his Republican opponent, Senator McCain of Arizona.

Leadership for America's Future was formally created on Thursday by a Sacramento, Calif.-based attorney, Thomas Hiltachk, according to a form registering the so-called 527 group with the Internal Revenue Service. The organization's slick Web site includes a 30-second video (click on "MEDIA") that shows images of war and misery around the world as an announcer gravely warns of the dangers of putting America in untested hands.

"It's not always the world we dream of. It can be belligerent and unpredictable, where an unsure response can have lasting consequences for generations," the announcer says over a montage that includes a plane crashing into the World Trade Center on September 11, 2001 and video of an American flag fluttering at the gutted site after the terrorist attacks. "No matter how eloquently spoken, hoping for change won't change the world. Only the strength of experience can do that."

Other portions of the Web site pay tribute to leaders such as presidents Reagan, Eisenhower, and Lincoln, as well as Mayor Giuliani, and "the American Soldier." The site was created by a Sacramento-based political consulting and advocacy firm which does work for Republican candidates, McNally Temple Associates, Inc.

One of the partners in that firm, Raymond McNally, told The New York Sun last night that no solid funding was lined up for the so-called 527 group. "We wanted to get this up and running, have something for people to look at and kick the tires," Mr. McNally said. He said he was inspired to start the group after traveling to Iraq and Israel earlier this year.

"I came back believing the election is about how we conduct ourselves internationally. There's a lot at stake because countries like Iran are sitting there and are not going to be happy until they incinerate Israel," Mr. McNally said. "It's not just domestic issues that will decide America's future."

Neither the video nor the site mentions Mr. Obama or Mr. McCain. A disclaimer on the Web says that the group will not "advocate the defeat or election of any candidate." However, the language in the online video seems clearly intended to cut at the Democratic presidential nominee, Mr. Obama, while boosting Mr. McCain.

Asked if the script should be understood that way, Mr. McNally said, "The bottom line, honestly, is people will interpret it as they will. This is the world the way we see it. We'll leave it to the viewers to walk away taking away what they will."

The new organization could be particularly attractive to Republican donors, since Mr. McCain's campaign is relying on public funding and will likely be outspent several times by Mr. Obama, who is not. A link to contribute on the site was not active last night, but in an indication that the group may seek to keep its donors secret the site indicates that gifts are "not….reportable under federal law."

Mr. McNally supported Mr. Giuliani in the Republican primary, but the consultant said the new group has no tie to the former mayor despite touting him as a personification of courageous leadership. "We were looking around for people who are bona fide leaders. By anyone's means, Giuliani conducted himself in a strong and frankly heroic fashion after 9/11. He steeled our nerves and reassured us," Mr. McNally said.

"It is the purpose of the association to educate the public on the traits of leadership," Mr. Hiltachk wrote in the IRS filing registering the group under Section 527 of the tax code, which is reserved for political organizations. The lawyer did not return phone or e-mail messages last evening seeking comment for this article.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

If the group's purpose is solely educational, it could have registered under section 501(c)(3) of the tax code as a charity. In that event, donations would have been tax deductible. However, the 527 registration signifies a political purpose, even if the group claims not to be expressly supporting any political candidate.
Mr. Hiltachk drew significant press attention last year for launching a drive for a referendum that would have reallocated California's electoral votes by Congressional district, effectively giving the Republican candidate about 20 of the state's 55 electoral votes instead of the zero the GOP candidate has gotten in recent elections under the winner-take-all system. The effort was attacked by Democrats as an underhanded attempt to fix the election for the Republicans and in particular , as a proxy for Mr. Giuliani's campaign.
Last September, Mr. Hiltachk resigned, citing his difficulty in getting full disclosure of funding for the electoral vote referendum. A New York hedge fund manager who supported Mr. Giuliani, Paul Singer, later disclosed that he had given $175,000 to collect signatures for the referendum. The drive was ultimately abandoned, at least for this year.

Bill O'Reilly on the House Benghazi Committee: 'Of Course It's Political'

A penchant for truth telling is spreading across the Republican Party.

Last night on FOX, leading conservative voice Bill O'Reilly echoed House Republican Leader Kevin McCarthy's comments on the House Benghazi Committee's partisan nature. While the American people have always known that the Benghazi Committee is a taxpayer-funded campaign against Hillary Clinton, the continued admissions by leading conservatives is a sign that even they are done pretending that this was ever about anything other than hurting Hillary Clinton.

These two women are in addition to the Beth Eagel who called on 11/28 saying JP was coming to town and and wanted an hour with Edgar. And then you called and they told you JP wasn't coming after all. When I told Mary all this, she said JP IS coming! I told her she would have to speak to you and gave her your number.

Subject:	[big campaign] MoveOn Supports Auditing the Fed

Statement by Justin Ruben, Executive Director of MoveOn.org Political Action:

> Americans from across the political spectrum agree: The Federal Reserve's "just trust us" attitude is unacceptable. That's why our 5 million members are looking to the Senate to pass Sen. Sanders' amendment to bring transparency to the Fed.
> Voters are looking for real accountability for those who wrecked our economy and then stuck American families with the bill. It is painfully obvious that our nation's most powerful financial institution not only got it wrong on the economy, but is now trying to protect itself--and Wall Street--from being held responsible for their actions.

And below is an email that went out to our members in key states asking them to call their senators.

Subject: Audit the Fed

Dear MoveOn member,

Did you know that an arm of the federal government has the power to hand out unlimited amounts of taxpayer money—without having to tell Congress or the president who they gave that money to, or why?[1]

It's called the Federal Reserve, and during the financial crisis, the Fed gave out more than $2 trillion in taxpayer-backed assistance to big Wall Street banks.[2] You read that right. $2 trillion! And the public still has no idea who they gave it to and on what terms.[3]

Today, Sen. Bernie Sanders is offering a critical amendment to the financial reform bill that would bring transparency and accountability to the Federal Reserve.

It will give us a public accounting of what went wrong and how our money was spent so we can learn from this disaster and make sure we don't repeat the same mistakes in the future.[4]

Wall Street and the Federal Reserve are fighting the amendment, but we have a real shot at winning—there is growing bipartisan support for it.[5] The vote could come as soon as this afternoon, so Sen. Feinstein needs to hear from her constituents today. Can you call Sen. Feinstein right now and tell her to support the Sanders amendment to audit the Fed?

The Senate may hold a critical vote as soon as today to audit the Federal Reserve. We need an audit to find out which Wall Street banks got $2 trillion of taxpayer-backed loans and on what terms. Can you call Sen. Feinstein right now and tell her to support Sen. Sanders' amendment to audit the Fed?

The Fed is supposed to monitor the economy for systemic risks and take action to prevent them. But instead, they let the housing bubble grow disastrously big and then tried to clean up the mess they made as quietly as possible—using our money. And yet, members of the Federal Reserve, like chair Ben Bernanke, think that they should be able to continue business as usual with no transparency.[6]

Newly released minutes from a Federal Reserve meeting in 2004 show that they had early evidence of the housing bubble, but chose to ignore it. And when asked whether they should justify that decision publicly, then-chair Alan Greenspan said:

> We run the risk, by laying out the pros and cons of a particular argument, of inducing people to join in on the debate, and in this regard it is possible to lose control of a process that only we fully understand.[7]

In the wake of the biggest financial crisis since the Great Depression, it's clear that Greenspan and the rest of the Federal Reserve got it wrong. But without a public accounting of what went wrong and who benefited from the cleanup, we won't be able to identify the mistakes that were made and learn how to avoid future financial catastrophes.

Can you call Sen. Feinstein right now and ask her to support Sen. Sanders' amendment to audit the Fed? Tell Sen. Feinstein that it's time to hold Wall Street accountable.

Dear John,

Due to scheduling conflicts, the October 14th discussion with Washington Center Equitable Growth's leadership team has been cancelled. It seems that the new 10:30 AM time was simply not compatible with everyone's understandably busy schedules.

We hope you will be able to join us for a future conversation, as we are eager to hear your thoughts on whether and how economic inequality impacts growth and stability, and what our nation ought to be doing about it. In the meantime, we hope you will visit our website , and keep in touch.

All the best,

Before You Begin
Before you can install and use the Georgetown VPN (Virtual Private Network), you will need the following:

- Intel-based Mac (Mac OS X 10.6 or higher)
- Internet connection
- Most recent Mac OS critical updates
- Latest virus definitions (check with your antivirus program for details)

Downloading and Installing Georgetown SafeConnect

1. Click https://sites.google.com/a/georgetown.edu/uis-docs/internet/anyconnect-macosx-i386-3.1.04059-k9.dmg . The installer file, anyconnect-macosx-i386-3.1.04059-k9.dmg, will be downloaded automatically to your computer.

2. Click on the down-pointing arrow next to the installer file listing at the bottom of your screen, and then select Show in Finder from the drop-down menu.

3. In the Finder window, double-click the AnyConnect.pkg icon.

Research wise… we are at a point with all of the candidates that I don't think we have to "divert" as much as "re-focus" if that makes sense. Now that the documents are in a better, more thorough place across the board we can shift some energy to Huck (especially with all the Romney stuff we have compiled in the last 7 days). I will layer Huck back into our research rotation (sounds kind of official) after we are locked down for the McCain poll on Sunday.

Hey – Maura texted me that we have a group of donors who will match every gift until tomorrow's TV deadline.

We still have about $26,000 to go, and your money will go twice as far when we need it the most. Can you chip in $250 now? A new poll shows us tied, TWO analysts said yesterday that our race is now a toss-up, and we NEED to hit this deadline to keep our ads on TV. Unless enough donors step up, we'll LOSE. Subject:	Student demonstration tomorrow

Good afternoon,

As you know, there are a number of issues facing higher education that are drawing quite a bit of national attention, from this excellent article in the Chronicle on Title IX and sexual assault to the divestment of endowment funds to issues of inequality. Each of these issues is bolstered by student activism across college campuses nationwide, and Knox is no exception. In many ways, Knox is a microcosm of these national issues, not only in regards to Title IX but also issues of inequality.

Tomorrow, a group of students, organized under the title Student Diversity Initiative, have planned a walkout on the lawn of Old Main at 2:00 pm. The group includes campus social justice activists, including Title IX activists and students who are participating in the Intergroup Dialogue project. They have announced their event on both The Knox Student and The Register-Mail--you can read both articles here --and are citing the need for the administration to address important campus issues and fulfill Knox's promises regarding support for our diverse students. They believe we are not prioritizing student needs and have raised concerns about Alumni Hall and the Art Building. It is our understanding that among their demands are a meeting with the trustees and concrete actions taken to better the campus climate.

Knox's historic commitment to access is directly reflected in today's student body, which mirrors the changing demographics of our nation. Meeting the needs of the 21st century student body will require changes in the ways Knox recruits and develops faculty and staff, our curriculum, and our student services. These changes, which our students are helping to bring to the forefront, are reflected in our strategic planning goals and initiatives and will require commitments on the part of the entire campus and the Board.

The President's Council takes these students' concerns very seriously and is reaching out to the Student Diversity Initiative both to welcome their input into these important campus issues and to continue the conversation that will begin tomorrow afternoon.

I will continue to update you as the situation develops, and I welcome your thoughts and input as we wrestle with these issues: issues that are not only facing Knox College, but many colleges and universities and the nation, as well.

Best,
Teresa

Subject:	Transition: playing a role with the FTC?

Dear John:

I am asking if you could put in a good word for me to become involved in the transition, especially with the Federal Trade Commission.

I understand that the focus until Tuesday is on the election and doing everything possible for that. I will be in the Ohio "boiler room" for the election, helping there. I have been doing quite a bit with the Obama TMT (tech) committee, including acting as an official Obama surrogate in a debate at Rayburn with Orson Swindle on privacy, tech, and security issues.

For the FTC transition, I believe Reed Hundt is an important person overseeing it. I have written to Reed asking to be involved, and he posted my "Tech Policy and the Financial Crisis" column to TPM last week. But he has not contacted me to be involved on the transition.

Relevant points about the FTC and my fit there, to help on the transition:

Privacy and computer security. That part is pretty obvious.
Consumer protection. I have done a ton of writing and action on consumer protection issues, including my conference at CAP on the topic and my testimony posted yesterday on the future of the Bureau of Consumer Protection.
Antitrust. I teach antitrust law at law school, and practiced in the area.
Bank reg -- my first specialty in law teaching was banking law, insolvency, and banking consumer protection. As the agencies potentially reshuffle, that becomes relevant to the FTC.
Green marketing. A big topic as part of climate change. I used to teach environmental law.

I also have a good personal connection with each of the four current FTC commissioners, and have worked constructively with a wide range of the senior staff. I could ask frank questions and get confidential advice as part of the transition process.

Thank you, in this busy (and hopeful) time, for any help you can provide. I of course stand ready to help in other ways if you think appropriate.

Best,

Peter

Carville and I had lunch with Drew Westen today. I showed him the ads and he liked them. Then, this afternoon, some reporter from the right-wing DC Examiner left Laurelie a message asking about anti-McCain ads Carville and I were looking at during lunch. I should have known better than to whip out the laptop in a restaurant, so I'm sorry about that. But there's no way for anyone to know whose ads they are, or whether they were even ads and not YouTube stuff. Needless to say I'm not returning the reporter's call. I just thought you should know.

Subject:	June 22nd - Ed Reformer Conversation

John -

When we were still in the quiet phase, Laurene Powell Jobs had invited HRC to come meet with some of the ed reformers to hear their views. Lona, Jake and I had approved of the idea and tried to calendar it, but it has become clear that it won't happen with HRC's calendar.

The folks involved are both $$ and substance folks. Stacey Rubin from Laurene's office suggested that in lieu of HRC that you and I do a roundtable meeting with the group when you are out in the area. I know the Finance Team is putting a schedule together for you and I've raised this meeting to their attention, but wanted to get it on your radar screen too.

The folks that Laurene would invite include:
Carrie Walton Penner
Reed Hastings
Stacey Childress
Brook Buyers
John and Ann Doerr

Please let me know if you agree that this would be a good meeting for the two of us to do together and then the Finance folks can work with me to get it scheduled.

Thanks!

-Ann

Subject: [big campaign] Job Opp: National AmeriCorps Energy Service Corps Program Director

U.S. PIRG

U.S. PIRG National AmeriCorps Energy Service Corps Program Director

The U.S. Public Interest Research Group is seeking a Program Director to manage our AmeriCorps Energy Service Corps.

The U.S. Public Interest Research Group: The U.S. Public Interest Research Group is a network of independent state-based organizations working for social change throughout the United States. Since 1972, the PIRG network has worked for social justices, a fair and sustainable economy, a healthy environment, clean energy, greater personal freedom and a more democratic society. Our goal is to sustain a strong public interest movement by recruiting and training the next generation of organizers and leaders on college campuses. The U.S. PIRG runs the largest and oldest campus-based civic engagement program in the country. Our professional staff teaches college students to engage their communities around pressing environmental and consumer issues. Last year we hired 2,300 interns who then mobilized 11,000 volunteers nationally to educate 350,000 people in their campus communities.

AmeriCorps Energy Service Corps Program
Energy Service Corps is a joint project of the U.S. Public Interest Research Group (USPIRG) Education Fund and AmeriCorps that works to improve energy efficiency in Colorado, New Jersey, Wisconsin and California. The project will run from 2010 to 2014, and may renew beyond the current commitment. We are additionally looking to replicate this model in other states. The nine-month program will employ 19 full-time college graduates and 235 part-time college interns who are smart, service oriented and driven to make a difference. Full-time AmeriCorps volunteers are overseen by experienced in-state lead organizers and receive comprehensive hands-on training on social change strategies and tactics including coalition building, grassroots organizing, media work, research and staff management. AmeriCorps volunteers are given significant responsibility, a demanding workload and are expected to get results.

The AmeriCorps Energy Service Corps Program will make significant immediate impacts on energy efficiency through community service projects organized at 36 college campuses as well as instilling long-term attitude shifts through community education. AmeriCorps volunteers will conduct 5,500 educational home energy assessment surveys for college students and community members to highlight their home energy use and opportunities to decrease this use through behavioral changes and participation in local weatherization programs and educate more than 30,000 K-12 and college students in classrooms about the importance of environmental stewardship.

Job Description
The Energy Service Corps Program Director will oversee the execution of the AmeriCorps Energy Service Corps in Colorado, New Jersey, Wisconsin and California. The program director will develop and manage AmeriCorps volunteers and represent the program externally to the media, members of the service community, donors and to the Corporation for National and Community Service. The program director reports to the Student PIRGs' National Political Director, and oversees four state lead organizers, who in turn oversee 254 AmeriCorps members.

Responsibilities:
Develop the skills and Leadership Potential of AmeriCorps Volunteers

- Directly oversee four lead organizers, who, in turn provide training and oversight for 19 full-time AmeriCorps volunteers and 235 part-time AmeriCorps volunteers.
- Participate in recruitment of AmeriCorps Volunteers, including message development, interviewing, and hiring decisions.
- Manage AmeriCorps Program classroom trainings (August and January). Work with U.S. PIRG staff to plan content, secure trainers and manage logistics.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- Upgrade trainings. Review Program Curriculum and methodology to analyze the quality of classroom training, and the improvement of individual and class skills.
- Meet with AmeriCorps volunteers to facilitate development of career goals post-program. Together, create longer-term career plans within the PIRG network.

Publicly Represent the Program

- Promote the AmeriCorps Energy Service Corps Program to an external audience through meetings and conferences.
- Act as the public spokesperson for the program through media events, news releases and editorial board meetings.

Expand the Program

- Develop and implement a grants fundraising strategy to expand the program into five additional states in 2011 and eight more states by 2013.

Improve the Quality of Education and Service Work

Develop new strategies for public education on energy efficiency.

Work with state weatherization programs to fit local needs with AmeriCorps Energy Service Corps outreach.

Do regular in-depth analysis of our public education and service models, including implementing detailed, numbers-based tracking system to hit overall programmatic goals, and get real-time feedback on efficacy of program. Propose model enhancements where applicable.

Qualifications

We are looking for candidates who have 2+ years of experience managing staff, and 3-8 years post-baccalaureate work experience. Applicants must have a proven ability to develop entry-level staff and be able to share their excellent staff management skills with the staff they oversee. We are looking for candidates who are entrepreneurial, and who strategically act on opportunities as they arise. Candidates should be goal-oriented and able to drive a large team to surpassing expectations. Ability to effectively and persuasively communicate to a large variety of high-profile audiences is a must. Applicants should be detail oriented, and able to track numbers, systems and reporting accurately. Previous fundraising experience a plus, but not required.

Salary and Benefits

Salary for this position is commensurate with a candidate's relevant professional experience and/or advanced degrees. A competitive benefits package includes health care coverage, educational loan assistance, a retirement plan, and paid vacation and sick days. Opportunities for advancement, travel, and additional training are available.

Location

Washington, D.C., Chicago, IL, or Boston, MA

Application

Send a cover letter and resume to Jeanne Bassett, careers@publicinterestnetwork.org .

Fox News' Fox and Friends: Doocy, Henry, and Earhardt shared the various “crumby” jobs they took on when they were younger; Doocy, Henry, and Earhardt interviewed Donald Trump via phone; Trump said his “crumby” job was cleaning storage rooms for his father; Trump said his father taught him that you have to love what you do, and that work is wonderful thing; Trump said he has increased security after El Chapo, or his associates, threatened him on twitter, but that he would not be intimidated from talking about the various problems that plague the country, including border security, drugs, and trade deals; Ed Henry played a clip of a Latino woman from one of Fox News’s live focus groups, criticizing Trump for his comments about Mexican immigrants; Trump said he disagreed with Frank Luntz, the pollster, and said he was going to win the Latino vote because he will bring jobs back into the country; Trump said he has hundreds, maybe thousands, of Hispanics working for him, and they love him; Trump said the media were twisting his words around about immigration; Trump said he is proud he has exposed the illegal immigration problem, and that no one was talking about immigration before he entered the race; Trump said he is the last person Hillary Clinton wants running against her; Trump said when he was a businessman he contributed to everybody, and that’s part of the problem with the political system; Trump said candidates will be at the mercy of their donors; Trump said Jeb Bush will never produce a job in his life; Trump said every single person who has contributed to Jeb Bush expects something from him in return, even though many of those things might not be good for the country; Trump said Hillary Clinton was a nice person, but had no energy and would never bring the country back; Trump said Perry was must nastier towards him than he needed to be, and failed at the border; Trump said David Letterman was very funny; Trump said he hopes if George Lopez takes over the apprentice that he does well.

CNN's New Day: Obama calls for sweeping criminal justice reform, says current laws disproportionately affects African Americans and Latinos. Van Jones argues that Obama is behind the curve and Republicans have endorsed these ideas. There are 5 bipartisan bills in the Senate towards criminal justice reform. Said that Newt Gingrich agreed with him on prison reform. Obama's remarks will make it a bigger issue. Says Obama's remarks are common sense. Obama endorses banning the box on job applications so former prisoners can do well on job interviews. Van Jones endorses these ideas, as well as allowing felons to vote. Emphasizes the scope of the US prison industry. Points to Republicans signing onto this bill in the House. Could be a bipartisan effort before Obama leaves office.

MSNBC's Morning Joe: Phone interview with Donald Trump. On the Iran deal, Trump said it’s ridiculous and we sent a signal to everyone that we don’t care about our prisoners. He said we look desperate and it’s a disgrace and we should have doubled up sanctions and made a better deal. Trump said he has seen the deal broken down in every newspaper and if we had the right leadership, this deal would be very different. Repeated that HRC was the worst Sec. of State in our history and said the person she doesn’t want to run against is him. He said he would beat Hillary and win the Hispanic vote because he will create jobs. Trump said his disclosure forms will be out today or tomorrow. On meeting with Ted Cruz, he said he respects him and others who have agreed with him on illegal immigration. Trump said if he was president, he would hate to inherit the Iran deal. On his campaign, he said he’s enjoying the tremendous crowds and has been very truthful. He said he has learned how dishonest the political media is, he’s used to dealing with the financial media. Trump discussed his Mexican immigrant comments with Mika and said he said “the government of Mexico is sending” and said illegal immigrants are causing tremendous problems with crime. Trump said he had five sources that the Mexican government sends their prisoners to the United States, border control guards. Trump said people are coming to his rallies because they want competent leadership. He said Jeb Bush doesn’t have the energy, he’s not going to produce, and he raised a lot of money for nothing.

I created this teaser as a way to open conversations and excite Spielberg's people. It worked. I just left my meeting at DreamWorks, and they are very, very interested.

On another note, I have somebody important that is willing to fly out and meet with Mr. Podesta. A member of my Committee. I am awaiting a time in January that might work for Mr. Podesta. My goal is for Spielberg to be there, too. And if not him, somebody of his stature. Please show Mr. Podesta this private teaser. Let him know that I am spending all afternoon interviewing a scientist that worked on a spacecraft at Area 51 tomorrow.

"That's complete nonsense," Evan Wolfson of Freedom to Marry told Metro Weekly in 2011. "There was no conversation about something 'worse' until eight years later. There was no talk of a constitutional amendment, and no one even thought it was possible -- and, of course, it turned out it wasn't really possible to happen. ... That was never an argument made in the '90s."

• Hilary Rosen @hilaryr: @BernieSanders is right. Note to my friends Bill and #Hillary: Pls stop saying DOMA was to prevent something worse. It wasnt, I was there.

• @JoeSudbay: @DavidMixner @MSignorile 96 Clinton campaign's radio ads touting his signature on DOMA undermines this revision too http://www.nytimes.com/1996/10/15/us/ad-touts-clinton-s-opposing-gay-marriage.html

• @MSignorile: How does story from '96 fit Hillary claim DOMA was for our own good? -- > Ad Touts Clinton's Opposing Gay Marriage http://nyti.ms/1LPfkVt

• @DavidMixner: @MSignorile @sudbay Hillary's version of DADT and DOMA is so wrong. The only 'defensive posture' was for their personal politics not LGBT

• @MSignorile: Even Elizabeth Birch, former head of @HRC & a Hillary supporter, slammed Bill for DOMA, refuting Hillary's story. http://www.huffingtonpost.com/elizabeth-birch/president-clinton-says-do_b_2840112.html election. It passed both houses of Congress with overwhelming veto-proof majorities and when he signed it, I think it was because he felt he had no other options. Had he vetoed it, his veto would surely have been overridden and it would've become a central issue in the campaign. I know he wasn't happy about it. And he expressed that at the time. Today I'm proud of the fact that he asked the Supreme Court overturn legislation that he himself signed.

> Luckily we are more enlightened country now – and I'm hopeful that if I'm elected I can help lead us to an even greater embrace of true equality. I've laid out a very specific plan in this regard. Including passage of the equality act, continued pressure on our allies to view LGBT rights in a human rights context, and perhaps most importantly, making sure that all Americans including young people experience the equality the the Supreme Court envisioned in this regard.

“Norton Vows to Fight GOP Attempts to Block D.C. Laws”
--Roll Call, June 23

Dear John,

Thanks for joining us in fighting back against discrimination in D.C. Just as we suspected, Republicans in Congress introduced an amendment last week that would block D.C. from outlawing discrimination in the workplace. They think your boss should be able to fire you for using in vitro fertilization (IVF), using birth control, or having an abortion.

Thanks to you, we had a strong response ready. We mobilized thousands of D.C. residents and businesses that support our equality. Yesterday, we took that message to Congress in a press conference with Congresswoman Eleanor Holmes Norton. She told Congress to bring it on because D.C. stands united against discrimination.

We’re not going to stop, we’re going to keep fighting back, we’re going to keep organizing people that live and work in D.C. in support of these laws! Forward this email to a friend and ask them to sign our petition to Congress--no more discrimination in D.C.!

Sincerely,

Mitchell Stille

John,

With all due respect, and reluctantly to do this in front of HRC except for wanting to defend myself against being labeled as a cancer - but the conclusion that it is ME that has to stop "this" is really unfair. This has happened too much over the last six weeks to chalk it up to the press guessing correctly. They don't even get facts correctly. Cnn guessed Andrea Mitchell? Come on. That flies in the face of common sense.

Not to mention I'm following up on a topic last night where you yourself felt it enough of a problem to have warned the Secretary her people yap. I didn't whip you up. You took that into consideration when discussing a 24 hour delay. That never should have been a factor.

Lastly, if you think I'm the only one on this chain bothered by this - and not because I whipped them up - then I have a bridge to nowhere to sell you. When I had dinner with Jim Margolis weeks ago, he broached with me that he is shocked by what he's reading, is sure it's close, and fears HRC is looking at him and the rest of them funny. I think that's a problem when her team is looking funny at each other.

And for anyone to be justifiably upset to not be read in earlier on our current challenge, and then wonder why it's difficult to speak freely about something so sensitive in large in expanded settings, is a lack of self-awareness. This topic's a unique doozy, but it's not the last delicate one. That someone yapped about the lamest 10% of our conversations is better than the most sensitive 10% is besides the point. But either way we're going to have to agree to disagree on whether 10% is just the price of doing business.

Again, with all due respect, your reaction to me is unfair in that's it's stronger than any admonition anyone else has received who is actually doing something wrong.

I agree though that being at each others' throats will get us nowhere, and if you want me to keep it to myself, ok, done. But it's the underlying problem that's going to be the problem, not me stating the obvious.

With that, I'm going to sit queitly in the corner until Cheryl calls me to admonish me for sending this reply and digging myself into an even deeper hole with you than I already was.

For those keeping score, that will be two more admonishment than the culprit(s) have received.

Philippe,
You got to stop this. The press is trading in rumors that can easily originate in their own newsrooms. If someone wanted to leak juicy tidbits, they have a lot more to work with than our press planning. If we are going to be at each others throats before we start, we are going nowhere.

Subject:	DRAFT: Remarks at church town-hall in Cleveland
Attachments:	2016-03-11 Cleveland church town hall - 11am.docx

HRC is supposed to talk for 15 minutes from a podium at the top of a town hall meeting tomorrow at Olivet Institutional Baptist Church in Cleveland. The attached draft is similar to what we've been doing recently -- breaking down barriers, jobs, schools, systemic racism, a little scripture. I think some of the Mothers of the Movement are going to be there, so that should give this some extra lift.

There's not much contrast here, largely because it's at church, but if folks think there should be more, please let me know. And please send along any other comments or concerns.
Thanks
Dan

Rep. King Justifies Suicide Attack On IRS: Sympathizes With Hatred Of IRS, Hopes For Its Destruction

http://thinkprogress.org/2010/02/22/king-justifies-irs-terrorism/

On Thursday, a man flew a plane into a Texas federal building in an apparent domestic terrorist attack. The suicide bomber, identified as Joseph Andrew Stack, was allegedly a right wing extremist who wrote on a website that violence "is the only answer" and expressed anger at the IRS, the federal government, and health care reform. Some on the fringe right have declared Stack a hero .

ThinkProgress caught up with Rep. Steve King (R-IA) at CPAC to talk about the attack in Texas. Asked if the right-wing anti-tax rhetoric might have motivated the attack, King implicitly agreed, noting that he had been a leading opponent of the IRS for some time. He noted that although the attack was "sad," "by the same token," it was justified because once the the right succeeds at abolishing the IRS, "it's going to be a happy day for America." He sidestepped the question of the legitimacy of the terrorists' grievances, but sympathized by saying that "I've had a sense of 'why is the IRS in my kitchen.' Why do they have their thumb in the middle of my back":

> TP: Do you think this attack, this terrorist attack, was motivated at all by a lot of the anti-tax rhetoric that's popular in America right now?
> KING: I think if we'd abolished the IRS back when I first advocated it, he wouldn't have a target for his airplane. And I'm still for abolishing the IRS, I've been for it for thirty years and I'm for a national sales tax. [...] It's sad the incident in Texas happened, but by the same token, it's an agency that is unnecessary and when the day comes when that is over and we abolish the IRS, it's going to be a happy day for America.
> TP: So some of his grievances were legitimate?
>
> KING: I don't know if his grievances were legitimate, I've read part of the material. I can tell you I've been audited by the IRS and I've had the sense of 'why is the IRS in my kitchen.' Why do they have their thumb in the middle of my back. … It is intrusive and we can do a better job without them entirely.

Watch it:

Last week, Sen. Scott Brown (R-MA), despite his long history of inflamed rhetoric about terrorism and domestic security, essentially disregarded the attack. As ThinkProgress' Max Bergmann observed , "It is naive for Brown to think the dangers of right wing terrorism aren't real. Last year, the Department of Homeland Security released a report warning of the dangers of rising right wing extremism, as was evidenced by the shooting at the Holocaust museum in D.C. and by a Pittsburgh killer who was partially inspired by Glenn Beck."

Indeed, it's not only hate radio personalities encouraging violence against the government. Far right members of Congress, like Rep. Michele Bachmann (R-MN), have called for people to get "armed and dangerous " against the administration's clean energy policies. King's quasi-embrace of the Texas terrorist's grievances is similarly dangerous.

Dear Neighbor,

Join the Conspiracy

Denver has a great new bicycle-sharing program—you may have heard of it, or seen those red bikes with evil capitalist advertising on them. Tea Party candidate Dan Maes says it's a giant conspiracy to turn Denver into a "United Nations community."

So we thought, why not? Every United Nations community has to have a uniform. So we made these handsome t-shirts to kick off our U.N. Bicycle Ambassador program.

Contribute $25 and get one today !

"This is all very well disguised, but it will be exposed," Maes said. So we're blowing the lid right off this conspiracy. Get your sublime azure blue, 100% cotton U.N Bicycle Ambassador t-shirt today.

Dan Maes says this plot is "bigger than it looks like on the surface." And you will be too, in a fantastically slimming U.N. Bicycle Ambassador t-shirt!

This limited edition t-shirt is available in men's and women's sizes. Get yours now ! As soon as Glenn Beck finds out, the gig is up!

You will join the U.N. Bicycle Ambassadors .

Subject: Retirement Savings Plan

John,

Teresa Ghilarducci passed along your interest in our Retirement Savings Plan. We've spent considerable time researching and thinking about this issue and believe we have some ideas that offer an immediate, sustainable, low cost and politically viable solution to help tackle a looming crisis. If we don't act, our country will see poverty rates and downward mobility of middle class elderly people not seen since the great depression. It is projected that 16 million retirees will be living in or near poverty by 2022 and 25 million by 2050. If we do nothing, 39 percent of all older workers will be poor or near poor at age 65, so the need is real and imminent. The strain this newly poor population will place on our social safety net will devastate federal, state and local budgets for decades. Our goal was to devise a politically feasible solution that addresses the problem now without worsening the national deficit.

We do not believe the problem can be solved by making Social Security better funded and/or adding a higher minimum benefits for several reasons.

First, expanding Social Security would help to take care of the very poorest members of society – but expanding Social Security doesn't help middle class people very much. Social Security was designed as a safety net for those facing poverty in old age. It was never meant to be a vehicle to guarantee a middle class retirement. Social Security is an entitlement, where savings are redistributed based on income. This is a worthy goal in and of itself, but not the focus of our plan. In contrast to Social Security, with a Guaranteed Retirement Account, you get back what you put in, plus investment earnings. These accounts build on the money people put into their own accounts, giving back even more. In other words, raising SS payments above the poverty line isn't the same as guaranteeing widespread retirement security.

Second, unlike Social Security, this is actual cash in each person's individually owned retirement savings account. Because it is real capital that can be invested well (like a DB plan), the higher returns (6-8% per year) finance a lot of the future needs without requiring larger contributions or adding to the deficit in the future. You don't get investment returns filling a lot of the funding gap with Social Security since it is unfunded.

Third, increasing Social Security would mean adding to FICA taxes. This plan is easier on workers because half comes from employers (offsetting other costs), so only 1.5% from workers. And for the 50% of Americans below median income, that "cost" is offset by a federal tax credit. This tax credit is deficit neutral because we are doing away with the 401k deductions, which benefit primarily the affluent.

Finally, Social Security is such a fraught issue with people so dug in, we worried that opening it up for fundamental change was not implementable from a pragmatic standpoint. So we decided to build on Social Security as is. With our plan, the Guaranteed Retirement Accounts are individually owned and controlled and will not require an additional or larger entitlements which would have obvious appeal to the other side of the aisle.

We looked beyond Social Security and propose individually funded add-on accounts. In this way, all Americans can save more and invest more effectively over a longer period of time to support their retirement. All Americans need well-managed, diversified retirement accounts they can contribute to for their entire career.

We are happy to talk these through with you at any point, but here are the basic principles:

Universal Coverage: Every American who works without a pension plan would automatically have their own Guaranteed Retirement Account (supplemental to Social Security and any individual retirement savings). Individuals accumulate funds in their own accounts and retain full control. Upon retirement, they receive guaranteed payments for their lifetime.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Cost Neutral for Workers AND Taxpayers: Savings are mandatory but cost neutral for almost all Americans who earn below median income. We've calculated that workers and their employers need to contribute an annual 3% to close the retirement savings gap (1.5% each). And a tax credit to offset this contribution for families at or below the median income will be paid for by removing existing deductions that overwhelmingly favor the wealthy, making the plan deficit neutral.

Redistributes Government Support to Those Who Need It Most: The refundable tax credit is a positive change from the current subsidies that favor high earners. In 2014, federal and state governments spent $120 billion to subsidize workers' pensions. But these tax benefits are regressive and do little to benefit workers most at risk. In 2014, the most affluent Americans received over 79% of the benefit from retirement tax deductions. The Retirement Savings Plan remedies that by redeploying existing government support from wealthy retirees to those who need it most.

Individually Owned, Effectively Invested: Unlike Social Security, workers maintain ownership over their account through a transparent investment process. Their assets will be pooled and invested in long-term, low-fee strategies that generate higher returns (6-8% per year) than current 401(k) plans, building on the amount invested and giving back even more.

Guaranteed Lifetime Income: Though privately managed, funds will have a government guaranteed return of 2%. Upon retiring, savings will be returned through annuitized payments. This guarantees a continuous standard of living for as long as retirees live.

Federal Plan; Nationally Mandated: A federal program will provide coordinated collection, record-keeping and payments, as well as better negotiated fees for asset management. And by integrating the payment system seamlessly into Social Security's existing infrastructure, we avoid the need for additional bureaucracy and create efficiencies and savings over time. In addition, only through a Federal plan can we create the tax credit that mitigates the cost for families below median income by redeploying 401k deductions.

Incents Desiring Americans to Work Longer: Workers decide when they retire and begin collecting their savings. This will help Americans to work longer if they wish, which has proven to have significant economic (as well as mental and physical) benefits.

Bi-Partisan Appeal: The GRA model avoids larger entitlement conversations by keeping accounts under individual's control and redistributing savings based on the amount invested, not based on income. And it does so without impacting the budget or raising taxes.
From the many conversations we've had with members of Congress from both sides of the aisle, our sense is that it's politically viable. This plan intentionally does not touch or attempt to alter Social Security, address underemployment, mitigate the wealth disparity, or raise stagnant middle class incomes. However, it provides an actionable solution to an impending crisis. And this solution will have resounding impact on more than one half of all working Americans. It will relieve our welfare programs from undue strain and free up revenue for other pressing needs.

This will all be fully fleshed out in a white paper we are releasing in a few weeks. We are happy to make time available to discuss these ideas at your convenience.

Everyday families in America know they can count on Hillary Clinton to fight for them, and this ad is about taking that message directly to the people of Iowa/New Hampshire.

How long will the ad air for?

We're not going to comment on the length of the buy or the strategy of future ad buys.

This ad clearly seems to be targeting women – is that true?

This ad is about Hillary Clinton's values and why she dedicated her life to fighting for families. And when Hillary talks about her mother on the campaign trail, the men in the crowds are nodding their heads right along with the women. It's about fighting for families – and getting back up again after you've been knocked down.

How much are you spending?

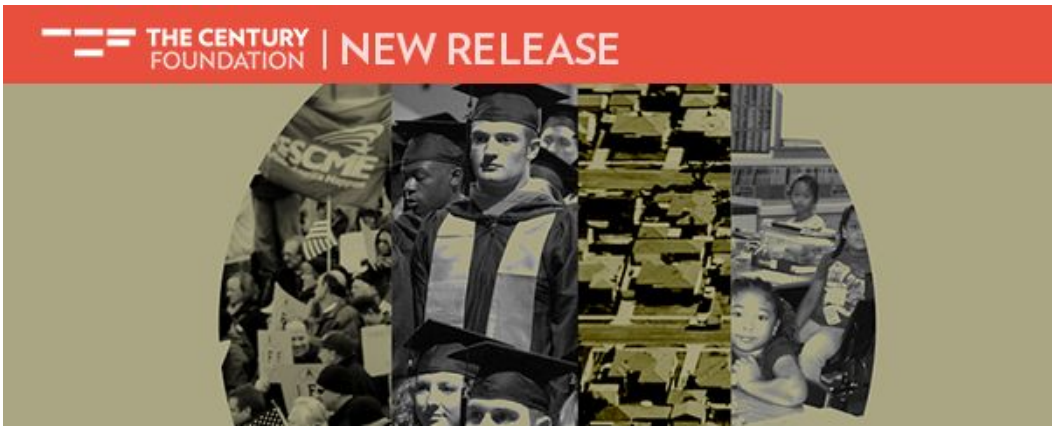

It's a six-figure buy and covers the largest media markets in both states.

A New Era of Civil Rights: Proposals to Address the Economic Inequalities in Robert Putnam's Our Kids

Social mobility in America seems "poised to plunge in the years ahead," writes Harvard professor Robert D. Putnam in his acclaimed book on America's growing economic divide, Our Kids: The American Dream in Crisis .

In response to Putnam's book, TCF senior fellow Richard D. Kahlenberg has issued a call to action with his latest report, A New Era of Civil Rights , urging policymakers to address the forces fueling class inequality. In the piece, Kahlenberg outlines concrete policy solutions that can help to close the widening opportunity gap, including:

1. a Fair Housing Act for working-class people,
2. a Brown v. Board of Education policy for low-income pupils,
3. an affirmative action program in higher education for economically disadvantaged students, and
4. an amendment to the Civil Rights Act to prohibit discrimination against workers engaged in labor organizing.

Hey there -- I'm writing a story about driver's licenses for undocumented immigrants and wanted to check on Clinton's current stance. Does she currently believe undocumented immigrants should be able to get driver's licenses? I know in 2007 she initially indicated some level of support in New York, then came out against them.

Thanks,

Elise

John --

According to our records, you haven't RSVP'ed yet for the upcoming planning session in Washington.

Don't worry -- it's not too late. Make sure you help decide how OFA takes action in your community.

RSVP for your local planning session today:

http://my.barackobama.com/Action-Planning-Session

Thanks,

Organizing for Action

From: Sara El-Amine, BarackObama.com
Subject: RSVP requested: Action Planning Session in Washington

Friend --

As we get Organizing for Action off the ground, we have a lot of decisions to make about how we structure ourselves and how we take action.

Those are decisions that supporters like you, who've been so important in building this movement, should make. On Saturday, March 23rd, volunteers in Washington are hosting an Action Planning Session -- and you should be there.

This is your chance to get in on the ground floor of planning what OFA will do over the next few months.

Here are the details -- can you make it?

What: Action Planning Session in Washington

Where: 12th & O St NW
Washington, DC 20005

When: Saturday, March 23rd
12:00 pm

RSVP NOW

You'll be able to sit down with neighbors and help lay the foundation for your prospective OFA activities -- organizers will provide materials to guide the conversation, but they'll be turning over the brainstorming, creative thinking, and ambitious planning to you.

Whether you've been a part of the local grassroots movement in Washington for years or you're just getting involved now, you have something to contribute to the conversation. Don't miss out on this opportunity to have a say in what happens next.

RSVP now for the Action Planning Session on Saturday, March 23rd:

http://my.barackobama.com/Action-Planning-Session

Thanks,

Sara

Well, that doesn't sound annual, then.

I am afraid my parents are visiting that weekend and we are going to the eastern shore.

I hadn't thought you had fallen off disclosure train. Think only thing you missed was call Cheryl set up yesterday with extended Clinton world so all were mirandized on what was in PFD and timing of release. At any rate i tried to get you on a number of calls on a few different issues yesterday and earlier in the week but you were raising money, traveling or grading. I hear you are in NYC for three days next week? That's exciting.

Btw - I am in Idaho this weekend with super spotty service, so kind of hard to reach. Hope you guys have a good weekend. Cold here but beautiful.

Hi John,
Well, I know you had a good weekend! We've been working with the campaign folks to reschedule my interview with Secretary Clinton. I wanted to write you about some of the metrics that we are getting and let you know through placement on Facebook we can guarantee 1.5 million views in addition to Yahoo engagement which has been close to 1 million for my political interviews. I'd also like to do a separate piece of business through social media along the lines of "10 things you don't know about Hillary Clinton" that would showcase her personality and has a lot of viral potential. I know there is a lot of demands on her time, but we have been waiting patiently to schedule something and I'm sure we've been driving the campaign staff crazy, but the reach and engagement will be significant and I'm very much looking forward to having the opportunity to talk to her. I have been assured the campaign wants this as well. Can you help make this happen? I'd really appreciate your help.
Thanks, John. Look forward to hearing from you.
Best,
Katie

Hm...,pretty sure we talked on the call with HRC today specifically about using "right to rise" formulation to hit Jeb on immigration. Thought you and I discussed separately, too. Maybe not. At any rate, it is the only way we make any news for the rest of the week. If folks have another formulation to hit Jeb on immigration that break through, that is great. Otherwise I think we stick with right to rise.

Clean Water Action

Dear Mary,

We're sick of inaction on climate change, how about you? Join us and thousands of fellow Americans for the largest climate rally in history! It's time to move #ForwardOnClimate.

On February 17, Clean Water Action is joining Sierra Club, 350.org and dozens of other groups in hosting the #ForwardOnClimate rally on the National Mall. Tens of thousands of people from across the country will gather to demand long overdue action to address the climate crisis we are all facing.

While President Obama made strides on climate in his first term, like new mileage standards and reductions in greenhouse gas emissions from power plants, we have a long way to go. The President promised to take action on climate in his inaugural address. On Presidents' Day weekend we will make sure he knows we want him to follow through. This is set to be the biggest climate rally in US history and the only way we can be truly successful is if every person who cares comes out and shows their support. Will you RSVP today for the Forward on Climate Rally?

Climate Change is a real and present threat; last year we saw record breaking heat waves, severe droughts and super storms like hurricane Sandy. We know what we need to do, yet Congressional leaders prefer to play politics and block any meaningful action that would move us forward. It's time to stand up and demand change!

The first step is clear; make sure the Keystone XL pipeline is stopped. Permanently. On February 17 we will call on the President to do just that and to lead the way in the climate fight. We must be loud; the time for action is now.

Sign up to join Clean Water Action at the biggest climate rally in history, Forward on Climate, February 17 on the national mall!

Subject:	Don't Ask, Don't Tell

John --

Hours ago, the Senate voted to end "Don't Ask, Don't Tell."

When that bill reaches my desk, I will sign it, and this discriminatory law will be repealed.

Gay and lesbian service members -- brave Americans who enable our freedoms -- will no longer have to hide who they are.

The fight for civil rights, a struggle that continues, will no longer include this one.

This victory belongs to you. Without your commitment, the promise I made as a candidate would have remained just that.

Instead, you helped prove again that no one should underestimate this movement. Every phone call to a senator on the fence, every letter to the editor in a local paper, and every message in a congressional inbox makes it clear to those who would stand in the way of justice: We will not quit.

This victory also belongs to Senator Harry Reid, Speaker Nancy Pelosi, and our many allies in Congress who refused to let politics get in the way of what was right.

Like you, they never gave up, and I want them to know how grateful we are for that commitment.

Will you join me in thanking them by adding your name to Organizing for America's letter?

I will make sure these messages are delivered -- you can also add a comment about what the repeal of "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" means to you.

As Commander in Chief, I fought to repeal "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" because it weakens our national security and military readiness. It violates the fundamental American principles of equality and fairness.

But this victory is also personal.

I will never know what it feels like to be discriminated against because of my sexual orientation.

But I know my story would not be possible without the sacrifice and struggle of those who came before me -- many I will never meet, and can never thank.

I know this repeal is a crucial step for civil rights, and that it strengthens our military and national security. I know it is the right thing to do.

But the rightness of our cause does not guarantee success, and today, celebration of this historic step forward is tempered by the defeat of another -- the DREAM Act. I am incredibly disappointed that a minority of senators refused to move forward on this important, commonsense reform that most Americans understand is the right thing for our country. On this issue, our work must continue.

Today, I'm proud that we took these fights on.

Please join me in thanking those in Congress who helped make "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" repeal possible:

http://my.barackobama.com/Repealed

Thank you,

Barack

The Foundation for a Secure and Prosperous America is starting to place in IA, NV, and SC attacking Rand Paul around his presidential bid launch. We are collecting totals and will send when we have a better picture of it.

Articles say that "The group will begin airing ads on broadcast TV, cable and the Web in several early primary states accusing Paul of being weak on Iran and tying him to the Barack Obama administration's Iran policy, which polls show is deeply unpopular among Republican voters."

CLINTON FOUNDATION

John –

When President Clinton talks about living our best life stories, he's not just talking about the people we help – he means us, too. You and me.

We've got a chance now to be our best, most optimistic and generous selves. In my first year as president of the Clinton Foundation, I have been amazed by the potential this organization has to change lives.

To fund the Foundation's on-the-ground, go-anywhere, life-changing work in 2016, we need your help making our budget whole over this year's final days.

This is so important to President Clinton and Chelsea that they're matching every gift that comes before midnight, December 31, up to $200,000. Without a doubt, a tax-deductible gift from you now – doubled by the Clinton family – will change lives across the world in the new year.

Make your tax-deductible gift to the Clinton Foundation before midnight December 31 – and President Clinton and Chelsea will double it to go twice as far.

We've gone BIG in 2015. Together, we've helped more than 85,000 farmers in Malawi, Rwanda, and Tanzania implement climate-smart agronomic practices, access new markets, and bring more money home to their families.

We're making real, measurable progress fighting climate change and improving health. Next year can be even better.

We've got all hands on deck to hit our year-end goal. The Clinton family will double your gift, dollar for dollar, but you've got to give it now – before it's too late.

Click here to make a year-end gift to the Clinton Foundation to dream bigger and act bolder in the year to come.

Thank you for your help.

Clinton's plan is a comprehensive proposal to invest ininfrastructure across the board: in our transit systems, roads and bridges, ports and waterways, our electric grid and energy system, in railways and airports, and more. These investments will cut costs for families and businesses, boost wages, enhance our competitiveness, help combat climate change, and protect our communities.

Subject: New Head of the EPA

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS

Tell your senators: We need a clean air and public health champion as head of the EPA – confirm Gina McCarthy!

John,

This week, President Obama nominated Gina McCarthy to lead the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

This is big news. She's a veteran clean air advocate and her nomination shows that the President is serious about adopting scientific solutions to public health, environmental and climate challenges.

But we'll need to show major public support to get her confirmed.

Will you email your senators now to support clean air champion Gina McCarthy as the new EPA chief?

There's no real reason for her nomination to get held up, but that may not stop some radical, anti-environmental senators.

Gina McCarthy has led the clean air division of the EPA since 2009. She's known as a fair-minded and dedicated public servant that has worked for administrations from both parties and made extraordinary progress protecting the air we breathe and defending public health.

Tell your senators to confirm public health expert Gina McCarthy as head of EPA!

She's already helped secure historic public health safeguards at the EPA including life-saving standards to reduce soot, mercury and other toxics -- safeguards that will avert thousands of heart attacks and premature deaths each year and prevent tens of thousands of asthma attacks annually.

But that doesn't mean that dirty energy's cronies in the Senate won't try to block her nomination.

Will you help us send an overwhelming message of support to the Senate today?

Big Oil and Dirty Coal won't want another public health champion in the EPA who will hold them accountable and limit the amount that they can pollute our air and water. They'll try to make her confirmation into a tough fight… but only if we let them.

Help us get the first word in by emailing your senators right now -- before they hear any of dirty energy's spin -- to tell them that we need an EPA chief who will listen to the science and public health officials, not industry lobbyists.

It will only take a moment. Please send your message of support for Gina McCarthy here >>

The opportunity to get a real environmental advocate as head of the EPA doesn't come around that often. We were lucky to have Lisa Jackson at the helm for the past four years, fighting critical battles to protect our air and water. And with your support of Gina McCarthy, I know we can do it again and keep building towards a cleaner, safer future for our families and our planet.

Thanks,

Vanessa

Subject:	RE: Draft Message Box

Lots of good stuff in here – a clear thoughtful roadmap. A few minor thoughts/suggested edits.

1. In terms of the media markets in NH, it's difficult to say (since 80-ish% is Boston market), but more of our targets live in CD1 than CD2 – as more of our targets live there (and that's different than the population distribution). Would make sense to focus there on population centers, Rockingham Co, etc. Ideologically, a bigger percentage of undecideds are moderate (45%) than liberal (36%) – room for growth there, particularly with moderate men. Also younger women as target. For IOWA, based on recent survey, should be Cedar Rapids media market and that entire Central-East region (Waterloo east to Dubuque, down south to Davenport and Iowa City). These are labor-heavy areas where we have room to grow – labor rallies could be a natural type of event in this region. (Of course we'll confirm this and know more with modeling). And confirmed with Anzo that the demos we laid out as targets are correct by him.

2. On the section about the phases and themes, think we should label them consistent with the "get ahead" broader thematic? Also, I know I'm kind of a broken record here – but I'd suggest making the contrast message a key part of the thematic phases you lay out – (or maybe that's inferred?)

3. In the message box, under Values, you highlighted "get knocked down" and mentioned it seemed a bit random – but I think there are several ways she weaves it in nicely: when she joined the President's cabinet after defeating her, when she fought for children's health care after the bigger battle didn't succeed. (Channeling implicitly the toughness that voters associate with her for her tenacity and resilience in dealing with more personal matters … and the fact that she's back at it, running for president again …) So I'd suggest leaving it. channels toughness and badass.

Subject: Re: Draft Message Box

Ok, I did a few things:

1. On the message box, I did some formatting to tighten it. Some of it was reading like a list of things, rather than a framework. I highlighted where I did anything significant. Dan, please make sure I didn't de-HRC the language. I also added a little language at the top of each section to show how it related to the central box.

2. I added this into the larger document (and have attached as a PDF for people who may have issues with the formatting). Oren, can you run the targeting by anzo again?

3. I added a theory on how we can have a "rudder" for scheduling. Essentially, we break the schedule up into phases that are anchored by policy, but we we deliberately design to reinforce character traits. I'm not married to it at all, but this is the sort of framework I'm hoping we can finalize next weekend.

Can folks give a look...if we're good, we ship it off.

AFT, NEA: Arming Educators Won't Keep Schools Safe

Focus Needs to Be on Investments in Mental Health Services, Reasonable Gun Safety Legislation

WASHINGTON—NEA President Dennis Van Roekel and AFT President Randi Weingarten react to proposals by Virginia Gov. Bob McDonnell, U.S. Rep. Louie Gohmert, and William Bennett to arm teachers as a way to prevent school violence.

"Our duty to every child is to provide safe and secure public schools. That is the vow we take as educators. It is both astounding and disturbing that following this tragedy, Virginia Gov. Bob McDonnell, U.S. Rep. Louie Gohmert, Bill Bennett, and other politicians and pundits have taken to the airwaves to call for arming our teachers. As the rest of the country debates how to keep guns out of schools, some are actually proposing bringing more guns in, turning our educators into objects of fear and increasing the danger in our schools.

"Guns have no place in our schools. Period. We must do everything we can to reduce the possibility of any gunfire in schools, and concentrate on ways to keep all guns off school property and ensure the safety of children and school employees.

"But this is not just about guns. Long-term and sustainable school safety also requires a commitment to preventive measures. We must continue to do more to prevent bullying in our schools. And we must dramatically expand our investment in mental health services. Proper diagnosis can and often starts in our schools, yet we continue to cut funding for school counselors, school social workers, and school psychologists. States have cut at least $4.35 billion in public mental health spending from 2009 to 2012, according to the National Association of State Mental Health Program Directors. It is well past time to reverse this trend and ensure that these services are available and accessible to those who need our support.

"Greater access to mental health services, bullying prevention, and meaningful action on gun control—this is where we need to focus our efforts, not on staggeringly misguided ideas about filling our schools with firearms. Lawmakers at every level of government should dismiss this dangerous idea and instead focus on measures that will create the safe and supportive learning environments our children deserve."

Important Information

- Tickets are non-transferrable.
- Changes to your itinerary may affect your fare.
- Refund and exchange restrictions and penalties for failure to cancel unwanted travel may apply. If your travel plans change, call us before departure to change your reservation. If you do not board your train, your entire reservation from that point will be canceled. If you board a different train without notifying us, you will have to pay for it separately; the conductor cannot apply the money paid for your prior reservation. For all travel on or after March 1, 2014, for most Acela Express Business class reservations and Reserved Coach class reservations, you must cancel your reservation at least 24 hours prior to the train's departure in order to be eligible for a full refund. If the reservation is canceled within 24 hours of departure, a refund fee will apply. If the reservation is not canceled prior to scheduled departure ("no show"), the entire amount paid for the reservation will be forfeited. See the refund/exchange policy at Amtrak.com/refund.

POGO PROJECT ON GOVERNMENT OVERSIGHT

Dear John,

Unless the Senate acts soon, a critical bipartisan bill that would help make federal agencies more open and accountable will die at the end of the year. We urgently need you to write your senator and tell them you support reforms to the Freedom of Information Act, known as FOIA.

Tell Your Senator You Support Strengthening Government Accountability and Openness

The FOIA Improvement Act, introduced by Senators Patrick Leahy (D-Vermont) and John Cornyn (R-Texas), addresses many problems journalists, public interest advocates, researchers, historians and every day citizens face when using FOIA to access information on how government works—or doesn't. The bill would also make the process of requesting public documents more efficient, thus saving money for taxpayers.

We need you to tell your senator to support this legislation. Our government is spending too much time obstructing FOIA. This bill would rein in abuses that allow federal agencies to claim questionable exemptions to the law.

Thank you for your support,

Said no. She was terribly flattered, etc., but she's one year into a 5-year commitment as dean at Univ of Michigan, just moved her family back from DC to Michigan and regrets that this is the wrong time to take on something like this.

I didn't let her say no during the first call, but after consulting with her husband and thinking about it, she called back. She, of course, would like to be helpful from where she is, etc.

John, I don't how you want to go back to him on things like this. I don't think there is another candidate of color who folks would be comfortable putting up as Chair, though either Ceci or Peter (as a stretch) could be a Member.

Thoughts?

Subject:	How to neutralize Trump

Most analysis from right and left about Trump's success focuses on his giving voice to a public sick of 'political correctness'. 'Coded messages' are decoded in Trumps blunt manner. The establishment on both right and left struggle to understand that they truly have lost control over the process. Policy is largely irrelevant. Certainly a rational assessment of any likelihood of implementing specific initiatives is entirely irrelevant in this climate. Mexico will NOT pay for a wall; we will NEVER round up and deport our neighbors; we will NOT (I hope) torture suspected terrorists and exterminate their families. But that's not ground on which we want to debate.

I don't believe Hilary can win over Trump zealots. Let's face it that her 'negatives' in polling are nearly as intractable as his.

But there is a message and a language that she can and must use to keep him from gaining traction with more self-perceived outsiders We must highlight differences that are meaningful.

My thesis: we MUST give people a reason to believe that government can work for them. Universal college access without debt is a good start. Increasing the minimum wage is another. Tax reform can be another. But we can't list a thousand prescriptions--that feels false. Too much 'inside baseball'.

What both the Tea Party and Occupy Wall Street movements share--and many in the middle whom we might not have included before this cycle--is an abiding disillusionment, a lack of individual authority or personal efficacy, a weighty despair and a hopelessness that party politics fails to address. The Tea Party points at government overreach--and its favoritism for unworthy minorities--while OWS and the hard left blames big business and crony capitalism. They have more in common than people acknowledge! We can combat both with a common language.

The recent pivot in campaign rhetoric to love and kindness is positive. But we have to ACTIVATE that emotional connection. Make GOVERNMENT human, not just our candidate. That's an important part of what the Millennials are seeking--a call to action, a mission-driven moment. You don't do that with legislation, but with values. What values does Hilary stand for? That's how many will judge her.

And the proof is that's how she's being judged by many who haven't gotten on the bandwagon. She is seen as cold and calculating; self-interested and self-aggrandizing; above the law. We who know her, know how warm she is, how effective she is at translating complex (and conflicting) social and political perspectives into a law, treaty or win/win position and how much of a difference-maker she is in every endeavor.

Sorry to go on so long. You know it comes from our fervent wish to see Hilary succeed. I hope there's something in here that sparks a thought.

PS--curious whether anyone reached out to Valerie Alexander about independent filmmaking in support of Hilary?

2015 Global Europe Year in Review

2015 was a busy year for the Global Europe Program. We hosted over twenty public events and continued to grow our audience of academics, policy makers and industry professionals. Interested in attending our events in the future, or watching webcasts of past events? A full list is available here . In addition, we hosted 22 Fellows as part of our numerous scholar programs: Title VIII East European Studies Scholars, Finnish Fellows, Romanian Cultural Institute Scholars and Swiss Fellows. Global Europe Program Fellows continued to demonstrate their expertise on a broad range of topics. Many were sought out by the media as experts and had their writing published by the Wilson Center, and in other outlets. We hope you enjoy reading some of our highlights below. For more information visit our website !

Security Challenges in Europe in 2015 - Our year began with a broad view of European security challenges in 2015, with particular emphasis placed on the priorities of the Swiss Chairmanship of the OSCE. This program served as the official launch of Global Europe's Swiss Fellowship Program, in partnership with the Europa Institute at the University of Zurich, and was also supported by the Embassy of Switzerland. Watch the video here .

Ukrainian Democracy after the Maidan - The 10th Annual Ion Ratiu Democracy Award (IRDA) Workshop honored Mustafa Nayyem, a journalist, democracy activist and Parliamentarian in Ukraine, considered to be the "spark that lit the Maidan." This annual program continued the fruitful collaboration between the Wilson Center, the Ratiu Family Charitable Foundation (London, UK) and the Ratiu Center for Democracy (Turda, Romania). Watch the video here .

Southern European Energy Corridor: Status, Prospects and Geopolitics - As part of the Wilson Center's Regional and Global Energy Series, Global Europe convened senior experts from industry, government and think tanks to assess the status, prospects and geopolitics of the Southern European Energy Corridor and the European Union's efforts to diversify energy supplies. Europe's Refugee Challenge: Response to an International Crisis - Set against the backdrop of Europe's largest humanitarian crisis since World War II, this discussion focused on the situation on the ground in countries most exposed, either as points of entry or as final destinations for refugees. Our experts analyzed local responses and addressed issues of domestic opposition in the face of crisis. Watch the video here .

John --

I want you to take a moment to think about how hard you've worked over the past seven years to move this country forward. I want you to think about all of our successes, and all the change we've made. I'm so happy to see people in every corner of this country benefitting from the work we've done together on everything from making quality health care more affordable, to ensuring our kids and grandkids inherit a clean and safe planet, to helping young people go to college.

And I'm so proud of that, John.

I'm inspired by everything you've done, and I'm just in awe of folks like you who face real challenges every day and continue to dig deep and fight hard to make life better for others. Your kindness and your unwavering commitment to moving this country forward is exactly why the President has been able to count on you for all these years, and why he'll keep counting on you -- because we've got so much work left to do.

Right now, Barack and Democrats all across this country are counting on you to help us build on our success as we keep on fighting for change. And Democrats need 35,000 donations before the month ends tomorrow night to make sure we're on track to elect leaders in November who will be with us in that fight. Will you pitch in $3 or whatever you can to join us?

If you've saved your payment information, your donation will go through immediately.

QUICK DONATE: $3

QUICK DONATE: $10

QUICK DONATE: $25

QUICK DONATE: $50

QUICK DONATE: $100

Or donate another amount:

https://my.democrats.org/January-Goal

With folks like you by our side, I know we can keep pushing forward and making the progress we all deserve.

So thanks for always standing with us, John. You've played no small part in the story of moving our country forward, and I can't wait to see all that we accomplish together in the months and years ahead.

Michelle

Unpredictable Work Hours, Chaotic Life
New York Times – Teresa Tritch
The tyranny of erratic work schedules is obvious to employees who don't know what their schedules will be tomorrow or have to call in to see if there is work. And the effects have been well documented in articles and oral histories. Increasingly, the anecdotal evidence is being confirmed by research.

Democrats Offer Ways to Make College Affordable
New York Times – Editorial Board
A college education is a basic requirement for many middle-class jobs, but it is increasingly harder to afford. That is why every presidential candidate needs to explain what he or she will do to make higher education attainable for more Americans without them having to take on crippling amounts of debt.

Mayor de Blasio's Plan for Affordable Housing
New York Times – Editorial Board
He wants to use a tactic called mandatory inclusionary zoning in which as neighborhoods or specific parcels are rezoned, developers who want to build there would have to set aside at least 25 to 30 percent of new apartments for people of low and moderate incomes. They could not opt out, and the affordability would be permanent.

Taking a long view on corporate reform
Washington Post – Lawrence Summers
[R]ecent months have seen a wave of innovative proposals directed at improving economic performance in general and middle-class incomes in particular, not through government actions but through mandates or incentives designed to change business decision-making. The goal is to cause companies and their shareholders to operate on longer time horizons and to more generously share the fruits of corporate success with their workers, customers and other stakeholders.

This is how protesters plan to take on the Federal Reserve
Wonkblog – Ylan Q. Mui
The campaign's organizers said they expect at least 50 people -- ranging from workers to economists -- to attend the so-called "teach in," which will be held in the same hotel as the Fed's gathering. Topics include income inequality, efforts to raise the minimum wage to $15 an hour and whether the Fed should invest in municipal bonds.

This simple addition to college campuses could cut costs for a quarter of undergrads
Wonkblog – Danielle Paquette
Democrats vying for the White House are promoting an unusual way to slash the cost of college for millions of American students: invest in daycare.

The NNU endorsed Sanders at a "Brunch with Bernie" event at union headquarters in Oakland, California. The nurses group is the second AFL-CIO member union to issue an endorsement; the first, the 1.6-million member American Federation of Teachers, endorsed Clinton in June.

How Rand Paul defines 'income inequality'
MSNBC – Steve Benen
[T]he Republican senator seems to think income inequality isn't driven by public policy, but rather, is just a natural economic occurrence. Some Americans "work harder" and sell more stuff, therefore they have more money than everyone else.

What Works? A Meta Analysis of Recent Active Labor Market Program Evaluations
David Card, Jochen Kluve, Andrea Weber
We present a meta-analysis of impact estimates from over 200 recent econometric evaluations of active labor market programs from around the world. We classify estimates by program type and participant group, and distinguish between three different post-program time horizons. Using meta-analytic models for the effect size of a given estimate (for studies that model the probability of employment) and for the sign and significance of the estimate (for all the studies in our sample) we conclude that: (1) average impacts are close to zero in the short run, but become more positive 2-3 years after completion of the program; (2) the time profile of impacts varies by type of program, with larger gains for programs that emphasize human capital accumulation; (3) there is systematic heterogeneity across participant groups, with larger impacts for females and participants who enter from long term unemployment; (4) active labor market programs are more likely to show positive impacts in a recession.

Evan,

Yesterday afternoon, our executive council voted overwhelmingly to endorse Hillary Clinton for the Democratic nomination for president.

Excited to join the fight? Get your AFT for Hillary social media badges and show your support now!

This is a crucial election. Who we elect can make the difference in reshaping our economy and reclaiming the promise of public education.

We've seen what happens when we get involved early—like in Pennsylvania, where early engagement helped change one of the most anti-public school administrations in the country and elect one that's championing the issues of working families and public education. That's why we're getting in now.

We're the first national union to endorse. Over the coming months, we'll have the chance to help Hillary shape a powerful platform and focus the conversation on the issues that matter to our members and the students, families and communities we serve.

Ready to join the fight? Get your AFT for Hillary social media badges and show your support now!

Since February, we've engaged members and leaders in the most extensive outreach we've ever done leading up to a primary endorsement.

We conducted a phone survey calling more than 1 million members, commissioned a second major poll, and solicited your input online and in person. We wanted to know what issues mattered to you, which candidate you thought shared our values and who you believed could win.

The message we heard from you was clear: By huge margins, you wanted us to endorse in the primary, and to endorse Hillary Clinton. Our members support Hillary by more than 3 to 1. She's seen as the strongest candidate by an 11-to-1 margin, and 79 percent of those who will vote in a Democratic primary want us to endorse in the primary.

It's no wonder. In vision, in experience and in leadership, Hillary Clinton is the champion working families need in the White House. She is a tested leader who is prepared for a tough fight on behalf of students, families and communities. That fight defines her campaign and her career.

And it's not just that she shares our values. Members told us loud and clear that they believe Hillary is the right candidate—not just to earn the nomination, but to win the White House and continue the fight to reclaim the promise of America.

Show you're in—get your AFT for Hillary social media badges now!

It's important that we get in the fight now. We know what happens if we sit back and wait for others to define the debate.

The people who want to sell off our public schools, squeeze profits from our hospitals, privatize services and slash higher education are already hard at work to elect their champions. We need to shape the debate now so we're not left chasing it later.

Hillary's shown that she's ready to work with us to confront the issues facing children and families today, including poverty, wage stagnation, income inequality and lack of opportunity. Hillary is the champion we need to help us reclaim the promise of America.

Subject:	Speaker Requester - U.S.-India Dialogue

Dear John,

I hope you are well and had a wonderful Thanksgiving holiday with the family. As we look to the U.S.-India Strategic Dialogue, we would like to ask you to speak over lunch on Saturday, December 12 on the climate agenda.

Obviously this is a fairly broad topic, but we'd appreciate if you would share your views on the outcomes of COP21 and set the scene on both the possibilities of cooperation along with the remaining obstacles between the U.S. and India on combatting climate change. You can help review the progress that has been made and put forward some ideas on what we should aim for in the year ahead.

For your reference, we will start this round of the dialogue by having Alyssa Ayres and Joe Nye lead a session on the recently released CFR report before turning to the Indian delegation to hear about Prime Minister Modi's foreign policy from our Indian counterparts. We will then move to tackling this issue along with sessions on China, cyber security and counter terrorism, Afghanistan and Pakistan, and trade and the economic agenda.

If you have any questions about the above, please do not hesitate to contact us. We want to make sure that you are comfortable with the topic and issues that we'd like for you to speak about so that we can best learn from your insights. Please let us know if you would be comfortable speaking on this topic. We look forward to hearing from you and seeing you again in a couple of weeks.

Sincerely,
Nick and Jonathon

I safely made it from Camp Phoenix to Bagram Air Field yesterday. Seemingly the entire Polish contribution to the coalition is here (about 1000 troops). Today at lunch they served "pierogi in marinara sauce." I've always referred to it as ravioli.

I should be home months before Christmas but if I get extended I'm glad to know that I'll get "pierogi" for wigilia.

Hope you all are well. Love and miss you.

John: Thanks so much for your call last week. I am honored and flattered that you thought of me for the position.

After further reflection and conversation with Scott, I wanted to let you know that I don't think it's the right for for me at this time.

But thanks again for thinking of me. And I will continue to do what I can to help on the outside.

Hope you enjoy the holidays with your family.

Best,
Michele

Subject: Drugs and Terror Monster Conjugated Aggravation in the Middle East

SALVATION OF MANKIND BY NARCOTIC VEGETATION ERADICATION FROM THE AIR BY UNMANNED AIRCRAFT VEHICLES

Mr. President,

Unmanned Aircraft Vehicles

Development proved being capable of hitting even point targets. It is well known that Afghanistan has World record of Poppy Opium Production of about 200 tons annually yielded from a cultivated 157,000 hectares area. That enormous dope amount (90% of world opium production) is in my opinion the main financial source for Terror Organizations' Weaponry Acquisition. According to my assessment, UAV could have been Redemption for Entire Mankind if being utilized as follows: 2,4 D Defoliant is splashed on the Narcotic Vegetation causing its Desertification within several days inevitably. The following favorable consequences might have been anticipated:

1) Severing of Terror Organizations from their Financial Source that dry up with Narcotic Vegetation Desertification
2) Salvation of millions of Potential Drug Addicts from Awful Agony and Death
3) Rehabilitation of US Deterrence that has weakened considerably after Nine Eleven Horrendousness
4) Precipitation of NATO Troops Evacuation from Afghanistan as a result of UAV Bombardment Intensification resulting in Terror Suppression Reinforcement
5) Deterrence of El-Qaida Reactivation by leaving a Souvenir of dry Poppy-Opium Bushes from pulling out NATO Troops
6) I suggest having a Debate in the Senate that might hopefully lead to successful termination of the Afghan War after being stuck in its Marsh for 12 long years
7) Waiting for your Response as US friend since 1948
8) There could not have been any doubt about terminating the Armed Conflict in Afghanistan Honorably averting an Ignominious ending up as currently impending.
9) Similarly, Central American Dope Smuggling could have been drastically diminished by UAV Utilization for Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Grown on Mountainous Gradients. Very large amounts of Dope are smuggled annually into the US having found hitherto no efficacious way of overcoming that calamity
10) Please contact me by scheduling a meeting at US Embassy in Tel -Aviv for Clarifications with your experts' participation specializing in Explosives, Electronics and Aviation
11) I have got all the required specifications for getting mankind be extricated from the two conjugated calamities, Drugs inundation and Terror attacks of Innocent Population thanks to UAV activities.
12) To my great astonishment, my correspondence versus US Senate Committee on Armed Services has been irresponsive despite the extraordinary importance for entire Civilization Meanwhile as many as one billion of Muslims are threatening America encouraged by their Nine Eleven Precedent Success
13) In reminiscence, as many as 50,000 Aircraft were ordered according to Presidents' Roosevelt Ordinance after the Japanese Attack of Pearl Harbor while 7000 UAV by comparison are being idled in Storage letting the Afghan Armed Conflict be continued indefinitely.
14) Please let me explicate for US Air-Force an efficacious way emerging victorious from Afghan Entanglement in favor of Entire Mankind instead of suffering an ignominious defeat.
15) To my great surprise, US Does not exercise its Self Defense Right according to UN Charter Chapter 51 (1946), enabling Criminal Organizations of Third World Countries attacking it with impunity. Nine Eleven Catastrophe could have been averted if the US had utilized its complete Arsenal particularly UAV in high numbers instead of being kept idle in Magazines.
16) I propose meeting your Experts for UAV, Explosives and Electronics at US Embassy in Tel Aviv for thorough debate about Dual Headed Monster Decapitation in favor of beleaguered Mankind believing in great success of my Innovative Unprecedented Method as an only feasible efficacious expedient against it.
17) Is White House Correspondence Team busy to such an extent being unable responding even most important letters?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

18) To my great Astonishment Dereliction of US Air Force results in smuggling of Tremendous Dope Amount from Central America via Mexico into the US with its Awful damage for many millions American's Health
19) I don't see any reason for hesitancy! The President may issue tomorrow an ordinance in order to open emergency Magazines, getting ten thousands of UAV
Aloft in order to achieve Narcotic Vegetation Desertification with achievement for Posterity
20) Emerge preferably with an Upper hand honorably instead of being ignominiously defeated!
21) Despite being Non US Citizen I think to have done my best in assisting ending up
Afghan War victoriously thanks to my Innovative Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Method, however not a single word of Acknowledgement has hitherto Reached my mailbox! In my opinion, Disparagement and Ungratefulness are conjugated at least according to my feeling!
22) There could not have been any justification keeping as many as 7000 UAV unused in magazines instead of operating them against Nine Eleven Cruel enemy. Moreover, US taxpayers have already paid for that arsenal!
23) I believe Mr. Attorney General that Narcotic Vegetation Desertification Utilizing UAV is the only Feasible way of getting Mankind been extricated from the Doubling Stricken Menace Grabbing, Drug and Terror Simultaneously.
24) November election is going to be beginning of President Obama last Congress Tenure working with but if the President is being able Indicating Monumental achievements. He might have been eligible into the Parlor of great Leaders having annihilated Drugs and Terror calamities for Posterity affluence
25) Wiping out Narcotic Vegetation and launching consequently an Overwhelming
Strike on Terror Organizations by UAV Utilization might have been an Unprecedented Achievement of Entire Mankind and President Obama personally.
26) Incredibly, no reaction has come from the White House in latest four years despite
My pure intention for assistance for the US as well as Entire Civilization!
27) In my opinion Nobel Institute might have contributed to a very great extent to Drug and Terror Monster Decapitation in favor of Entire Civilization.
28) Prime Minister of Israel might have contributed a great role in exerting an influence on US and Western Governments in General in a Universal Effort of Dual Headed Monster, Drugs and Terror simultaneous eradication

Be successful

Gideon Rodeh

There is no justification losing an Election Campaign Ignominiously instead of emerging Victorious honorably! The Democrats should have mobilized the entire US Media attacking the Republican for an Exploitation of US Contingency to vote against their own Interests in favor of big Oil Corporations! Such incessant Transmissions would have been a very efficacious Deterrence for most Democratic families to abstain from voting against their own Interests!

Be successful

Subject:	Why am I emailing you about sodomy?

Friend, you might have heard something shocking if you were watching TV Monday morning.

> "One of [Ken Cuccinelli's] campaign promises is to reinstate the so-called crimes against nature law, which would among other things, outlaw oral sex among consenting adults, married people, all kinds of folks, making it a felony."

That wasn't a sketch on The Daily Show — it was a discussion of the news on ABC's The View.

Instead of focusing on the pressing issues facing the Commonwealth, Ken Cuccinelli is spending his time supporting an anti-sodomy law that criminalizes consensual sex between adults. Seriously.

We need to raise $100,000 by the end of July to make sure Virginia's next Governor is someone who is focused on jobs — not someone who is fighting for an outdated and offensive law.

Donate $5 to help Terry get his positive message for Virginia out to the voters who need to hear it the most.

I haven't even told you the most offensive part yet.

In a 2009 speech, Cuccinelli explained his support for anti-sodomy laws by arguing that "homosexual acts are wrong and should not be accommodated in government policy."

Cuccinelli's views about the LGBT community are so strong, he's willing to put his political capital on the line to try and restrict the private lives of all Virginians.

Maybe that's not surprising, since this is the same candidate who called being gay a "personal challenge" during last weekend's debate.

If you want a Virginia that is welcoming to everyone, please make a $5 donation to Terry today:

https://donate.terrymcauliffe.com/stand-against-divisive-politics

I knew Ken Cuccinelli had an extreme social agenda, but I never thought this would be a topic of conversation in 2013.

MCCAIN'S ECONOMIC POLICIES: BY LOBBYISTS, FOR LOBBYISTS

Like Bush, McCain's policies are crafted by lobbyists and help lobbyists and wealthy CEOs.

- McCain has had at least 134 LOBBYISTS who are advising, working for or raising money for his presidential campaign. These lobbyist advisers have made millions advocating for big oil, insurance companies, Iraq contractors and white washing the crimes of dictators.

McCain's campaign co-chair and top economic adviser is close to the banking and energy industries . Former Senator Phil Gramm, a former lobbyist, is helping craft McCain's economic policies, which give billions in tax breaks to wealthy CEOs and big oil companies, but little to families.

- Gramm lobbied for the banking industry on the mortgage crisis issue while he was advising McCain. Read the story here . McCain's advisers and fundraisers have made millions for firms deeply involved in the housing crisis -- JP Morgan, Washington Mutual and Citigroup.
- As a senator, Gramm was chairman of the Senate Banking Committee and a key player in passing legislation that deregulated the banking industry – a move which many believed paved the way for the current housing crisis.
- As a senator, Gramm pressed for decreased regulation of the energy industry, including a loophole backed by Enron.

McCain's economic policies come up short for families who are hurting. McCain, who has nine homes, thinks people should 'get a second job' to pay for their mortgages. His economic plan gives little to families, but nearly $4 billion in tax breaks to the top five American oil companies.

McCain: "I Took Money From Enron. I Took Money From Andersen." During an appearance on MSNBC's "Hardball," John McCain said, "I think that what has happened is, you have seen manifestations, which I predicted, of the influence of huge amounts of soft money. And it affects both parties. It affects me. I'm tainted by it. I took money from Enron. I took money from Andersen." [MSNBC, "Hardball," 1/23/02]

Well, not the message I like to send. Plus, I have only been able to be in touch with family members and friends as David & I have been on 3 legs of a flight to get to Oklahoma City to get to nearby Norman for a nephew's graduation.

Mary was hit by a car this morning, with John thankfully in town and nearby. Because her head was cracked in some way and her pelvis was whacked, it sounded pretty scary for awhile. From what I know from very recently, while she has had a lot of pain, so far, all looks OK and all should be OK. These are not official words, but that's as current as I know.

Knowing more than I'd like to about people who have sudden medical or hospital events/arrivals, I am quite sure that there basically is nothing we can do other than what you think feels right, but probably means we have to leave her and family to themselves now -- a note to her at home to be there when she gets home, an email so she can read it later, etc, etc. John and Mary's kids will be at the hospital and one or more may be there by now, and you know the close circle they have.

No matter what, unless something is happening while I type, our Mary Podesta WAS injured badly but SHOULD be OK.

I will try to keep sending word, or find a way that you get word, and when we can all do something to help, I and our other Mary Followers will round up ways to truly help.

Please know I'm in Oklahoma and right now, I will not be with the family and I also think we know enough about bad accidents or medical crises that there's just not a whole lot we can do. As soon as I have more word or "guidance," I'll send it out. and if anyone else has something to add, please do that too.
For those there at Carolyn's on Sunday, we all were with Mary, and since she is my usual chauffeur since my damn medical devil stopped me from driving since '04, she and I had our usual wonderful drive to book group and back home catching up on family, recent events, where each of us were going next and as always, her love for her family, Truckee, AND our own circle -- we really did talk about all of that. SO, now I will refrain from saying what I REALLY think about the idea of a vehicle hitting her or this happening to her.

LOVE TO ALL. Time for prayers, candles, karma, and oooohhhming once again.

Dear Mr Podesta

I work on BBC News' award-winning radio history programme, Witness, in which we talk to people who lived through, or witnessed, great events in history.

We want to do an edition on the historic handshake between Yasser Arafat and Yitzhak Rabin, in September 1993, to be broadcast next week.

And we want to get a sense of what was going on behind the scenes that day – the last minute flurry of negotiations, the atmosphere, the worries about what might or might not go wrong; the scene which President Clinton recounts in his memoirs of how he and his aides practised what might happen if Chairman Arafat moved to embrace Prime Minister Rabin, and how to ensure that they did shake hands. Witness is a programme of personal memories and we would be delighted if you would be willing to share with us your memories of that day.

With best wishes

Louise

I think it is good. Imagine the clip they will use is the partisan slugfest sentence. I don't love "backs of dead Americans" in that sentence. I think that is too graphic and splashes back on her as appearing to exploit their deaths.

Friends – HRC asked me what offense we could do today to set up Gowdy for Face The Nation tomorrow.

Nick and I thought best option would be a statement from Podesta doing some offense on how this latest obsession on Sid emails is absurd, further evidence this is partisan effort.

HRC was hoping for a video. Don't think that is possible for tomorrow. I could see doing one for Tuesday, when we have more email news to face that could put all this in context.

In the meantime, Nick is drafting a statement that we will share with all of you. So be on the lookout for that.

Thanks, all.

John,

I'm an attorney in Chicago. Longtime admirer of your career. Supporter of Hilary. I wish one time when Bernie attacks her on Wall Street, she would come out and say that there are thousands and thousands of good, honest people who work on Wall Street (my dad was a rags to riches story), are philanthropic, pay their taxes, are hard-workers, etc.....and to demonize the entire industry, while it may make for good socialist rhetoric, is just as dangerous as demonizing any other entire demographic of American society.

Good luck, John.

Richard

Subject: Update -- Top Tax Bills, Handicapped

Mike & Co.

This has been a busy week in Washington especially on the tax front, with more to follow. We've already seen a number of hearings and developments on the most salient current tax bills and related proposals in the last two days, which are itemized and vetted for viability below.

Tomorrow, an assessment of which of these, as well as "must-pass" tax items such as the expiring extenders, will make it to Obama's desk by year-end and a review of Brookings' panel discussion, "Tax policy in 2016: What's new and what's next," with Ways and Means Chair Kevin Brady and Senate Finance ranking member Ron Wyden.

Best,

Dana

• International Tax Reform --

Probably the most likely tax legislation to pass in 2016, even though it's still called unlikely by key policymakers. The two parties will have difficulty coming to an agreement on first what to do and then how to do it. Narrower legislation is more likely to succeed than comprehensive reform. Most viable bills in this area:

- Earnings Stripping -- On the eve of today's Ways and Means hearing regarding international tax reform, ranking member Chris Van Hollen and senior member Sander Levin offered bills to constrain the practice whereby foreign parent companies extend large loans to their newly acquired U.S. partners and take advantage of the tax-deductible status of interest payment arrangement.

- Exit Tax Bills -- Bills seeking to reduce corporate inversions by making them too expensive to make business sense are likely to be introduced before next recess.

- Repatriation -- Ryan and Schumer have talked up the idea of introducing legislation to repatriate U.S. multinational profits that are held abroad. A compromise will have to be struck between Democrats seeking reduced tax levels for this purpose and Republicans who cite moral hazard. The Obama budget for FY2017 includes a proposal to allow overseas profits to come home at a special 14 percent trate, and all overseas profits thereafter be taxed at 19 percent.

• Broader Corporate Tax Reform --

Any successful across the board corporate tax reform would almost have to lower the nominal corporate tax rate of 35 percent. -- the highest in the world. Republicans are adamant that the high rate yields corporate inversions. Ways and Means chair Brady has pointed to the corporate rate repeatedly as a sign that the U.S. has a "broken tax code that discourages investment and growth."

Brady has not yet released his own reform bill, but an op-ed of his published this morning gives an indication of what it will include: "We must address the real root of the problem – our broken tax code that discourages investment and growth … Our sky-high 35 percent corporate tax rate bears much of the blame … We cannot allow American taxpayers to foot the bill for tax revenue grabs in Europe and elsewhere."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Provisions to look for: a lower overall corporate tax rate, language to address European investigations on U.S. businesses dodging taxes abroad. The bill likely won't include language restricting inversions.

Senate Finance chair Hatch has suggested writing legislation to make dividends tax deductible for corporations, eliminating the so-called "double taxation" of hitting corporate earnings as well as dividend incomes from investors. The proposal faces long odds.

- Earned-Income Tax Credit (EITC) --

One tax provisions in the Obama FY17 budget that has been muted if not mooted this week is his proposal to expand the EITC for childless workers and create a $500 "second earner" tax credit. The cost would be $150 billion over ten years.

During his SOTU, Obama expressed his desire to work with Speaker Ryan on the issue: "I also know Speaker Ryan has talked about his interest in tackling poverty. America is about giving everybody willing to work a chance, a hand up. And I'd welcome a serious discussion about strategies we can all support, like expanding tax cuts for low-income workers who don't have children."

The credit is a long-standing darling of both progressives and the GOP establishment. Ryan and President Obama support extending it to childless workers. But they face resistance from not just the hard right but from Sen. Hatch, who say it's not "necessary" to expand the break.

Mike and Co. --

The soap opera that is the federal budget making process saw sone minor prima donna pratfalls this week. Nothing remotely on the scale of blocking the confirmation of a Supreme Justice. But as Senate Budget's ranking member Sen. Cardin warned at a breakfast today, you can forget regular order on the budget -- after the President submits a nomination, all comity in the Senate will be gone until Election Day.

Details and the latest below. Taxes tomorrow (be still your heart, right?).

Best,

Dana

Story in the Senate

At the same DSCC breakfast one month ago, Sen. Merkley announced that, to his surprise, Senate Budget Chair Mike Enzi was going to put out a manager's mark for an FY17 budget resolution for Committee markup, for February. Today, Enzi withdrew his markup plans, without announcing a reschedule date.

To add to the growing problems within the GOP, the party, led by Senator Mitch McConnell, has declared all-out war on Obama's impending Supreme Court nomination -- an "nomination abomination" -- making it even more difficult to predict how these budget deliberations will end.

Histrionics of the House

Even before Obama released his FY2017 budget proposal earlier this month, House Republicans made it a point to emphasize that it was DOA. Now, GOP is running into some dead ends of its own.

Speaker Ryan announced early on that he intended to pass the budget through regular order this year -- a process that hasn't been successfully completed in a generation. Due to internal dicisions and outside pressures, House Republicans have changed their tune.

Yesterday, House Budget announced plans for a proposal next month to stick with the spending levels set by last fall's deal with the White House while also giving members the chance to vote on other bills that would slash government spending. The compromise is meant to appease hard-right GOP members who vehemently opposed the Obama-Boehner budget agreement. Per Ryan's office: "This proposal enjoys the overwhelming support of the committee members, and the chairman looks forward to sharing it with the broader Conference as we continue moving this process forward."

The conservative Freedom Caucus so far has supported Speaker Ryan's overtures for cooperation on the budget. But the GOP's hard-right wing may not remain so understanding of the Speaker's position, especially if their credentials are called into question by outside groups with sway over their base of support. Heritage Action said Monday that the group would oppose any budget blueprint that sticks to the Obama-Boehner deal, which increases spending by about $30 billion.

Going Forward

It won't be an easy road ahead on the budget. The conservative caucus has several dozen members, which gives it the power to torpedo any budget proposal that lacks at least some Democratic support. If it decides to back the new proposal put forth by Chair Tom Price of House Budget, it would be likely for GOP leaders to be able to move forward. Some members have voiced their willingness to cooperate, but the pull of outside right-wing groups may prove to be too strong.

Meanwhile, Minority Whip Steny Hoyer said today that any Republican budget strategy that strays from the

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Obama-Boehner deal would be opposed by House Democrats.

The House Budget plan is to submit the proposal honoring the spending limits agreed to last year, while allowing the hard-right GOP wing to vote on other bills which would slash spending, mollifying the more hawkish members.

Dearth of Legislative Days

Lengthening the odds against Ryan, the House Budget is now working on a delayed schedule. In mid-January, the House Budget Committee announced that it would be releasing its markup of the White House budget proposal early — on February 25 . However, that has also changed. Yesterday, The Committee announced that it was now delaying its markup till sometime in March. The change is curious for a few reasons. It raises the question of why the House Budget Committee said it would have the markup done so early in the first place. Moreover, it goes against the House Republicans message of "getting things done" during this Congress.

Democrats are jumping on this delay already. Nancy Pelosi said: "Yet again, it's the Speaker's own broken promises – and his own rhetoric – that are coming back to bite him. Because while the Speaker pledged an end to dysfunctional House-Republican leadership, all the American people are seeing is more of the same."

One thing is looks increasingly likely: that the nomination will exert a tidal force on at least the budget deliberations and everything else, through the election.

Mike & Co. --

One week ago, the House passed a bill that could alter and perhaps ease the way state and local infrastructure is financed in the capital markets, when HR.2209, a bill to "require the appropriate Federal banking agencies to treat certain municipal obligations as level 2A liquid assets, and for other purposes" was adopted by the House with a voice vote.

Thought the bill has flown below the media radar, it is significant. Municipal obligations, including bonds, are at the heart of infrastructure investment in America. And infrastructure investment has been a large focus of this primary. Both Democratic candidates have proposed multi-hundred billion dollar infrastructure investment proposals.

Details below...

Best,

Dana

Infrastructure is mostly funded at the state or local level through the use of municipal bonds. Between 2003 and 2012, counties, states, and other localities invested $3.2 trillion in infrastructure through long-term tax-exempt municipal bonds, 2.5 times more than the federal investment.

The Bill

HR 2209 requires federal banking regulators to include municipal bonds under the Liquidity Coverage Ratio (LCR). The LCR is designed to ensure that financial institutions have the necessary assets available to handle a liquidity disruption. Local officials have said that if the new rules aren't changed, it will saddle them with higher borrowing costs by eliminating incentives banks have to purchase their bonds. Without bonds, these governments will lose a significant source of their funding. Per Indiana State Treasurer Kelly Mitchell: "This bill helps ensure cash-strapped school districts and municipalities will continue to have access to bonds to finance projects they think are best for their communities."

Rep. Luke Messer, an Indiana Republican who wrote the bill: "Put simply, our bill requires the federal government to recognize the obvious, that our municipal bonds are some of the safest investments in the world and that we shouldn't have rules that give preferential treatment to corporate bonds or other countries' bonds over our own."

After passing the House with unanimous bipartisan support, a companion bill is expected to be introduced in the Senate this year.

Municipal Bond Issue

After the crisis of 2008, federal regulators adopted international banking standards that require banks to have enough "High-Quality Liquid Assets" to cover their cash outflows for 30 days in case of a future financial meltdown. Now, municipal bonds are not considered liquid assets and therefore cannot be included under the LCR. As a result, financial institutions have been discouraged from holding municipal debt, which means that cash strapped municipalities and school districts may eventually be forced to reduce or even stop work on projects financed with municipal bonds.

Infrastructure Financing -- Alternative Financing

- Tax-exempt bonds: Exemption from federal taxes and many state and local taxes is possible through the use of municipal bonds. In recent years, with the increasing use of PPPs, barriers to this tax exemption have arisen.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Treasury has reviewed relevant tax rules and based on their findings and have put forth a proposal for an expanded and permanent America Fast Forward Bond Program as an alternative to tax-exempt bonds. Based on the successful Build America Bond program, "would provide an efficient borrowing subsidy to state and local governments while appealing to a broader investor base than traditional tax-exempt bonds [and] would cover a broad range of projects for which tax-exempt bonds can be used."

• Obama's budget proposal: Obama has also put forth a plan to strengthen local and state government infrastructure projects. His plan relies on a new Federal credit program to support public-private partnerships within the Department of the Treasury. It will provide direct loans to US infrastructure projects developed through PPPs. The Obama Administration believes that private investment is crucial for infrastructure development moving forward, so there should be more flexibility in regards to what PPP is subject to. In addition to that, President Obama has proposed the taxable, direct-pay America Fast Forward bond program to help finance infrastructure.

State Infrastructure Banks

Local governments receive financing in a number of ways. Traditional sources such as tax revenues have been dwindling and local authorities have been relying on federal government loan programs, public-private partnerships, and State Revolving Funds (SRFs). State Infrastructure Banks (SIBs) are a subset of SRFs -- the funds act like a bank, because they don't own the infrastructure asset, but act as a lender or guarantor to the project sponsor. Per Brookings: "SRFs rely on principal repayments, bonds, interest and fees to re-capitalize and replenish the fund as a perpetual source of debt financing."

SIBs generate more investment per dollar than traditional federal and state grant programs. They only exist in 33 states and 10 of those SIBs are currently inactive. A large problem may be compliance with federal regulations. Brookings again:

"We found that many SIB officials cite compliance with federal regulations as slowing down the investment process either because of environmental and contractual requirements or due to the lack of flexibility in projects that are not Title 23 or 49 eligible. For states with smaller projects, this may be prohibitively costly compared to the advantage of using the low-cost SIB financing."

Just being called a bank subjects SIBs to regulations that commercial banks are subject to. SIBs are non-for-profit organizations with a goal of increasing infrastructure investment, so they don't quite fit into the category of the average bank. SIBs may be more successful outside this classification.

For or Against Dodd-Frank

Before Dodd-Frank, particularly in the case of relatively small municipalities, many underwriters forged long-term relationships with municipalities and would provide financial advice before and after a bond issuance. With Dodd-Frank, that relationship changed, with a new "municipal adviser" category that must register with the SEC and be regulated by the Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board (MSR). Now, it is widely illegal to provide advice to governmental entities concerning the issuance of municipal bonds, the use of financial derivatives, and the investment of the proceeds of a bond issue to, or on behalf, of a municipal entity or an obligated person unless the adviser is registered with the SEC.

HR 2209 appears to address a problem within Dodd-Frank, but it is unclear if it vitiates the law materially. At face value, it appears to be more a technical fix. Dodd-Frank expanded regulations for banking institutions, but the entities that fund state and local governments are far unlike the TBTF institutions that Dodd-Frank was meant to regulate.

Groups like Americans for Financial Reform oppose HR 2209: "While we sympathize with the belief that municipal debt was incorrectly treated under the initial LCR rule, we believe that it is inappropriate to classify such debt as a Level 2A asset. AFR therefore opposes this bill unless a more appropriate liquidity classification is used." AFR has previously said it supports treating municipal bonds as more liquid and does not approve the type of classification used in HR 2209, because it goes too far in its treatment of municipal debt as level 2A liquid assets and specifically with micromanaging regulators with this kind of detail and they prefer a Level 2B classification.

The bill could provide relief for smaller institutions, so that they can fund infrastructure investment more easily. In terms of Dodd-Frank, it is yet to be decided if it is simply a necessary tweak or a criticism.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Looking Ahead

HR 2209 could end up being an important issue in the national infrastructure discussion. It brings up questions about how far a state or local government can go before its activities begin to resemble an actual bank. With the growth of PPPs, the private sector is being even more integrated into the process – should those companies be given tax exemptions, as well?

Mike & Co. --

The newly-installed the Minneapolis Federal Reserve Bank and former Special Investigator overseeing the TARP program came to town yesterday advocating drastic action to head off a financial sector systemic risk crisis, calling for the nation's biggest banks to be broken up.

His speech, delivered at Brookings, got noticed, with lengthy coverage in the NYT, WSJ, and WaPo. And perhaps with reason -- the TBTF (too big to fail) issue has dogged Congress and the administration for years and is one of the central ones in the Democratic presidential campaign this far.

Or maybe it was just a slow news day. You decide...

Best,

Dana

A Peculiar Package of Proposals

Kashkari argued in the alternative that Dodd-Frank needs to be used and/or needs to be reformed. He says the law as written does not solve the TBTF problem. He also wants regulators to use the yet-untried tools at their disposal under the law. "While significant progress has been made to strengthen our financial system, I believe the [Dodd-Frank] Act did not go far enough." He then laid out three ideas meant to end TBTF once and for all.

- break up large banks into smaller, less connected, less important entities;

- turn what remains of the large banks into public utilities by forcing them to hold so much capital that they can't fail; and

- tax leverage throughout the financial system "to reduce systemic risks wherever they lie."

- Break up the Banks

From the perspective of current laws, breaking up big banks is already a policy avenue available to regulators. The Federal Reserve, through the Financial Stability Oversight Council, can elect to take a number of actions to deal with banks that it feels are both systemically important and organized in an unstable way. Section 121 of the Dodd-Frank Act gives the Board of Governors these powers.

So this first proposal – break up big banks - has been covered here before but just for the sake of argument... which banks need to be broken up most urgently? Few commentators believe there is an imminent threat demanding action.

Unsurprisingly, the Fed doesn't believe that banks are so hopeless that they need to be dissolved. That doesn't mean it's not a possibility under current legislation, however.

- Make Banks "Utilities"

The second proposal is to push capital requirements for banks so high that they "essentially turn into public utilities." Kashkari never explains how exactly high capital reserves turn banks into utilities, but that's for another time.

He is voicing his support for one of the oldest forms of banking regulations that we still use and use far more now in the Dodd-Frank era – he wants banks to hold more capital. Supporters of the law may be heartened by his full-throated endorsement of the law on this score.

- Cribbing from Clinton?

The third proposal was just about lifted out of Secretary Clinton's plan to regulate Wall Street –- though the reporting on the speech doesn't much mention it much. It is reasonable both from a policy and a political perspective. But he doesn't provide further details about his proposal after first outlining it.

Kashkari contra Yellen

Fed Chair Yellen has been an outspoken proponent of existing banking regulations, making it known that while the job of regulators is not done yet. we're in a much better situation now than we were before DFA. During her testimony before House Financial Services, Yellen fielded a question about why she had not yet broken up big banks, saying: "…we [at the Fed]vare using our powers to make sure that a systemically important institution could fail, and it would not be -- have systemic consequences for the country. We're doing that in a whole variety of ways."

The ways Yellen is referring to include enforcing Liquidity Coverage Ratios, capital reserve requirements, and a rule passed last November forcing the biggest banks to issue long-term debt equal to 18 percent of risk-weighted assets.

Evidently it's not enough. But it is nonetheless uncommon for a newly minted Federal Reserve Bank President to taking to task the Chair of the Federal Reserve's Board of Governors.

Mike & Co. --

A national holiday, a snowstorm, and a congressional recess stilled DC yesterday and a quiet week is expected. It gives us a chance to have a look at some developments thus far this year that have flown below the radar.

Today's item is the one bill on its way to the President's desk -- the Customs bill -- and the caboose attached to it that extends the internet tax moratorium permanently and may be the bill's important title... at least until the TPP comes up on the Senate floor.

The Customs Bill: Comity on the Hill

The Senate cleared the first overhaul of the Customs and Border Protection (CBP) agency in more than a decade in a 75-20 vote last Thursday, sending the bill to the President and ending months of wrangling over the measure. The Trade Facilitation and Trade Enforcement Act of 2015 (H.R. 644) retools CBP to increase its focus on blocking illegal trade and ensuring that legal trade moves smoothly.

The major facets of this legislation are:

- new protections on intellectual property rights
- new tools to fight currency manipulation
- a permanent extension of the Internet Tax Freedom Act

Said Senate Finance ranking member Ron Wyden: "This bill is about coming down hard on the trade cheats who are ripping off American jobs, and the truth is past trade policies were often too old, too slow or too weak for our country to fight back."

Wyden was perhaps the most outspoken Democrat in support of the bill, continuing his role as a strong backer of free trade legislation. He was a key factor in getting Trade Promotion Authority legislation passed through Congress last summer, splitting from some of his colleagues in voicing support for that act.

Unusual Coalition

27 Democrats, 47 Republicans, and 1 Independent voted affirmatively . Industry groups including the National Retail Federation, as well as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce were supportive of the legislation. National Association of Manufacturers' president Jay Timmons said "if senators want to grow manufacturing in the United States, then they should pass this bill immediately."

Notable "Nay" votes include Sens. Durbin and Reid, who both expressed disappointment that the legislation was a "watered down" version of a bill previously passed by the Senate. "I like that [Senate] version, and that strong language on currency manipulation," Durbin said – that language required Commerce to consider "undervalued" currencies to be equivalent to countervailable subsidies. "The conference report that's back to us now and before the Senate at this moment is a much different bill."

Purpose and Provisions

House and Senate negotiators agreed on a final customs bill in December. The House passed the measure 256-158 but the legislation stalled in the Senate over a provision added in conference that permanently extends a moratorium on Internet access taxes.

That provision is perhaps the most reported on section in the bill – it's almost certainly the most popular - it applies to localities, states, and the federal government itself. Sen. Lamar Alexander cited it though as explanation for his "nay" vote: "the federal government shouldn't be telling the states what their tax structure should be."

Another important provision, known as the ENFORCE Act, would require the CBP to more aggressively investigate complaints that companies are evading anti-dumping or countervailing duties on imports by mislabeling or disguising the shipments.

The bill includes a new Trade Enforcement Fund to bring trade cases through the WTO, to investigate the implementation of trade requirements by other countries, and to respond to complaints of trade violations. It also creates a nine-member Advisory Committee on International Exchange Rate Policy, whose members must be comprised of individuals from the private sector who are selected by both chambers of Congress and the President (three members each).

Currency Manipulation

Currency manipulation has been a long-standing concern of American policy-makers and a particularly contentious issue in global trade relations; claims that China has been chronically undervaluing its currency have made the news for a number of years. Advocates for stricter enforcement of currency manipulation provisions claim that undervalued currencies operate similarly to export subsidies – a prohibited practice within the World Trade Organization.

The final bill dropped a Senate provision that would have required the Commerce Department to treat undervalued currency as an illegal subsidy under U.S. countervailing duty law. This provision would have opened the door for compensatory tariffs to be levied against goods which originate from countries which are found to purposely undervalue their currency in order to boost their exports. The bill does, however, include other measures that give the Treasury Department new tools to fight currency manipulation:

- creates a special fund for the CBP to ensure trading partners follow the rules and to bring disputes before the WTO
- increases funding to the National Intellectual Property Rights Coordination Center
- establishes the Commercial Customs Operations Advisory Committee jointly between CBP and Treasury
- requires CBP to investigate claims from other agencies of evasion of anti-dumping or countervailing duties.

Relation to TPP

Sen. Majority Leader McConnell has said that the Senate will not vote on the Trans-Pacific Partnership before the November elections, so it may come as a surprise to see a bill which deals with enforcing trade deals like TPP pass both houses of Congress. However this bill's provisions for protecting IP rights, toughening countervailing duties, and tackling currency manipulation are a necessary prerequisite for agreements like TPP (or the far more nebulous TTIP). The new age of trade agreements will deal extensively in issues like intellectual property protection, trade in services, and high-tech product trading; types of commerce which are far more difficult to regulate compared to the trade of physical goods.

So, despite the fact that TPP won't get a vote until after November (and perhaps not in 2016 at all), and may not pass even then, the protections set forward in the customs bill are necessary to allow American companies to continue to compete in the global marketplace.

Price of Passage

In order to include the permanent extension of the Internet Tax Freedom Act, McConnell had to promise that a vote would be held this year on the Marketplace Fairness Act. That legislation grants states greater authority to collect sales taxes from online businesses who sell products within their borders. While McConnell himself opposes the bill, it was the only way to get the customs bill (with the tax amendment attached) unstuck.

Just because McConnell has promised it will be brought to a vote doesn't mean it will be a smooth process - the Senate passed the Marketplace Fairness Act in 2013 with 69 votes, and most of the lawmakers who voted for it are still in the chamber. Some lawmakers like Kelly Ayotte, who is facing a tough reelection campaign this year, have vowed to fight tooth-and-nail against it. Despite these detractors in the Senate, the real battle may occur in the House, where two competing proposals have been brought forward.

Reforms in the area of international tax deal with both the repatriation of foreign-derived profits and the issue of corporate inversions. Testifying today, Treasury Secretary Jack Lew encouraged the parties in

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Congress to overcome their differences on both, which he believes surmountable: "I just want to underscore the urgency of dealing with inversions … We can't wait a year to deal with this," Lew said during a Senate Finance hearing on the Obama administration's budget. Congress could pass narrow legislation on inversions, he said, even if broader reform of the international system is preferable.

Stirrings in the Senate

Sen. Schumer also announced today that he is in contact with Speaker Ryan about coming to an agreement on repatriating corporate profits. They were unable to come to an agreement last year on a similar measure put forth as part of a larger reform effort. Schumer said today: "We're trying to bridge over, of course, the divide between existing proposals. I remain at the table ready to work."

One of the key differences between the parties concerns whether the money raised from tax reform should be turn into government revenue for more spending, or used to pay down the debt or pass tax cuts. After the Senate Finance hearing yesterday, Chair Hatch said: "I'm actually working on international, but I just don't think it's going to get done this year, because, you know, let's face it, the Democrats are going to want to raise revenue. They want money to spend."

At that same hearing, Sen. Shelby pushed a corporate integration plan he is developing to eliminate the double taxation of corporate income by providing corporations a dividend deduction. He's awaiting a score by the Joint Committee on Taxation. Dividend deductions are usually quite expensive and regressive, so it will a feat to attract any Democratic support, especially for him.

Brady's Push

Meanwhile, Ways and Means Chair Kevin Brady has said that he wants a vote this year on moving the United States into a territorial tax system, which would permanently exempt US-based businesses from paying taxes on income earned abroad. He also wants to lower the corporate rate to 20 percent. In the face of these proposals it is difficult to see what sort of compromise can be found between Democrats and Republicans, as the former may be more preoccupied just keeping alive the idea that foreign profits should be taxed at all. "The goal of these reforms are not to generate more spending," Brady said. "It's to bring back real dollars to be reinvested in the United States."

Brady has been advocating for international tax reform since he took over Ways and Means. Last month, he spoke with Sen. Hatch and they were both committed to getting something done. Senior Republicans believe the country's international tax problems — inversions and Europe going after revenues from U.S. companies among them — are urgent. But Brady strongly hinted that all that work would be aimed at setting things up for 2017, when Republicans want "pro-growth tax reform under a Republican president." Perhaps that's no huge shock, but it does seem to set up something of a disconnect, given all the talk of urgency.

Brady and his supporters have been pushing the idea that American money is either being taxed by other countries or being taken over by foreign competitors in an inversion -- typically, when an American company incorporates abroad so its earnings are no longer subject to American taxes. Brady says the result is an erosion of our tax base and a lock-out effect of American capital being "trapped" abroad that can be solved by fixing our uncompetitive tax code.

Presidential Proposal

The President's FY 2017 budget contains a surprising source of new revenue to pay for its spending programs – a major piece of international tax policy reform: a six-year, $478 billion public-works program for highway, bridge and transit upgrades, half of it to be financed with a one-time, 14 percent tax on U.S. companies' overseas profits and a 19 percent rate thereafter. The issue of companies holding foreign profits at locations abroad, where they are exempt from taxation until repatriated, has vexed policy makers on both sides for some time. It's estimated that these profits add up to nearly $2 trillion.

The issue of companies holding foreign profits at locations abroad, thereby exempt from taxation unless those profits are brought home, has vexed policy makers on both sides for some time. Microsoft Corp., Apple Inc., Google Inc. and five other tech firms now account for more than a fifth of the $2.10 trillion in profits that U.S. companies are holding overseas. In keeping with the idea that Obama's final budget is "more politics than policy," these revenue-gaining proposals are meant to spark discussion more so than be a model for laws going forward.

Economic Checkup

Fed Chair Yellen testified before House Financial Services this morning for the Federal Reserve's bi-annual Monetary Policy Report. These appearances allow Yellen to explain the Fed's, actually the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC)'s, analysis and projections regarding America's economic performance as well as to signal the factors underlying its actions in the months ahead.

The rate change in December 2015 was the first time the Fed raised rates since 2006 -- some worry that even a modest increase in rates at this juncture would further slow already limited economic growth after years of uncertainty.

The Basics

The bottom line: the FOMC won't rollback rates in March and it's not likely to raise them either. The Fed likes what it sees in the labor market, wage growth looks strong, and emerging market missteps continue to be a threat to the US economy but perhaps not an immediate one. The next rate move is almost certain to be an increase but it could wait until June or later.

Yellen reiterated much of the FOMC statement from last month: the labor market remains strong, but shows some signs of remaining slack, that the low inflation we have seen is caused by "transitory" effects (low energy prices), and that global market uncertainty creates some level of risk for slow growth at home and abroad. Though Yellen did not make a prediction on how long these transitory market effects would last, a number of forecasts for oil prices show the dip lasting through 2016.

Expanding on global growth issues, Yellen said "These developments, if they prove persistent, could weigh on the outlook for economic activity and the labor market, although declines in longer-term interest rates and oil prices could provide some offset," she added: "Foreign economic developments, in particular, pose risks to US economic growth."

Partisan Review

The GOP is generally critical of "accommodative" (lower) Fed rates. High-net-worth individuals benefit the most from high rates through dividends and interest from savings. Low rates allow more growth for the middle- and lower-classes at the risk of inflation, tacitly supporting Democrats' progressive fiscal policy goals. Some conservative economists have gone so far as to blame low interest rates pushed by the Fed in the 1990's for the market meltdown in 2007, claiming that cheap credit was the cause of the overheated housing market.

Strong Labor Market

Discussing the labor market in greater detail, Yellen pointed to the cumulative increase in employment since 2010 of 13 million jobs. The rate in January fell to 4.9 percent, 0.8 points below its level one year ago; measures of labor market conditions such as the number of people who are working part-time but want to move to full-time positions and the number of individuals who want to work but haven't searched recently are also decreasing steadily. Regarding these broader labor market indicators Yellen testified that "… these measures remain above the levels seen prior to the recession, suggesting that some slack in labor markets remains. Thus, while labor market conditions have improved substantially, there is still room for further sustainable improvement."

Forward Guidance

As always, Yellen was careful not to give hints on what the Fed is planning to do in future meetings; speaking on the path forward for the Fed Funds rate Yellen said "Of course, monetary policy is by no means on a preset course. The actual path of the federal funds rate will depend on what incoming data tell us about the economic outlook, and we will regularly reassess what level of the federal funds rate is consistent with achieving and maintaining maximum employment and 2 percent inflation."

Yellen was asked about the chances of the FOMC rolling back the rate hike it announced in December: "I do not expect the FOMC is going to be soon in the situation where it's necessary to cut rates If the FOMC delayed the start of policy normalization for too long, it might have to tighten policy relatively abruptly in the future to keep the economy from overheating and inflation from significantly overshooting its objective. Such an abrupt tightening could increase the risk of pushing the economy into recession."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Comment on Dodd-Frank

During the Q&A portion of her testimony, Yellen was asked about financial regulation, both in terms of breaking up the banks and enforcing the regulations brought on by Dodd-Frank.

In response to being asked if the Fed is trying to break up the banks, she responded: "We are using our powers to make sure that a systemically important institution could fail, and it would not have systemic consequences for the country." Her answer was interesting, because she's not outright saying the banks will be broken up or reduced, just that the Fed is trying to ensure that even if they did fail, it wouldn't negatively effect the economy.

Yellen was also asked about the burden of new Dodd-Frank regulations on banks. She responded: "For our part, we're focused on doing everything that we conceivably can to minimize and reduce the burden on these banking organizations. We've been conducting an EGRPRA review to identify potential burdens that our regulations impose." An EGRPRA review is connected to the Economic Growth and Regulatory Paperwork Reduction Act, which requires regulations imposed on financial institutions to be reviewed by the agencies at least once every 10 years. The purpose is to prevent burdensome regulations that could hinder a bank's ability to serve its customers.

The Bottom Line

Fed watchers make their living by trying to predict what the FOMC will or won't do at their meetings, and on days when Yellen is scheduled to testify before Congress you can bet that they're listening intently. While Yellen was careful not to project the Fed's moves, the general sentiment in the markets is that FOMC won't be raising rates at its March meeting. The CME Group FedWatch tool, which estimates FOMC rate hikes based on its futures prices, predicts a 95% probability that the Fed will maintain its current rate target in March. Some forecasters go even further -- expecting that the funds rate won't be raised all year.

Traders see the ongoing economic struggles of emerging economies, particularly in China, as evidence that the Fed won't continue with its scheduled 4 rate hikes this year. Certainly, considering the testimony today that 1) continued emerging market uncertainty can weigh down the US economy and 2) that poor performance in the US economy would cause the Fed to change course on its rate hike schedule, a link between poor emerging market performance and fewer Fed rate hikes seems plausible. Certainly the trading on Fed fund futures indicates that the markets believe this is the case.

Today, President Obama submitted his eighth and final budget proposal to Congress. It tops the $4 trillion mark for the first time. Despite the historical tendency for lame duck presidential budgets to be treated as scrap paper -- this one won't even be accorded the courtesy of a hearing in House Budget -- there are a few noteworthy proposals and initiatives which, if nothing else, are likely to generate discussion on the Hill and off.

That's the real purpose of this budget -- to help frame the debate in 2016 about where America is headed what the nation's priorities should be. A number of the proposals in this budget resonate with issues and themes already being debated. Candidates in particular seeking to emphasize support for or opposition to the President have a new set of proposals at their disposal.

What is new and noteworthy in the White House budget and what's next for it? Detail below.

Special thanks to those of you in NH tonight. Fingers crossed and stay tuned this way:

The Obama Administration put forth a myriad of budget proposals revolving around a variety of issues. Below are thoughts on some of the most significant of these from a fiscal and financial regulatory perspective:

- $10/Barrel Transportation Tax

A perennial favorite of Democrats has made a return in the Obama budget: a $10.25 per barrel tax on oil, $319 billion in revenue from which will go toward funding "a 21st Century Clean Transportation Plan to upgrade the nation's transportation system, improve resilience and reduce emissions." The proposed tax is a simplified version of "carbon taxation" policies, which aim to tax energy producers and oil companies based on the level of pollution they produce; "cap and trade" was a similar policy idea but with more complicated implementation.

The tax will be phased in over five years and levied against oil companies, with the revenue to help fund clean energy initiatives like expanding high-speed rail systems and also to increase national infrastructure spending. The appeal of this flat-tax on oil is its simplicity –- there is nothing complicated about charging oil companies $10.25 per barrel of oil, meaning there's no way for them to shirk the charge.

Supporting the tax would lend candidates some environmental bonafides, but might be seen as a backdoor tax on the middle-class. Though paid for by oil companies, the price is expected to be passed along to consumers through higher prices. The tax is expected to increase the price of gasoline by 25 cents per gallon.

• Funding Fin. Reg. Like it Matters

Obama proposes to double the budget for Wall Street regulators SEC and CFTC over ten years, beginning with an 11 percent increase for SEC and 32 percent for CFTC in 2017. Clinton has a lot to like in this particular section – she's the only candidate who has defended Dodd-Frank and is campaigning on proposals to strengthen current regulations, including through greater budgets for regulatory agencies. Leaders for both regulators have complained that their responsibilities far outstrip their budget.

The proposal is more realistic than the oil tax, although not necessarily something that will definitely be enacted. The SEC has called for increased funding recently. SEC chairman Mary Jo White asked at a House Financial Services Committee hearing in November for $1.8 billion in funding for fiscal 2017. In a time when Republicans are looking to reduce regulatory burdens against banks, an increase in regulators' budgets highlights the difference in priorities on Wall Street.

• Boosting R and D

The budget increases R&D funding by four percent for a total of $152 billion in 2017; among changes are a doubling of clean energy research and funding a $1 billion cancer "Moonshot" research program aimed at eliminating the disease.

• Apprenticeship Training Fund

The budget establishes a $2 billion mandatory Apprenticeship Training Fund – meant to double the number of apprenticeships across the United States. Only HRC has talked about the need for increasing the number of apprenticeships in the country during the election, favoring a tax-credit policy rather than direct funding.

Congressional Prospects

Obama's proposal is not only a prelude to battle. Lawmakers and the administration will have to strike some sort of deal to keep the government running when the current fiscal year ends on Sept. 30 — most likely a continuing resolution to keep the lights on through the election and early into 2017. In a sign that Obama isn't looking for a knock-down spending fight this year, the president's proposal abides by the discretionary caps for fiscal 2017 set by last year's bipartisan budget deal.

Congressional leadership may have a fight on its hands even without Obama making waves – if the Freedom Caucus membership decides to make its displeasure on the budget known then it could cause rancor amongst the GOP. In a year when the party is desperate to project an image of capable leadership, in part by passing a complete budget for the first time since 1997, a blow-up between Ryan and the back-benchers would amount to nothing less than catastrophe.

At a more granular level, Obama's blueprint is a grab-bag of Democratic priorities. The administration is once again calling for expanding early education in his 2017 budget, asking for more pre-K grants, a child care expansion and a small boost to Head Start. The budget boosts spending for Obamacare Medicaid expansion by $2.6 billion over a decade, designed to be an enticement to the 19 holdout states that have yet to take effect.

Republicans and the Budget

The Republicans have a different plan for the budget this year, naturally. Speaker Ryan has stated that he intends to pass the budget and all 12 appropriations through the house -- a feat that hasn't been accomplished in two decades.

stated that he intends to pass the budget and all 12 appropriations through the house - a feat that hasn't been accomplished since 1997. Although Ryan and the GOP House leadership hope to gain the faith of the American people back by bringing about the return of regular order, they face a tight calendar and the political implications of an election year -- not to mention internal opposition in the form of the Freedom Caucus. Should the back-benchers feel their concerns aren't being adequately addressed, they may try to disrupt the passage of appropriations bills. The care and feeding of these members on budget matters may be turn out to be one of the toughest challenges Ryan will face this year.

Forms of Reform under Discussion

• Comprehensive -- Defined as involving a bipartisan trade-off between lowering taxes and broadening the base; closing exemptions, deductions, credits, etc. Both Democratic candidates have outlined plans to reduce loopholes, such as the "Romney loophole" and the "Bermuda loophole," which allow very rich Americans to avoid paying their fair share.

• Corporate -- Many of the issues with the corporate tax system could be addressed through international tax reform, because so many companies earn capital abroad. However, corporate tax reform at home deals with issues like taxing dividends and leveling the playing field between small and large businesses.

• International - Deals with foreign earnings of American firms abroad. Specifically, current international tax reform aims at preventing inversions and coming up with a more successful way to tax foreign capital earned by American companies, as well as finding ways to encourage companies to move profits home from abroad.

Forums for Tax Reform

• Ways & Means: Kevin Brady became Chair of the Committee in November 2015. He reportedly hopes to have an international tax reform proposal out of Ways and Means this year. He says he wants to allow American companies to bring their foreign profits back and invest at home and to lower the corporate tax rate to less than 20 percent.

Brady gave the opening statement at a hearing on “Reaching America’s Potential.” For what it's worth, he laid out six goals for his committee in the coming months -- and they are ambitious:

> · Tax reforms to boost investment and job creation;
> · Welfare reforms to help more people join the workforce and achieve the American dream.
> · Health reforms to truly make health care more affordable and accessible;
> · Trade expansion to open more foreign markets to American goods and services;
> · Entitlement reforms to strengthen Medicare and Social Security for the long haul and;
> · Government reforms to boost efficiency and effectiveness instead of stifling jobs and higher wages.

Brady’s statement that tax reform will come up in the coming weeks, coupled with Ryan’s recent visit with Obama (specifically to find areas of cooperation), may indicate a broad-based reform package making its way forward in 2016. Another interesting bullet point is trade expansion, despite McConnell’s promise that TPP won’t be voted on before November.

• Senate Finance: The Senate Finance Committee has its focus set on bipartisan working groups designed to produce tax reform on multiple levels -- individual, corporate, and international. However, there have been many challenges and stalemates along the way because of the stringent partisanship currently ailing the Senate.

This election has been defined, more so than others, by the massively diverse set of tax policies proposed by each candidates – from flat taxes, capital gains reforms, financial transaction taxes and more. Sen. Hatch, Chair of Finance, has already called for reform efforts in 2016, targeting international corporate rates specifically – but it’s possible that Brady is trying to shift him and others toward more ambitious proposals. Any high profile move Ryan makes here will likely be a controlling factor on tax policy.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

• Between the Branches -- Speaker Ryan and Pres. Obama met yesterday to discuss a variety of issues, one of which was related to the Earned Income Tax Credit. Both hope to expand the credit to include low-earning workers who DON'T have children. It's unclear how successful their cooperation will be, but at the very least, they share a common goal.

Politico portrayed the meeting as campaign kabuki: “Rather than cut any deals with Obama, Ryan’s hoping to spend 2016 developing what he’s calling a detailed GOP agenda on poverty, taxes, health care and other issues he’s hoping will factor into the presidential campaign and provide a blueprint for House Republicans as they grapple with a new president next year.” It’s not surprising to see this given the pressure this election will put on the new Speaker. He needs to set a strong foundation for his own future, and helping Obama score a tax touchdown on him is not on the top of his list of objectives.

During a statement before he met with Obama, Ryan said “We will take our conservative principles and we will apply those conservative principles to the problems of the day to offer our fellow citizens solutions to the problems in their daily lives …. These are not going to be things that we will be able to accomplish with this president still in the White House. It is an agenda for what we will do next year with a Republican president to get our country back on track. This is what 2016’s all about. It’s going to be a year of ideas.”

Political Realities

William Gale and Aaron Krupkin, researchers at Brookings, recently wrote a paper titled “Major Tax Issues in 2016;” Keeping in mind both the current political climate and the probable environment for legislation in 2016, the two researchers write that “Comprehensive tax reform is easy to talk about, but hard to do. The pursuit of sweeping tax simplification is a noble goal, but quixotic.”

At the end of the day 2016 is an election year and any legislative proposals that come forward during it will reflect that. There are many exciting possibilities for tax reform in 2016, but there is also no reason to think that the political gridlock that has defined Washington for so long will ease up enough while both parties vie for control of the country by drawing contests.

Mike & Co. --

Congratulations, team. Last night's narrow win in Iowa provided a big moral victory and took some of the win out of the challenger's sails. It also means that, for at least several weeks, the Democratic nomination contest will continue apace. And it is likely that Wall Street regulation will likely remain one the campaign's central issues.

At the heart of this debate is the Dodd-Frank Act (DFA). Public opinion is still influenced in the main by memories of the 2008 financial crisis and the recession that followed, so the candidates' views on DFA get special attention.

Below, we re-examine these views and try to clear up the misconceptions that make it hard for voters to identify the candidate best able to defend the protections that DFA provides millions of American consumers, investors, and workers.

Best,

Dana

The assertion that DFA doesn't do enough to rein in Wall Street has become some sort of progressive shibboleth that as misleading as it is short-sighted and self-defeating.

Polling shows the American public believes strong financial regulation is critically needed (74 percent of Democrats, 56 percent Independents, 46 percent Republicans, 64 percent all voters). Polling has also shown that 66 percent of Americans are either "not very familiar" with or have "never heard of" Dodd-Frank. It is difficult for reasonable dialogue to be conducted in an environment made up of strong support for regulatory reform on one hand and a lack of knowledge of what is in DFA on the other.

Any public debate on DFA is hampered by the complexity of the issues involved. Additionally, there is a perception that it has failed in its objectives. Beyond the fact that the law isn't even fully implemented, major financial institutions have already begun restructuring in ways that indicate the law is working properly. But how many voters know this?

Has Dodd-Frank Worked?

The Great Recession and the resulting Dodd-Frank Act changed the trajectory of the financial industry. The law isn't perfect but it is having a stabilizing effect. Some of the biggest firms on Wall Street -- MetLife, CitiGroup, General Electric -- have shrunk since the law was enacted and as a direct result of its regulations. Those that haven't shrunk are under even more pressure to break up or reduce their size now than they were before Dodd-Frank.

The candidates are split concerning whether or not DFA is an full and sufficient model for regulating financial markets. While HRC wants to preserve and protect the progress made by DFA while bolstering certain parts of the law, while Sanders considers the law to be well intentioned yet deeply flawed. However, questions should be raised about judging the DFA's efficacy right now - each candidate is forming an opinion on the act despite the fact that DFA hasn't even reached maturity yet - only about 70 percent of DFA provisions have been implemented. Beyond the implementation gap is the issue that the results of financial reform cannot be seen overnight. A piece of legislation as large and multifaceted as Dodd-Frank might take a decade to ripen.

Even as the greatest effects of DFA remain to be see, recent events indicate that DFA is working as it was intended to. Any candidate who claims that DFA is in need of major overhaul needs to answer this question: What pressing need is there to overturn a law that has, to this point, largely accomplished its overarching objectives?

2016 Candidates and Dodd-Frank

The candidates in this year's primaries have given voters two choices: stick with Dodd-Frank and add some tweaks or repeal it/change it fundamentally. There is only one candidate in the former group - HRC. Every other candidate, including Bernie Sanders, intends to greatly change Dodd-Frank, or get rid of it all together, if elected. With that choice in mind, it is necessary to remember how monumental Dodd-Frank was and the political climate that it was passed in - one with a Democratic majority in both houses.

DFA enjoyed widespread support in the years immediately following its passage; Clinton needs to ring the alarm bells that her opponents intend to kill off an effective tool for regulating Wall Street for the sake of trying out unproven strategies that are built more on ideology than policy.

Obviously, most Republican candidates would prefer to do away with Dodd-Frank completely as it is greatly disliked by their biggest supporters. Bernie Sanders proposes something similar to Glass-Steagall, but also wants to create a list of the banks that are "too-big-too-fail" and "break them up." He outlined his intentions in legislation he proposed to Congress back in May 2015. Bloomberg Politics notes, "Similar to legislation he introduced in previous years, when Democrats controlled the U.S. Senate, the bill has little chance of advancing."

So voters can decide on strengthening a law that is already working to reign in Wall Street's risks or abandoning it for either less regulation or poorly aimed regulations. Considering the historical record of these other reform ideas, how can voters be expected to take those suggestions seriously?

The federal budget, deficits, and the debt have not yet gotten much air play yet this campaign. But if we lifted up the car hood, what would we see? What is our medium-long term fiscal outlook, what would the impact on it of the candidates' proposals be, and what fiscal issues are most likely to arise in the primary debate?

CBO 10-year Deficit Projections

The CBO reported last week that it expects the annual deficit to grow from its current $450 billion to $1.3 trillion by 2016. Candidates issuing calls for increased spending, against this backdrop, may be called to account.

Perhaps in recognition of this, both HRC and Sen. Sanders have recently and admirably detailed how they would use executive actions to enact parts of their revenue packages without Congressional support. Both have proposed extensive new spending plans as part of their primary platform. however, it may be time for the candidates to get serious about the fiscal viability of these plans from a fiscal perspective.

Clinton -- Fiscal Stimulus?

HRC has proposed a tax package that will raise federal revenue by $500 billion over ten years, to be used for a $350 billion “College Compact” plan, for tax deductions on health care spending, and to fund an ambitious infrastructure investment package. Her spending plans are split between those which provide short-term economic stimulus and those which are aimed at providing longer-term boost. Her $250 billion plan to increase infrastructure investment in the country – paid for by reviving the “Build America Bonds” program and federal revenue -- works on two fronts.

First, hiring middle-class workers in construction, engineering, and the trades the plan puts more money into the hands of people who tend to spend that money quickly. Second, improving roads, bridges, and tunnels in America the plan will make future transport of goods more reliable, speedy, and safe, all calculated to spur economic growth.

The “College Compact” aims to forgive student loans, lower college tuition, and make community colleges tuition-free. By removing the burden of debt from young graduates, HRC hopes to free those people up to begin consuming at a higher rate. The current home-ownership rate for young Americans is distressingly low largely due to their debt burden after college, HRC would rather young Americans take debt on in an equity-building purchase than spend thirty years repaying their college degree.

The Sanders Health Care Tax Bill

Sanders’ $14 trillion spending plan, his “Medicare for All” proposal, would require the single largest tax hike in the nation’s history, bringing taxes on the wealthy to levels not seen since Reagan. These taxes, the size of which already makes them non-starters even among Democrats in Congress, are to be used to enact single-payer healthcare legislation – legislation which didn't even get a vote during a Democratic majority in Obama's first term.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Sanders must hope that the economic efficiency of a single-payer health care plan, which finds its savings in the reduced role of middle-men and insurance companies, will result in savings passed onto Americans – Americans who will, in their turn, spend those savings in the economy at large.

He has found political success in his promise to make colleges and universities in America tuition-free. The impetus behind this plan is similar to that of Mrs. Clinton – students with lower debt burdens are going to spend a greater portion of their income on food and entertainment, as well as on equity-investments like homes.

Campaign Impact

The CBO's federal budget projections released last week indicated that the annual federal deficit will grow to $1.3 trillion by 2026. It's unlikely that the CBO report will be linked to the candidates' spending plans in any meaningful way. And to be fair, each candidate has put forward proposals to raise revenue equivalent to the costs of their plans (or at least to the extent that their own analyses can be trusted); this is often a rarity amongst politicians running for office and they should be applauded for doing so. Because of this, both campaigns can claim that their proposals will not raise the federal deficit – it's unlikely that those claims will remain unchallenged in the future.

Tax Foundation Analysis

Recent analyses by the Tax Foundation, a group which uses dynamic scoring methods to judge revenue, have found that Clinton's plan will reduce economic output by 1 percent over a decade, while Sanders' proposals will lower GDP by a staggering 9.5 percent. Dynamic scoring is a controversial method of analyzing revenue estimates – it takes into account the supposed deleterious effects caused by tax increases and attempts to adjust growth the reflect those effects.

A CRS report published in 2014, however, stated that "A review of statistical evidence suggests that both labor supply and savings and investment are relatively insensitive to tax rates."

While each campaign will be inclined to argue that any analysis which mentions economic contraction as an effect of their plans is based on improper economics, it may not matter to voters whether they're right or not. American voters have always been tax-averse but will pay for what they want. Maybe the biggest yet-unanswered question: do they want another overhaul of he nation's healthcare enough to pay a new record in tax increases?

Dear Mike & Co.,

Pre-primary endorsements from Party leaders in tight contests are rare and sometimes understated. To wit, President Obama remarks this week that HRC is as prepared to be president as any non-Vice President as anyone: “I think that what Hillary presents is a recognition that translating values into governance and delivering the goods is ultimately the job of politics, making a real-life difference to people in their day-to-day lives.”

Yesterday, House Democratic leader Nancy starting doing precisely that, assessing the centerpiece of Sanders' platform: "He's talking about a single-payer, and that's not going to happen. I mean, does anybody in this room think that we're going to be discussing a single-payer? ... We're not running on any platform of raising taxes."

Far from the cauldron of Congress and the icy campaign trail was an announcement by the Fed with implications for the overall economy and for the election year ahead. More on the Fed's statement and its implications below.

The Fed's Statement

The Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) of the Federal Reserve decided yesterday not to raise rates in January. Last month, the Fed voted to raise interest rates for the first time in nine years, setting its rate target between 0.25 and 0.5 percent. Today's statement reaffirmed this decision, noting that recent market turbulence had not stayed the Fed from its plan to continue “only gradual increases in the federal funds rate.” Speculation and hope are rife that the FOMC will hold off raising rates in March and wait until June.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But the statement today indicated no change in the Fed's plan for previously outlined rate increases, four 0.25 percent increases this year, with total increases of one percent this year and next. However, the FOMC is largely comprised of dovish voters, who may change tack if current market corrections continue.

Market Reaction

The Dow Jones Industrial average is down from 17.759 on December 16 to 15,951 today; the S&P 500 has declined from 2,073 to 1,879 over the same period. The Fed however expressed confidence in continuing economic growth, calling low inflation and the decline in energy prices "transitory" and predicting 2 percent inflation in the medium-term as energy prices rise again.

In a nod to beleaguered investors, the Committee wrote that it "... is closely monitoring global economic and financial developments and is assessing their implications for the labor market and inflation, and for the balance of risks to the outlook." So the Fed has, unusually, acknowledged the global scope of its deliberations. FOMC also indicated a focus on "labor market indicators [which] will continue to strengthen."

For now, though inflation is running just 0.4 percent, well below its two percent target, the Fed has not disavowed its plan to raise rates four times this year. This cannot be welcome to global equine markets. Domestic and global capital markets have already lost roughly ten percent since the December rate hike. Fed policy may be having a decelerating effect on growth and so could be a marginal drag on Democratic prospects.

New FOMC Members

The FOMC is made up of rotating board of seven voting members taken from Board of Governors members as well as regional bank officials; these members rotate on an annual basis at the first meeting of each year. The 2016 committee members are listed below (identified as"hawks," those favoring tight monetary policy or "doves," supporting more accommodative policy).

- Janet L. Yellen , Board of Governors, Chair (dove)
- William C. Dudley , New York, Vice Chair (dove)
- Lael Brainard , Board of Governors (dove)
- James Bullard , St. Louis (hawk)
- Stanley Fischer , Board of Governors (hawk)
- Esther L. George , Kansas City (hawk)
-

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Loretta J. Mester , Cleveland (hawk)

- Jerome H. Powell , Board of Governors (swing)
- Eric Rosengren , Boston (dove)
- Daniel K. Tarullo , Board of Governors (dove)

New members this year are James Bullard, Esther George, Loretta Mester, and Eric Rosengren. The FOMC consists of 12 voting members, with two nominees awaiting Senate confirmation. A shift in the balance of power between hawks and doves may occur but the doves hold a slim majority for now.

Code Breaking

Fed watchers have made an art form out of reading between the lines of these policy releases, even the most benign of which can cause huge swings in markets (the Dow dropped over 200 points in the wake of today's release). Fed statements are famously difficult to parse but one point was unmistakable: the Fed is keeping a close eye on the labor market -- employment and participation rates, wages, etc. -- as a leading indicator for inflation and overall growth perhaps more than any other variable.

Campaign Consequences

None of the candidates has commented on today's release, not surprisingly, but the policy may draw ire from some on the right, who oppose fiat rate-targeting (though it took no action today) and the left, where lowering rather than raising rate is preferred (except for holders of fixed income securities).

Sen. Sanders, true to his reputation of standing far outside the Democratic fold, has long opposed the Fed for being too involved with the bankers they are meant to be regulating. Sanders has called for reform measures at the Fed, including prohibiting people serving on bank boards from serving on the Fed at the same time.

The Fed was confident that economic growth would continue on its steady pace, indicating strength in labor markets and downplaying both financial market reactions and diving commodities prices. The FOMC sets monetary policy on a long-term basis; the full ramifications of their decisions aren't felt until months or years out, so any contention that the economy is strong enough to handle higher interest rates is essentially an endorsement of macroeconomic policy in the last few years. Democratic candidates will need to hammer this point home - but it is yet to be seen if voters will understand the message that Democratic policies are responsible for the sunny outlook for the American economy, especially compared to Western Europe, Latin America, and Asia.

Below is the first sentence of the FOMC statement from yesterday, edited to reflect changes from last month's statement:

> For ~~immediate release~~release at 2:00 p.m. EST
> Information received since the Federal Open Market Committee met in ~~Octo~~December suggests that ~~economic activity has been expanding at a moderate pace~~labor market conditions improved further even as economic growth slowed late last year. Household spending and business fixed investment have been increasing at ~~solid~~moderate rates in recent months, and the housing sector has improved further; however, net exports have been soft and inventory investment slowed. A range of recent labor market indicators, including ~~ongoi~~strong job gains~~ and declining unemployment, shows further improvement and confirms that underutilization of labor resources has diminished appreciably since early this year~~, points to some additional decline in underutilization of labor resources. Inflation has continued to run below the Committee's 2 percent longer-run objective, partly reflecting declines in energy prices and in prices of non-energy imports. Market-based measures of inflation compensation ~~remain low; some~~declined further; survey-based measures of

First Full Day of Health Care March from Pennsylvania to D.C. Draws Crowds, Offers Hope

Eight-Day March Honoring Victim of Insurance Company Greed Crosses First State Line, Heads to Washington with a Message: Get it Done. Get it Right

After a rousing send-off in Philadelphia on Wednesday, the "March to the Finish Line for Melanie" – an eight-day walk to Washington, DC in honor of one health reform advocate – hit the road to meet up with fellow survivors of insurance company greed and carry their stories to Congress.

Melanie Shouse was a tireless campaigner for health care reform for all Americans. She recently lost her battle with breast cancer after her insurance company refused to pay for the treatment her doctors said she needed. The marchers will be bringing Melanie's message to Congress the day before President Obama's Health Care Summit that not one more person should have to suffer or die for lack of health care in our country. It's time to get it done and get it done right. Congress must deliver the change people voted for.

The marchers include Antoinette Kraus, whose sister, a veteran, has more than $40,000 in medical debt and Bill West, whose family rates have gone up 48 percent because his son has a chronic condition. Later in the day on Wednesday, they shared their stories with others who braved a bitterly cold night for a Candlelight Vigil at Taylor Hospital in Ridley Park.

Upcoming stops include:

Rally for Health Insurance Reform, Newark Plaza Parking Lot, Main Street, Newark, Delaware Friday, Feb. 19, 4:00 p.m.

- Rally for Health Insurance Reform, Park Moving and Storage, 1537 S. Philadelphia Blvd, Aberdeen, Maryland Saturday, February 20, 4:00 p.m.
- Candlelight vigil, Eastern Family Resource Center, 9100 Franklin Square Dr., Baltimore, Sunday, February 21, 6:00 p.m.
- Rally with nationally renowned author Taylor Branch, 5603 N. Charles St, Baltimore, Monday, February 22, 12:00 p.m.
- Rally in College Park, Nyumburu Cultural Center, Tuesday, February 23, 7:00 p.m.

Dear Friend,

noshutdown.jpg

I had hoped that Congress would have come to its senses by now, but they haven't. Republicans continue to threaten an irresponsible and painful shutdown of the federal government, continuing to play political chicken with thousands of jobs in Colorado--and too many basic functions of government we all rely on to even list them all.

Sign our petition: tell Republicans in Congress to back off their threats.

A government shutdown would do tremendous harm to, among many other areas, our nation's education system. The federal Department of Education estimates that even a brief shutdown would force 94% of the department employees off the job. Pell Grants and federal student loan processing could slow to a crawl without employees to do the work.

The longer a shutdown goes on, the worse it could get. The Department of Education estimates "a protracted delay in Department obligations and payments beyond one week would severely curtail the cash flow to school districts, colleges and universities, and vocational rehabilitation agencies that depend on the Department to support their services." [1]

Education is just one of the many ways ordinary Americans will suffer if Republicans succeed with their irresponsible threats to shut down the government over Obamacare. A new poll from USA TODAY this week reveals that only 25% of Coloradans actually want Republicans to kill Obamacare. Why would Republicans make these irresponsible threats against all Americans to appease only 25%? This is just plain wrong.

Sign our petition right now: tell the Colorado congressional delegation that you oppose any attempt to shut down the federal government to score political points. This week, we will deliver your names and comments to every member of Congress from our state. Thanks for standing with us--and standing up for what's right--at this critical moment.

Sincerely,

Amy Runyon-Harms

ORGANIZING for ACTION

John --

In just a few days, we're closing the books on the first real test of this organization.

We'll know just how many people stepped up to be part of some once-in-a-generation fights.

John, are you one of those people?

Make a donation of $5 or more to become a founding member of OFA today.

If you're serious about supporting the President's agenda and making change in the next four years, this is the perfect time to make it known. None of us can sit back and just hope Congress acts.

Once the deadline closes on the first quarter this Sunday, we'll have a record of the founding members of this organization -- the first people who raised their hands and said, "I'm ready, and I want to help build this."

Don't miss your chance to be one of them. Chip in $5 or more today:

PATRIOTIC MILLIONAIRES

Dear John,

Independence Day is just two days away, but before the holiday weekend we have just a little more work to do.

Right now, President Obama is considering an executive order that would help fight some of the corruption unleashed by Citizens United.

Time and time again, the President has spoken against the influence of dark money and called for better politics. Now, the time for words is over, the time for action is now. Call the White House today and tell President Obama to sign the executive order.

Dial 1-855-980-5638 to reach White House switchboard. (You may briefly be put on hold or directed to another line. Please be patient!)

When you are connected with an operator, introduce yourself and then use this short script:

“The president was right when he called for a ‘better politics’ during his State of the Union address. But the time for words is over. For the Fourth of July, the president should declare our government’s independence from dark money by signing an executive order requiring federal contractors to disclose their political spending.”

After you call, you can reply to this email to let us know how it went.

The White House has a team of operators whose duty is to answer calls from concerned citizens like you and convey up the chain of command what the public is saying.

Today, let’s make sure those operators receive the unmistakable message that the unrelenting movement against Citizens United supports an executive order to drag federal contractors dark campaign money into the light.

Please call the White House right away: 1-855-980-5638.

Thanks you for all you do,

Erik Altieri

Dan - I will send her the statement and press plan so we can present in one document.

I have a new thought on potential interviewer - Maria Elena Salinas of Univision.

I would bill it as an interview on college affordability and she would ask her a few questions on emails.

As you all know, I had hoped that we could use the "server moment" as an opportunity for her to be viewed as having take a big step to deal with the email problem that would best position us for what is ahead. It is clear that she is not in same place (unless John has a convo with her and gets her in a different place).

Accepting that, I think Univision is best chance for success. We have momentum coming out of Jeb's women's health comment and their bad debate. A Univision interview will be viewed as more offense and show that she is confident and not rattled.

How does that strike folks?

Revised. Please take another quick look as I think we should get to her asap. Two questions:
1) What do we do about Powell? Here I've mirrored language from the Q&A, which says "consistent with the practice of prior Secretaries of State," but are we comfortable with that?
2) Am i sending her this and the spox statement or Jen, so you want to do that? Either way, we'll need to explain the two options.

When I arrived at the State Department in early 2009, I immediately got to work rebuilding America's tarnished global reputation and take on pressing challenges in nearly every region of the world. At the time, using a personal account seemed convenient. Previous Secretaries of State had used personal email accounts with no problems.

We are looking forward to welcoming you to this year's Planned Parenthood Leadership Council Conference, later this week in New York City.

The conference will start on Thursday evening with a welcome reception in the Regency Room on Mezzanine Level at the Grand Hyatt from 5:00pm to 7:00pm. Please feel free to drop by for a glass of wine and a bite to eat and to say hello to other attendees.

On Friday, the Leadership Council Conference registration and breakfast will open at 7:30am in the Grand Hyatt ballroom. Opening remarks will begin at 8:30am. You'll be hearing throughout the day about Planned Parenthood's most important work, as we enter the organization's Second Century. The day will end with a closing reception at the Hyatt from 5-6pm.

A full schedule for the events is attached.

Important Reminder: As with all of Planned Parenthood's national events, our security protocols require that each person bring a government issued, photo ID with them. We appreciate your understanding of this important requirement.

We are all looking forward to seeing you next week. If you have any questions, please contact Lucy Eilbacher at lucy.eilbacher@ppfa.org or (212) 261-4608.

Subject: Henry Giroux on Exile as a Space of Disruption in the Academy empowered by salsa

Exile as a Space of Disruption in the Academy
by Henry Giroux

How can one not be in exile working in academia, especially if one refuses the cliques, mediocrity, hysterical forms of resentment, backbiting, and endless production of irrelevant, if not sometimes unethical, research that increasingly has come to characterize the corporate university? The spaces of retreat from public life now occupy too many institutions of higher education and have transformed them into dead zones of the imagination mixed with a kind of brutalizing defense of their own decaying postures and search for status and profits. Leadership in too many academic departments is empty, disempowering, and insular, lacking any outward vision or sense of social responsibility. Mimicking the instrumental logic of a business culture, too many administrators lack the vision, totality of knowledge, or will to address what role the university should play in a democracy. Too many individuals are tied to endless committees, overwhelmed by the mediocrity they or others endorse, and fearful of anyone who steps outside of the boundaries of bureaucratic conformity and civility. Excellence has become part of an empty recruiting slogan that has little do with the actual work or scholarship of faculty who are often punished or resented for such work.

Exile is not a prescription or rationale for cynicism, nor is it a retreat from one's role as an informed and engaged faculty member. On the contrary, it is a space of possibility where the reality of the university as defined by the culture of business and a reductive instrumental rationality can be challenged by a view of the university as a public good, one that expands and deepens relations of power among faculty, administrators, and students while redefining the mission of the university.

One thing is clear: The retreat from the ethical and political imagination in higher education in too many countries has become legion. Little is being done to address the army of subaltern labor that has become the new poor in higher education and elsewhere. Moreover, faculty are increasingly told that the most important register of scholarship is grant writing over and against activities of teaching, community engagement, or other forms of public scholarship. In addition, students are constantly being told that they should feel good instead of working hard and focusing while being burdened, at the same time, with an insufferable amount of financial debt. Too many academics no longer ask students what they think but how they feel. Everyone wants to be a happy consumer. When students are told that all that matters is feeling good, and that feeling uncomfortable is alien to learning itself, the critical nature of teaching and learning is compromised.

This is an academic version of the Dr. Phil show where infantilized pedagogies prove to be as demeaning to students as they are to professors. Professors are now increasingly expected to take on the role of therapists speaking in terms of comfort zones but are rarely offered support for the purpose of empowering students to confront difficult problems, examine hard truths, or their own prejudices. This is not to suggest that students should feel lousy while learning or that educators shouldn't care about their students. To the contrary, caring in the most productive sense means providing students with the knowledge, skills, and theoretical rigor that offers them the kinds of intellectual challenges to engage and take risks in order to make critical connections and develop a sense of agency where they learn to think for themselves and become critical and responsible citizens. Students should feel good through their capacity to grow intellectually, emotionally, and ethically with others rather than being encouraged to retreat from difficult educational engagements. Caring also means that faculty share an important responsibility to protect students from conditions that sanction hate speech, racism, humiliation, sexism, and an individual and institutional attack on their dignity.

For a range of theorists extending from Theodor Adorno to the post colonialist theorist Edward Said, exile was a central metaphor for defining the role of academics. As oppositional public intellectuals, academics played an indispensible role in Adorno's notion of critical theory and Said's work in defending the university as a crucial public sphere. They also played a crucial role in engaging culture as a site informed by mechanisms of power, and taking seriously the idea of human interdependence while living on the border — one foot in and one foot out, an exile and an insider, for whom home was always a form of homelessness. In Representations of the Intellectual, Said argued that exile referenced a space of engagement and critique, serving as both a theoretical and political reminder that educators often occupy a similar role and space where they work to "publicly raise embarrassing questions, confront orthodoxy and dogma (rather than to produce them), and refuse to be easily co-opted by governments or corporations" while offering models of social engagement that redefined the role of academics as civically engaged public intellectuals. This politically charged notion of the oppositional intellectual as homeless—in exile and living on the border, occupying a shifting and fractured pedagogical space in which critique, difference, and a utopian potentiality can endure—has provided the conceptual framework for generations of educators fighting against the deadly instrumentalism and reactionary ideologies that have shaped contemporary educational models in public schools and universities.

Under the regime of neoliberalism, too many institutions of higher education have transformed the culture of education into the culture of business and are now characterized by a withdrawal into the private and the irrelevant. In this view, education is driven largely by market forces that undermine any viable vision of education as a public good connected to wider social problems. Solidarity, rigor, public scholarship, and integrity are in short supply in many departments and are largely ignored by the new and expanding managerial class of administrators. In this context, exile is less a choice than a condition that is forced through policies of containment and procedure where contingent faculty are given short term contracts, struggle with course over loads, and bear the burden of time as a deprivation rather than a space of reflection and ownership over the conditions of their labor. Under such circumstances, exile is a state that can just as easily be manipulated to produce a key element of the neoliberal university which, as Noam Chomsky points out, is "designed to reduce labor costs and to increase labor servility."[1]

Exile in this context speaks to new forms of faculty servitude that restrict and shut down spaces for dialogue, scholarship, dissent, and quality teaching. This is a form of forced exile, one wedded to expanding faculty powerlessness and undermining any sense of autonomy. It is against this notion of oppressive exile wedded to the market driven prescription of undermining faculty power while intensifying their labor that the concept of exile has to be rethought. Instead, exile must be seen and theorized as part of a larger political and empowering discourse connected to an affective and ideological space of struggle and resistance. Less an oppressive space of containment and deskilling, exile can become the grounds for a revitalized kind of public space and activism where a new language, a new understanding of politics, and new forms of solidarity can be nurtured among the displaced — that is, among those who refuse the neoliberal machinery of social and political violence that defines education solely as a source of profit, mode of commerce, and "feel good" pedagogy. The renowned sociologist Zygmunt Bauman's comments on his notion of welcoming exile under certain circumstances should not therefore surprise us, especially in light of his own experience of marginality as a Jewish public intellectual and as a courageous exemplar of civic courage. What must be understood and emphasized here is that Bauman's position, along with that of Adorno and Said's, does not constitute a celebration of marginality. Rather, for all of these scholars, exile is an affirmation to keep going in the midst of what sometimes appears to be a deadening form of academic madness and insularity driven by forces which constantly seek to undermine the university as a democratic public sphere. Bauman writes:

> I need to admit, however, that my view of the sociologists' vocation does not necessarily overlap with the consensus of the profession. Dennis Smith has described me as an "outsider through and through." It would be dishonest of me to deny that denomination. Indeed, throughout my academic life I did not truly "belong" to any school, monastic order, intellectual camaraderie, political caucus, or interest clique. I did not apply for admission to any of them, let alone did much to deserve an invitation; nor would I be listed by any of them—at least unqualifiedly—as "one of us." I guess my claustrophobia—feeling as I do ill at ease in closed rooms, tempted to find out what is on the other side of the door—is incurable; I am doomed to remain an outsider to the end, lacking as I [do] the indispensable qualities of an academic insider: school loyalty, conformity to the procedure, and readiness to abide by the school-endorsed criteria of cohesion and consistency. And, frankly, I don't mind.[2]

While I don't want to romanticize positions of marginality and exile, they may represent some of the few spaces left in the university where one can develop a comprehensive vision of politics and social change, challenge the often deadening silos of disciplinarity, while making connections with wider social movements outside of the university. The fight for the university as a public good is essential to the development of a vibrant formative culture and democracy itself. Exile may be one of the few spaces left in neoliberal societies as democracy is pushed ever farther to the margins where individuals must learn to work together to cultivate a sense of meaningful connection, solidarity, and engaged citizenship that moves beyond an allegiance to narrow interest groups and fragmented, single issue politics. Exile might be the space where a kind of double consciousness can be cultivated that points beyond the structures of domination and repression to what the poet Claudia Rankine calls a new understanding of community, politics, and citizenship in which the social contract is revived as a kind of truce in which we allow ourselves to be flawed together. She writes:

> You want to belong, you want to be here. In interactions with others you're constantly waiting to see that they recognize that you're a human being. That they can feel your heartbeat and you can feel theirs. And that together you will live—you will live together.The truce is that. You forgive all of these moments because you're constantly waiting for the moment when you will be seen. As an equal. As just another person. As another first person. There's a letting go that comes with it. I don't know about forgiving, but it's an "I'm still here." And it's not just because I have nowhere else to go. It's because I believe in the possibility. I believe in the possibility of another way of being. Let's make other kinds of mistakes; let's be flawed differently.[3]

To be "flawed differently" works against a selfish desire for power and a sense of belonging to the often suffocating circles of certainty that define fundamentalisms of all ideological stripes. Being "flawed differently" also suggests the need to provide room for the emergence of new democratic public spheres, noisy conversations, and a kind of alternative third space informed by compassion and respect for the other. Under such circumstances, critical exchange and education matters not as a self-indulgent performance in which individuals simply interview themselves but as public acts of reaching out, a willingness to experience the other within the space of exile that heralds and precipitates a democracy to come. This would be a democracy where intellectual thought informs critique, embodies a sense of integrity, and reclaims education in the service of justice and equality.

What might it mean, then, to imagine the university as containing spaces in which the metaphor of exile provides a theoretical resource to engage in political and pedagogical work that is disruptive, transformative, and emancipatory? Such work would both challenge the mainstream notion of higher education as a kind of neoliberal factory, as well as the ideological fundamentalism that has emerged among many conservatives and some alleged progressive voices. What might it mean to address the work that we do in the university, especially with regards to teaching as a form of classroom grace– a place to think critically, ask troubling questions, and take risks, even though that may mean transgressing established norms and bureaucratic procedures?[4]

Exile is not a prescription or rationale for cynicism, nor is it a retreat from one's role as an informed and engaged faculty member. On the contrary, it is a space of possibility where the reality of the university as defined by the culture of business and a reductive instrumental rationality can be challenged by a view of the university as a public good, one that expands and deepens relations of power among faculty, administrators, and students while redefining the mission of the university. In an age of overwhelming violence, war, and oppression, universities must create formative cultures that allow students to assume the role of critically engaged citizens, informed about the ideologies, values, social relations, and institutions that bear down on their lives so that they can be challenged, changed, and held accountable. Exile in this sense is a space of critical dialogue, a posture of engaged dissent, a place filled with visions that refuse to normalize the present while imagining a more just future. It is a deeply political and moral space, one that makes education central to any viable notion of agency and politics, and works hard to create the public spaces and formative cultures that make democracy possible.

The one thing I think could be stronger is the language around the Equality Act. Shouldn't we be fighting to do five things as President, including this?

Here's what was in the HRC speech which I think was better.

I'll fight to end discrimination wherever it occurs. It's outrageous that, in 2015, you can still be fired for being gay. You can still lose your home for being gay. You can even be denied a wedding cake for being gay. And this kind of discrimination goes against everything we stand for as a country.

Congress must pass the Federal Equality Act. That law would finally outlaw discrimination against LGBT people basically everywhere – in employment, housing, public education, public accommodations, access to federal funding and credit, and in the jury system. It's a great, noble piece of legislation that deserves to become the law of the land. As President, I will fight for it. And I hope that many of you will be there with me when I sign it into law.

SC Equality has a PAC. It would be good to note that this organization is active in supporting candidates that believe in their cause and not afraid to support equality of LGBT.

Outside of Geneva, I suggest a mentioned of other work HRC did as secretary of state.

Linda Ketner and Harriet Hancock deserve a mention.

Subject: Politico questions

Hey guys:
I'm writing a story about the foundation's plans during the campaign and a potential Hillary Clinton presidency, and I was hoping you might be able to answer some questions.

1 – What was the foundation's role (and President Clinton's role) in the CareerBuilder Challenge golf tournament this past weekend?
2 – Why didn't CGI sunset after 10 years as was originally envisioned?
3 – Are there any plans to suspend or terminate CGI (or any of the foundation's other initiatives) during the campaign or a potential Clinton presidency?
4 – Are all the following events definitely still going to take place?
• 2/4/16: CGI winter meeting
• 4/1-4/3/2016: CGI U
• 6/12-6/14/2016-: CGI America
• 9/19-9/21/2016: CGI annual meeting
5 – Are both President Clinton and Chelsea Clinton going to appear at all of the above events?
6 – Is Secretary Clinton going to appear at any of the above events?
7 – What is the scope of the study the Foundation commissioned from Boston Consulting Group and when are the results expected?
8 – Is Donna Shalala expected to stay beyond the end of her contract in December?

My deadline is the end of the day Wednesday (1/27), so I appreciate anything you can get me before then.
Thanks.
Ken

John,

Happy New Year. I hope all is well with you. Congratulations on your new role--I always enjoy reading about you.

I wanted to let you know that Melanie and I have joined up to launch a new public affairs firm, Triumph Strategy . (our launch coverage)

Melanie and I would love to meet with you at a time and place that works for you to discuss the Presidential.

Specifically, we are interested in hard-hitting accountability re Jeb Bush in 2015--to create disruption sooner rather than later. While I respect the folks at Bridge and Priorities--this would be different--to create the most hard-hitting problems for the front-runner--largely around investigations, ethics and character-- which then could be utilized by both those efforts later.

Let me know if interested.

My best,

Michael

John-

Well that escalated fast.

At 2:37 PM, my former (now current) Tea Party opponent Nan Hayworth sent an email to supporters announcing she's running again.

By 3:03 PM the next day she had launched her first personal attack against me.

It took her barely 24 hours to start throwing mud. I know it feels like election cycles are starting earlier and earlier (because they are), but the truth is these Tea Party folks can do a lot of damage quickly.

They spent almost $3 million attacking me in 2012. Hayworth already has $500k in the bank, so I can't even imagine what this one's going to look like.

I know we talk about these goals all the time, but winning tough races requires executing a specific plan. I hate to ask, but I really need your help on this – can you click here to chip in $250 in the next few hours so we can hit our goal?

This is going to be a battle, John. We had the winning team in 2012 and we're going to build it again. But I need you on that team – I can't do it without you.

Thank you – seriously, thank you.

Subject: Re: PPO Delegation Request: SINGAPORE Aug 7-10

John,

Milia and I just had a call with Amanda Moose from PPO and Sam Tubman from State. Here are some answers to your questions. Give me a call if you want to talk through. I'm here at the office til 3:15 pm your time, or available on the cell after:

Passport - they are still triple checking on whether visas are necessary, but that's an easy thing.

Attire all business

Delegation may indeed be only you + Ambassador. US only has 2 seats at National Day Celebration on the 9th. Staffing: 1 protocol person, 1 briefer. Exactly the same as PDEL for Rome, though they are not certain whether anyone from DC will go--may just be folks already on the ground there.

Leave SFO or OAK on evening of 6th or the morning of the 7th (Business class both ways -- Sab Tubman from State is checking on US carrier flights, but there is no issue whatsoever with you leaving from SFO and returning to NY.).
Arrive evening of 8th / or around midnight on 9th, depending on what Sam comes up with.

Lunch w/Pres & PM on 9th

Parade in the afternoon on 9th

Reception evening on 9th

Return on 10th to NY

That's it--any additional questions or qualms? Want to see the flight / connecting options first before agreeing? Sam has to pull those together since, as you likely recall, State is particular about the flights they'll let you take.

Others Confirmed to go: Nobody else is confirmed at this point. Singapore would like us to send a small delegation, so it would likely be the Head of Delegation and the U.S. Ambassador to Singapore, Kirk Wagar.

Why you? “PPO was hoping that Podesta could do it because he’s a high ranking former official who we think would be well received by Singapore. We sent former President Clinton and Tom Donilon recently for the funeral of the former Prime Minister of Singapore. The Singapore government is adamant we send a high ranking head of delegation.”

Do you want to rearrange things to go, or shall we decline citing existing commitments?

RFS out at 10:00. They anticipate muted reaction from ethanol gang. Negative reaction from biodiesel. Very negative reaction from API. Hoping for positive reaction from advanced. Not sure they'll get it. One thing to look out for is a big new commitment to use CCC authority to put $100 million into E15 fueling infrastructure. Republicans will go crazy. We should embrace that element when we are back in Iowa.

Hello Herb, Steve, and John,

The WaPo piece about our grants is up. Here's Ed's take and the link below.

I'm frustrated that he says no conservatives applied -- I didn't say that since I don't know the political orientation of our applicants and it would be impossible for Jim to know that.

It’s not everything we’d like but it highlights our quest for nonpartisan research and gets our list of grantees into the web pages of the paper (and I’ll bet into the print version now). Subject: [big campaign] Tracking Update: Palin Rally in Clearwater, FL 10/06/08

Hello All,
Just got off the phone with our tracker, Evan, on the ground in Clearwater. Below are the notes from our call.

Big Highlights

- Says that in FL, 'all-of-the-above' means wind and solar -- "god has so richly blessed you here." also, enviromentally-friendly offshore drilling. drill here and drill now.
- Delivers harsher attack against Obama on Ayers-- counters Dem. rebuttals that Ayers just a guy in the neighborhood-- Palin said that's untrue, that even Obama's own aides say Ayers was early supporter of obama's
- Repeats slam that Obama doesn't see america as you and i see america, as a force for good in the world. im afraid this is someone who sees america as imperfect enough to work with someone who's a domestic terrorist, would target his own country. this isnt change we can believe in.
 - Says we believe what Reagan believed, that USA is exceptional country. we're not perfect but we learn from our mistakes. We represent a perfect ideal.
- Says the phoniest claim in a campaign thats been full of them, is that obama's gonna cut your taxes ("go with your gut, or do the math" and you'll conclude the same)
 - Says it's a left-wing agenda prettied up and packaged as mainstream
- Brings up "not-so-successful interview," apologizes for being "annoyed," "impatient," "flippant"
- Lieberman: If anyone doubted that McCain is about change, is a maverick, those doubts ended when he chose Gov. Palin to be his running mate

Clearwater, FL: Palin Rally 10/06/08

(Disclaimer: The following are notes, not direct quotes. If you'd like a quotable transcript or video of any part below, please email us.)

Background details

- 2500-3000 ppl at event
- Warm-up
 - Opening speaker says his son, killed by sniper in Iraq, he's in heaven casting vote for McCain
 - Pastor gives thanks for the McCain-palin ticket
 - FL Cong. (R- 10th district)
 - contends that women are definitely tough enough to be in office, e.g. Golda Meir, gets big round of applause for Margaret Thatcher
 - says we're gonna drill in ANWR! (crowd cheers)
 - Charlie Crist and Mel Martinez gave brief remarks
 - Campaign hands out colored shirts so that ppl in stands behind her looked like American flag
- Crowd's signs show support for Palin in debate (1 asks of Lieberman "What happened Joe?")
- Staffers again passed out pompoms and noisemakers
- Tracker didn't see any demonstrators
- Joe Lieberman opens rally:
 - Hooray victory
 - Here as a democrat, voted as an independent in support of a republican, because country come before party. McCain fought for America, That is the kind of man we need for america in these tough times.
 - If anyone doubted that McCain is about change, is a maverick, those doubts ended when he chose Gov. Palin to be his running mate this year. [Crowd chants Sarah] Because as you know I am sure in AK this lady is the best in America. She represents the values of the American heartland. She saw a govt in AK that wasnt delivering for folks like her, she ran against incumbent GOP gov and she won ...
 - and that is what she will help McCain do in DC. She is so strong, so capable so full of values, a woman whose life has been built on faith in god...
 - there were a lot of people who were not so happy with McCain chosing Sarah b/c she was so good, they tried to turn her into something she is not, didnt she show them in the debate... i am proud to introduce to you the next VPOTUS, SP

Speech Highlights

- thank you so much Sen Lieberman, with that kind introduction. He has never seen so many people up so early. thankyou so much for that so warm welcome, you take my breath away FL. The flags are beautiful, God Bless America, you guys get it. It is great to be here in the home of the Tampa bay Devil rays. Some of the experts were tough on the Rays, ive been there. The rays in the playoffs for the first time ever. FL knows something about turning an underdog into a victor, how about that FL lets do that for Sen. McCain. So last time we came to FL it was up in the villages. Thousand of people there to here our message of change, b/c they, like you, are ready to shake things up in Fl. Rather you are a GOP, Dem, Ind. or nothing at all we are asking for your support. We will win for you.

- So I wanted to come ehre a couple of days earlier but i had an appointment in St. Louis that couldnt wait. I had a little debate with Sen. Biden. [crowd boos] he is a fine and decent man. I enjoyed bringing McCain's msg to Joe Biden. I told him he was the only man fighting for you, fighting for america.
- it'd sure be nice if just once he could say he wants america to win- our opponent voted to cut off funding for troops even after saying he'd never do so - and he said our troops in afgh. are just "air-raiding villages" and killing civilians - the US military is fighting terrorism and protecting us and our values. theyre building schools so there's hope. they deserve our gratitutde and our support
- mccain is a different kind of man - he believes in our troops and our mission and as mom of 1 of those troops, thats exactly who i want as commander in chief--
- man some of your signs just make me want to cry. thank you [we love you!]
- mccain served country in uniform for 22yrs, he was POW for 5 1/2 yrs - he was stationed here, learned to do what he does here in FL - today we're proud of all the Floridians who've worn country's uniform. FL home to many of nation's vets, keeping nation safe and secure. let us applaud you, vets. we thanks you and we love you guys. and gals.
- in 29 days, itll be time for choosing. in politics there are some candidates who use change to just promote their careers and there are others who use their careers to promote change. principles and pol. independence matter more than party line, as lieberman told you. mccain and i dont just talk about change - we're the only candidates in this election with track record of making change happpen.
- as mayor and gov, i reminded ppl that govt not always the answer, too often it's the problem. we put govt back on side of ppl. as mayor, i eliminated burdens on sm. businesses, e.g. taxes on mill levy, property taxes, etc. as gov, i came promising to control spending by request if possible, by veto if necessary. today we have surplus. [no more war! x2] we suspended state fuel tax and i gave it back to ppl b/c they can spend it better than govt can spend it for them. we'll take it to natl level. we're not gonna have govt "solve all the problems" for them. we'll be acctable to you, the ppl of USA.
- we'll set this nation firmly on a course of energy independence. [drill baby drill! drill baby drill!] that's right. across FL and across USA, high gas prices is making full tank feel like a luxury. costs going up, but paycheck going down. we'll need all of the above approach, incl. alt energy. In FL, that means wind and solar -- god has so richly blessed you here. sitting untapped. along with enviro-friendly offshore drilling. we need to drill here and drill now. now you can chant the 'drill baby bill.' its simple as this: in mccain-palin admin, we'll achieve energy indep. its natl security issue and energy issue. that means Am energy brought by Am sources and Am workers.
- we're gonna bring tax relief to every Americans and cut taxes for business owners so you can hire new ppl -- that's how jobs are created. in this election, mccain is the real reforrmer. and so am i.
- i think the phoniest claim in a campaign thats been full of them, is that obama's gonna cut your taxes. he built his career first on doling out tax money as state sen, then tax increases as Sen, then wasting $1M /day on earmarks. now he's committed to $1T in new spending and doggone it, no one's asking him how he's gonna pay for all his new spending. so go with your gut, or do the math, and either way, youll see he's gonna raise your taxes.
- it's leftwing agenda pkged and pretty'd up to look mainstream. bigger govt, activist judges, higher taxes, retreat in war - not what we want.
- a lot of interest in what ive been reading. incl. a not-so-successful interview i had with couric recently. [boos] i was just trying to keep tina fey in business. i have to apologize about being a bit impatient, annoyed and my answer was a bit flippant-- but i wanted to talk about the issues that matter to americans, not thru filter of MSM. well i was reading my copy of NYT the other day [boos]--and i knew you guys would react like that-- and i was really interested to read about his friend Bill Ayers. Acc. to NYT, he was a domestic terrorist and he would have launched a campaign of bombings incl. targeting pentagon. obama says he's just a guy in the neighborhood, but that's not true. his own advisors say theyre friendly, reports that ayers hosted fundraisers for obama, etc.
- obama doesnt see america as you and i see america, which is as a force for good in the world. im afraid this is someone who sees america as imperfect enough to work with someone who's a domestic terrorist, would target his own country. this isnt change we can believe in. we believe what Reagan believed in - that USA is exceptional country. [usa! usa! Palin joins in] usa is a good and honorable nation, we're not perfect but we learn from our mistakes. we represent a perf ideal, its frdm, tolerance its equal rts. its what american soldiers have fought and died for - frdm is worth fighting for.
- so look at that choice and contrast. the only man who can take on washington is mccain. you'll have to hold onto your hats in FL b/c up to election day, it may get kind of right. it's ok. opponents say they'll fight for you. but since he wont say it on his own behalf, ive had to make it my business to say it: mccain is the only man who'll really fight for you. he has the courage to go on fighting for you. god bless you.

John -- Ann Kirkpatrick needs your urgent support.

She's a tireless fighter for women's rights, a fierce defender of the middle class, and continuously puts the needs of her constituents above her own.

If she lost, a serious void would be left in Arizona.

But -- not only is Ann's race a pure "toss up," Speaker Boehner and the Koch brothers are dead-set on defeating her.

With only 10 days left, they've already committed $8 million to try and smear her record across Arizona T.V.

John, it's critical we rally behind Ann when she needs us most.

Please chip in $5 or more for Ann and help to keep her fighting for you.

Standing up for Iowa values.

Dear John

As we head out to celebrate the festivities this evening, I wanted to send a final update before our deadline at midnight, tonight.

Our campaign is off to a great start, but we're really just getting going. We're well on our way to reaching our fundraising goal for the month, and as luck would have it, we're just about to register our 300th individual contributor in this young campaign.

We only need 40 more contributors this evening to make it, and I hope that you'll be able to help us get there. If you can, get in the Halloween spirit, click on the jack o' lantern below, and help us as we continue to move forward.

Happy Halloween,

Team –

In advance of the 11AM call with HRC, pulling together an email on recommendations for ad traffic going forward (a summary spreadsheet also attached of what's happening now – but doesn't include next steps, that's below). Please let me know if we should include, or cover, more with HRC.

Basic Strategy: Fundamentally, in the Midwest states, we must be in a core economic barriers lane. Yesterday, we completed an ad-test that looked at a number of our spots up against his trade ad. Based on those results – and what we learned in several nights of focus groups – we believe we should be making a dual economic argument – going after corporate greed + a forward-looking vision to create jobs. Our research also shows that this is the best strategy to inoculate against incoming attacks on trade. We also need to ensure that we're informing/mobilizing our African American and Hispanic base.

What that means in terms of creative:

- For the core broadcast/cable buy:
 - In the corporate greed lane, we run a combination of "Valeant" and "Johnson Controls " – these continue to test very well in every way that we test it.
 - In job creation lane, we recommend bringing in "Forward" -- a forward-looking jobs spot being finalized this am (current link below) that was the highest performing in our recent ad-test. After viewers watched his Trade ad and "Forward", we saw an increase in our attributes (+10-15), improved favorability (+5) and we gained traction in the horserace (+4 swing).

 Forward: https://hfa2016.app.box.com/s/syz3fjgkdq86o59lda09dxcba51fmhie
 - The team is also finalizing a .60 spot – using HRC's VO from recent events – focused on economic barriers. This would be a "bigger" spot with some lift.
- African American:
 - Running a unique African American track – "Stand" – on AA heavy programing in St. Louis, Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Raleigh, Charlotte and Orlando.
 - AA radio (both Morgan Freeman and Kerry Washington , targeted by age) in all major markets. (Note: Bernie is doing no AA radio)
 - GOTV mail dropping to expanded AA target universe
 - Very robust digital mobilization and election education

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- Newspaper ads across all markets

- Hispanic:
 - Running SL TV ad on Univision in Florida markets and in Chicago – "Valentia"
 - Spanish language radio in Florida, Chicago (Gutierrez) and Cleveland
 - Digital education/GOTV in Florida
 - Newspaper ads in Florida and Chicago

- College: We're running the college debt ad on cable systems in college towns all across MO/OH/IL

- Using paid media to drive earned media:
 - Tomorrow, the campaign will run the Shonda Rimes/other actresses ad three times on ABC during primetime in all March 15 markets. The press and digital teams will be rolling it out in a way to maximize amplification.
 - On Monday, the campaign is working to place a 3-minute "Mothers of the Movement" ad on in the key networks. The press team would roll it out on Sunday.

Spending:

- We're outspending or even with Sanders in all of the key March 15 markets.

- We're also running fairly robust AA radio, Sanders is not running any.

Subject: Got a spare couch or bed?

OBAMA BIDEN

John --

Some great folks we know are looking for a friendly place to stay.

A group of the most dedicated organizers and volunteers will be coming to Northern Virginia for the remaining weeks of the campaign. They heard we're looking to run a fierce ground game for President Obama this fall -- and they want to be a part of it.

But here's the thing: They need somewhere to stay. And I'm hoping you can lend them a hand with that.

What do you say? Can you host a volunteer in the District for a week or more?

The folks who are coming won't ask for much. Many of them will gladly sleep on a comfy couch or an air mattress, or in a small spare room you might have. They'll take the Metro or provide their own transportation to and from Northern Virginia, and they'll be out during the day, working hard to move our organizing along.

But I bet they'll come back at night with some amazing stories about the people they've reached and the energy they're sparking -- stories that you otherwise might not get to hear.

These volunteers and organizers are among the most dedicated out there -- and they're giving up their time to come here and pitch in. Any hospitality you can extend to them will mean a lot.

Let us know if you can host one or more supporters here:

Dear John,

Even after the BP catastrophe, Pat Toomey still wants to drill in the Great Lakes.

Yesterday, Erie's No.1 newscast reported on Pat Toomey's visit there:

> "Toomey believes drilling for oil and natural gas can be performed safely in Lake Erie ... The current BP spill in the Gulf of Mexico has not changed his mind. Toomey has received nearly $100,000 from the oil and gas lobby … Residents we spoke with who live on the shoreline are against ANY type of drilling … A big difference between the water in Lake Erie and the Gulf of Mexico - we have a Great Lake here to rely on for drinking water for millions of people, down there in the Gulf they are not drinking that sea water." -- ABC affiliate WJET- TV

Lake Erie … Pennsylvania … our environment … needs protection from Pat Toomey:

We URGE YOU to please make a contribution, whatever you are able to afford, to help us complete an expanded version of this video and make it "viral" across the internet with multiple ads on multiple websites.

The expanded video will be a key major issue that begins to expose the extreme views of Pat Toomey ... while galvanizing support for our campaign.

The majority of Americans oppose expanded offshore drilling in our oceans … now Pat Toomey is advocating for drilling in our FRESHWATER GREAT LAKES -- the major drinking source of water for millions of Americans! His views are too radical for Pennsylvania and for the nation.

Help us complete this video, and get it advertised across the internet, because... " don't it always seem to go, that you don't know what you got till it's gone" … help us protect Lake Erie!

Lippert and I want to be sure we're on the same page in re: staff mtgs and visiting foreign dignitaries around the G-20.

I noticed in an email that Anita sent earlier that Dan T is in charge of arranging staff mtgs around the G-20. If that is the case, we want to be sure we are not off the reservation.

In his protocol calls the last several days, the President-elect has demurred on mtg with visiting leaders (each has requested a meeting) and been equally non committal on meetings with staff.

We had been thinking we would propose that a team of senior, recognizable Democrats (led the Sec. Albright, but also including a finance/econ expert) would take meetings with visiting delegations. Such a posture with get us the benefit of the input from the visiting delegations (as Albright et al would debrief staff or even the President-elect on their meetings) but give us enough distance (since none of these folks like Albright would eventually be serving in an Obama Admin) that we would not own what they say.

Anita and Dan Tarullo, is this different from what you all are thinking/planning? If so, let's synchronize our watches before we get too far down the road.

Hillary Clinton has been very open that her views have evolved over the years.

In 2013, she added her voice in support of marriage equality.

Yes, if we want to be in the story. Keep in mind: the story will suck regardless. But I would just say we should use it as the vehicle for giving a statement that reads as a walkback, even as HRC will never approve a true walkback, and then we circulate the story to our LGBT friends so they see that both they humbled us with a bad story and we highlight our statement giving a win-win walkback, and we move on.

Here is what we have: Huffington post is doing a story tomorrow "fact checking" the idea that there was a push for a constitutional amendment in 1996, as HRC claimed was true. The piece will essentially say there was not, and will quote Rosen's tweet and Evan Wolfson saying this was not true and was hardly a basis for DOMA to be signed by WJC.

Xochitl has also gotten an inquiry from the Blade.

In addition to this, Socarides tells us he heard from NYT on this, though the campaign has not, so we do not know what he is referring to. I would not be surptised, however, if activists we're pitching this.

All that said, I do not think a statement from HRC is warranted simply based on these inquiries. Indeed, I think a statement from her likely attracts more coverage than just these inquiries and also could give the appearance that we are responding to Bernie at JJ, rather than clarifying our own remarks to Maddow. I missed the beginning of tbe conf call this afternoon on thia, but i had assumed we were preparing an HRC statement less for HuffPo and more because that is what political thought was needed to quell the LGBT backlash.

If that is not the case, then for my purposes, I would just propose a spokesman statement that accounts for Dan's point (that she will not disavow her theory about the constitutional amendment) but also addresses the community's outrage over the idea that we might be trying to justify support for the law in 96 by saying something like, "Regardless of the differing motives that led to the passage of DOMA, none were justifiable since, as both Hillary and President clinton have said, the law was clearly discriminatory."

I'm not sure anyone has asked. We would put it out there.

On Friday, and in many instances previously, I was asked about my position on the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA). I appreciate that people have differing views of the DOMA situation [other word?] in 1996. The environment for gays and lesbians was different then and there were struggles about the best paths to take. That is common in all social change movements. I have been very open that my own views have evolved over the years.

I hope the important thing is that we are now moving forward toward justice, together.
In 2013, I added my voice in support of marriage equality “personally and as a matter of policy and law.” As I said then, LGBT Americans are full and equal citizens and they deserve the full and equal rights of citizenship. Like so many others, my personal views have been shaped over time by people I have known and loved, by my experience representing our nation on the world stage, my devotion to law and human rights, and the guiding principles of my faith. That’s why, as a Senator, I pushed for laws that would extend protections to the LGBT community in the workplace and that would make violence towards LGBT individuals a hate crime. And as Secretary of State, I put LGBT rights on the global agenda and told the world that “gay rights are human rights and human rights are gay rights.” In my speech last night in Iowa, I didn’t look back to the America of the past, I looked forward to the America we need to build together. I originally flagged HRC's Maddow remarks as potentially problematic in part because her wording closely linked her to two unfavorable policies of the past even as no one in the community was asking her to "own" them. Given that, my recommendation would be to make this statement about just her, her evolution, and her record -- not bring in WJC.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Relatedly, if we release a statement tonight, it will very clearly be in response to the Maddow interview. To the extent we can, I advocate for owning that so that we can clean this up completely, rightly position her as a champion of LGBT issues, and make sure we move on from any discussion of looming amendments or her being involved in passing either DADT or DOMA. Without getting into the weeds, can we say that the broader point is that the country is in a different place now on LGBT issues -- and thank goodness it is -- and that she's so happy each policy has been placed in the dustbin of history?

Last thought: I have raised this a few times to a smaller number of people on this thread but will flag this for the larger group as well. At Keene State College, she specifically cited friends playing a part in her evolution, which we echo here. That's fine, IMO, and quite believable. But if I were a reporter and wanted to keep the evolution story alive, I would start asking which friends she was talking to and ask us to provide them. Not a problem per se, but I think it is worth flagging now so we aren't caught by surprise later.

Bill, who signed DOMA nearly twenty years ago after an overwhelming vote in Congress, called the law a discriminatory vestige of a less tolerant America and urged the Court to strike it down. I added my voice in support of marriage equality “personally and as a matter of policy and law.” As I said then, LGBT Americans are full and equal citizens and they deserve the full and equal rights of citizenship. Like so many others, my personal views have been shaped over time by people I have known and loved, by my experience representing our nation on the world stage, my devotion to law and human rights, and the guiding principles of my faith. That’s why, as a Senator, I pushed for laws that would extend protections to the LGBT community in the workplace and that would make violence towards LGBT individuals a hate crime. And as Secretary of State, I put LGBT rights on the global agenda and told the world that “gay rights are human rights and human rights are gay rights.” In my speech last night in Iowa, I didn’t look back to the America of the past, I looked forward to the America we need to build together. I pledged to fight for LGBT Americans who, despite all our progress, in many places can still get married on Saturday and fired on Monday just because of who they are and who they love. In this campaign and as President, I will keep fighting for equality and opportunity for every American.

It turns out I was mistaken and the effort to pass a constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriage came some years later. The larger point I was trying to make about DOMA, however, is still true. It was neither proposed nor supported by anyone in the Clinton administration at the time. It was an effort by the Republicans in Congress to distract attention from the real issues facing the country by using gay marriage, which had very little support then, as a wedge issue in the election. The legislation passed by overwhelming veto-proof margins in both houses of Congress and President Clinton signed it with serious reservations he expressed at the time. Luckily the country has evolved way beyond this in the last 20 years and most Americans, including the Supreme Court, now embrace LGBT equality. We are a better country for it. Although there is much work that remains, and I'm eager to help advance the day when we are all truly equal.

> In 1996, I signed the Defense of Marriage Act. Although that was only 17 years ago, it was a very different time. In no state in the union was same-sex marriage recognized, much less available as a legal right, but some were moving in that direction. Washington, as a result, was swirling with all manner of possible responses, some quite draconian. As a bipartisan group of former senators stated in their March 1 amicus brief to the Supreme Court, many supporters of the bill known as DOMA believed that its passage "would defuse a movement to enact a constitutional amendment banning gay marriage, which would have ended the debate for a generation or more." It was under these circumstances that DOMA came to my desk, opposed by only 81 of the 535 members of Congress.
> On March 27, DOMA will come before the Supreme Court, and the justices must decide whether it is consistent with the principles of a nation that honors freedom, equality and justice above all, and is therefore constitutional. As the president who signed the act into law, I have come to believe that DOMA is contrary to those principles and, in fact, incompatible with our Constitution.

Because Section 3 of the act defines marriage as being between a man and a woman, same-sex couples who are legally married in nine states and the District of Columbia are denied the benefits of more than a thousand federal statutes and programs available to other married couples. Among other things, these couples cannot file their taxes jointly, take unpaid leave to care for a sick or injured spouse or receive equal family health and pension benefits as federal civilian employees. Yet they pay taxes, contribute to their communities and, like all couples, aspire to live in committed, loving relationships, recognized and respected by our laws.

When I signed the bill, I included a statement with the admonition that "enactment of this legislation should not, despite the fierce and at times divisive rhetoric surrounding it, be understood to provide an excuse for discrimination." Reading those words today, I know now that, even worse than providing an excuse for discrimination, the law is itself discriminatory. It should be overturned.

We are still a young country, and many of our landmark civil rights decisions are fresh enough that the voices of their champions still echo, even as the world that preceded them becomes less and less familiar. We have yet to celebrate the centennial of the 19th Amendment, but a society that denied women the vote would seem to us now not unusual or old-fashioned but alien. I believe that in 2013 DOMA and opposition to marriage equality are vestiges of just such an unfamiliar society.

Americans have been at this sort of a crossroads often enough to recognize the right path. We understand that, while our laws may at times lag behind our best natures, in the end they catch up to our core values. One hundred fifty years ago, in the midst of the Civil War, President Abraham Lincoln concluded a message to Congress by posing the very question we face today: "It is not 'Can any of us imagine better?' but 'Can we all do better ?'"

The answer is of course and always yes. In that spirit, I join with the Obama administration, the petitioner Edith Windsor, and the many other dedicated men and women who have engaged in this struggle for decades in urging the Supreme Court to overturn the Defense of Marriage Act.

Here are just some of the things that we've been able to accomplish. If you haven't already taken action on them, you can still take action on any of the petitions below.

TELL SPEAKER BOEHNER: DROP YOUR LAWSUITS

Speaker Boehner wants to sue the president AGAIN. Instead of working to accomplish anything, he wants to play political games and waste our time with lawsuits.

Tell Speaker Boehner enough is enough. Add your name.

STAND WITH OBAMA:

President Obama's State of the Union address focused on bringing Congress together to boost the middle class and make the economy work for everyone.

Can you add your name and tell the president you support his agenda?

TELL THE GOP: STOP THE ATTACKS ON SOCIAL SECURITY

On the very first day of the new Congress, Republicans launched a stealth attack on Social Security. We have to fight back.

Can you add your name to our petition before it's too late?

TELL STEVE SCALISE TO RESIGN

The third-ranking Republican in the House spoke at a rally sponsored by white supremacists! If you are like us, you know that it is time for Scalise to resign his post as GOP Majority Whip.

Agree? Add your name and tell him to resign as House Majority Whip.

Again, thank you so much for your support. Together, we will keep fighting and keep working to stop the Tea Party.

Thanks for your support,

Ali

A Field Guide to Who's Who in the Fledgling Clinton Campaign

Republicans are already clawing for spots in next year's presidential race, and so are the Democratic operatives who are meeting in Hillary Rodham Clinton's living room and her New York offices.

Mrs. Clinton, whose schedule has been unusually quiet of late, and her advisers are fielding résumés and talking to potential campaign aides (a mix of old and new). As the presumptive front-runner, Mrs. Clinton has her pick of talent. But several people with knowledge of the discussions say that some of the Democrats' most gifted political professionals have decided, for the moment, that the safest place to be is on the sidelines.

After all, in 2008, things didn't end so well for Mrs. Clinton's first campaign manager or her first chief strategist.

So here's an informal and wildly incomplete guide to the Clinton 2016 campaign as it slowly, quietly and cautiously begins to take shape (No, Mitt Romney has not called):

People to impress: Cheryl Mills, Huma Abedin and Evelyn S. Lieberman.

Doesn't tolerate drama: John Podesta.

Will run things: Robby Mook (and his mafia).

Dark horse: Stephanie Schriock of Emily's List.

Spin meisters: Brian Fallon or Jennifer Palmieri (a Podesta pick)

John --

One year ago today, you made history.

We all knew that electing Barack Obama President was only the opportunity to bring about change; that we would all have to keep working to fulfill the promise our victory offered.

And you've come through -- by making hundreds of thousands of calls to Congress to push health reform forward, by pouring your effort into seemingly insurmountable challenges time and again, and, since January, by building on the power of our campaign to create Organizing for America.

And now, with the finish line on health reform in sight, we need your voice more than ever before.

To mark this special day, President Obama just recorded a video for supporters like you -- please watch his message, and sign up to join OFA in your community today.

Watch the President's message

Thank you so much for fighting so hard and giving so much to make the promise of a stronger, more just and prosperous America in the years ahead a reality:

My best,

David Plouffe

I'm beginning to worry more about Rubio than the others. He's playing this very smart – only one who didn't duck like a chicken shit on the Q of whether POTUS loves America. He has stronger right wing cred than Jeb and he's finding a way to the middle enough for now and he will be the most exciting choice to Republicans. Could pose a real threat with Latinos etc.

Just my anxiety thought of the day. Anzo – might want to ask about Rubio beyond Orlando only in groups.

From Irish America's April/May 2015 issue: http://irishamerica.com/2015/03/hillary-clintons-celtic-roots/

Hillary's Welsh Grandmother Was Linked By Genealogists To The Wrong Parents Of Another Girl In Scranton, PA. "Meandering back another generation, I came to realize that other genealogists who had researched Hillary Clinton's ancestry had attached her Welsh grandmother, Hannah Jones, to the wrong parents (two girls named Hannah Jones were born in Scranton, PA circa 1882-1883 and they latched on to the wrong one). I also discovered that Hugh E. Rodham's parents had eloped. This revelation emerged gradually beginning with an oddly worded wedding announcement in a local paper. When I couldn't find a marriage record in Scranton as anticipated, I scoured newspapers instead and found a snippet in an August 1902 issue stating that the couple had wed in Binghamton, New York a couple of months earlier on Memorial Day. Now I understood why I hadn't found the record, but the choice of Binghamton revealed even more." [Irish America, April-May 2015]

Subject: Question on Clinton comments on her grandparents immigrating here
To: jferguson@hillaryclinton.com , press@hillaryclinton.com

Hey,

I saw Sec. Clinton's comments on immigration at the Capital City Fruit on immigration where she said, "ya know if we go around this room there's a lot of immigrant stories. You know, all my grandparents, ya know, came over here. My grandfather went to work in a mill in Scranton, Pennsylvania..." (video attached on that).

One of my hobbies is doing the ancestry of presidential candidates and from what I can tell only one of her grandparents were born overseas. Her fraternal grandfather Hugh Rodham Sr.

I know she's talked about her grandmother immigrating before at an an event last year (17:50).

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=gtBePkrEr3w&list=UUSQoxOTCUydTyTAjcLbmVAQ

"She immigrated with her family as a young girl to Scranton and went to work — very young–in a silk mill, and then she met and married my grandfather, who had also come to this country as a young man from the coalmining area in Newcastle, in England."

Looking at census records it seems only her grandfather was an immigrant. Coming as a two-year-old boy:

You need an ancestry log in for this (I can give you mine if you need it).

http://search.ancestry.com/cgi-bin/sse.dll?new=1&gsfn=Hugh&gsln=Rodham&rank=1&gss=angs-g&mswpn__ftp=England&mswpn=3251&mswpn_PInfo=3-%7c0%7c0%7c3257%7c3251%7c0%7c0%7c0%7c0%7c0%7c0%7c&msbdy=1879&pcat=ROOT_CATEGORY&h=12259921&recoff=8+9&db=nypl&indiv=1&ml_rp

While Hannah Rodham is listed as PA born on the 1910, 1920, and 1930 census records:

Her fraternal grandparents are also both listed as born in Illinois on the 1920 and 1930 census:

http://search.ancestry.com/cgi-bin/sse.dll?MS_AdvCB=1&rank=1&new=1&MSAV=-1&msT=1&gss=angs-g&gsfn=Edwin&gsfn_x=XO&gsln=Howell&gsln_x=XO&mswpn__ftp=Illinois%2c+USA&mswpn=16&mswpn_PInfo=5-%7c0%7c1652393%7c0%7c2%7c3247%7c16%7c0%7c0%7c0%7c0%7c&mswpn_x=XO&pcat=ROOT_CATEGORY&h=14812479&db=1920usfedcen&indiv=1&ml_rpos=10

http://search.ancestry.com/cgi-bin/sse.dll?db=1930usfedcen&h=83783432&indiv=try&o_vc=Record:OtherRecord&rhSource=6061

Her fraternal grandfather's drat card also lists him as born in the USA.

Dear Law Center Community,

In light of the tragic death of a Georgetown undergraduate student last week from bacterial meningitis, a few of you have asked whether you need take precautions if you plan to visit main campus or if you have been there recently. We are advised by the public health professionals coordinating the university's response that there is very little risk to anyone in the Law Center community, even those who regularly have been or will be visiting main campus for classes, meetings or other activities. oops!
I mentioned this to John some time back, but think it's a bit more current now.

It is most likely that this decision has already been made by the Court, but on the off chance that history is repeating itself, then it's possible they are still deciding (last time, seems like Roberts went from striking the mandate to supporting it in the weeks before). As Jennifer will remember, it was pretty critical that the President threw the gauntlet down last time on the Court, warning them in the first case that it would politicize the role of the Court for them to rule against the ACA. As a close reader of the case, I honestly believe that was vital to scaring Roberts off.

In this case, I'm not arguing that Hillary spend a lot of time attacking the Court. I do think it would be very helpful to all of our interest in a decision affirming the law, for Roberts and perhaps Kennedy to see negative political consequences to ruling against the government.
Therefore, I think it would be helpful to have a story of how progressives and Hillary would make the Supreme Court an election issue (which would be a ready argument for liberals) if the Court rules against the government. It's not that you wish that happens. But that would be the necessary consequence of a negative decision...the Court itself would become a hugely important political issue.

At CAP Action, we can get that story started. But kinda rests on you guys to make it stick.

What do you think? If you want to proceed, we should move soon.

Let me know thoughts. And I'm happy to discuss.

There is a lot of vacuous economics. Some of it is mathematical, some of it is verbal. I'm not sure that the proportions are very different. In fact it may be easier to detect vacuousness in mathematics than in words. Most of the "alternative approaches" are pretty bad. The kernel of truth is that students need more training in analyzing "real world" problems. I think the reason they don't get it is that it is much easier to tell good abstract theory from mediocre than to tell good real-world analysis from mediocre. So the way to get ahead is to do good abstract theory. Most of the top departments do pretty well at the real world. Look at how many central bankers have PhDs from MIT , Yale, etc. Or CEA chairmen. Oh well.

John, thanks for planning to give me a call to chat about my next move. There is no need to call me now, though. At this point, your scarce time is too precious to spend it on what would likely be an unfocused conversation as I figure out my next move. I would like to continue to advocate for climate action/clean energy in some fashion. I already talked to a few folks, and have a couple of leads. I also have several months of cushion.

Bottom line: Thanks for planning to call me, but there is no need to at this time (unless you are on the Bolt bus with nothing to do).

If you hear of any opportunities that may be of interest to me, please shoot me a note. I would consider opportunities at NGOs, clean energy company or trade association, or even in govt if that's possible.

I have already talked with Pete Ogden about helping out the campaign. If i were to go volunteer for a few days (not sure I can) would it be more valuable to go to Iowa or NH?

Thanks for everything! dan w

John,

If you're not freaked out that Hayworth cut our lead in HALF … I don't know what to tell you. We're at risk of losing one of the only LGBT voices in Congress and the Hudson Valley's strongest advocate – AND THAT'S SCARY.

The campaign that wins will be the one that reaches the most voters with ads, mailers, and Get Out The Vote programs.

But if Democrats don't step up and donate today, that won't be us – we're $3,793 behind our target budget for noon tomorrow. Contribute $250 NOW to ensure we can fund ads and GOTV.

Thanks,

Maura

In Marathon Debate, a Few Candidates Emerge From the Pack

By MAGGIE HABERMAN

Fifteen Republicans gathered in two debates, with the four lowest-polling candidates engaging in the so-called undercard debate, where foreign policy and exasperation at Donald J. Trump dominated the discussion, and with the remaining 11 fighting to be heard, to stand out next to Mr. Trump, and to distinguish themselves. A few of them did just that.

Clarity? What clarity?

After they spent nearly 180 minutes debating one another at the Ronald Reagan Presidential Library in Simi Valley, Calif., there were two clear winners in the sprawling Republican primary field.

Carly Fiorina and Senator Marco Rubio of Florida delivered their best performances by far. Mrs. Fiorina made the most of every question she was asked, and she seized the floor even when it wasn't her turn. Mr. Rubio consistently answered foreign policy questions with ease.

Mr. Trump, whose performance had been eagerly anticipated, seemed to almost disappear from view at times. That may have been intentional, since Mr. Trump telegraphed early on that he was not sure-footed on one of the main topics of the evening, national security.

While he may not lose his supporters, he did not show he had the ability to grow.

Jeb Bush endured a painful first hour in which Mr. Trump seemed to get the better of him. He demanded, without success, that Mr. Trump apologize for mentioning his wife, who is from Mexico, in his caustic comments on immigration. But Mr. Bush recovered in the third block of the debate, delivering a strong response about his brother's stewardship of the nation (without mentioning the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks) and, in a humanizing moment, acknowledged smoking marijuana in his youth, saying his mother was displeased that he was talking about it.

A few of the others had some highlights, too. Gov. John R. Kasich of Ohio sounded a measured tone on the Iran nuclear deal that most Republicans loathe, but at other points looked angry, even when he was in a split-screen shot. And Gov. Chris Christie of New Jersey did well in the final hour, other than an off-note when he silenced Mrs. Fiorina.

Ben Carson, who rose in the polls after the Fox News debate last month, had some strong moments, but a tortured response on his view about the decision to go to war with Iraq didn't help his case.

As for the rest, they mostly faded into the shadows of Mr. Reagan's Air Force One plane behind them.

What We're Watching Today

– Janet L. Yellen, the Federal Reserve chairwoman, faces a crucial moment when the Fed's policy-making committee announces whether the time has come to start raising interest rates.

– Democratic congressional leaders will head to the White House to discuss budget strategy in preparation for the fiscal deadline in less than two weeks, while others will urge Republican leaders to support the closing of some tax loopholes, a move that Mr. Trump and other candidates have backed.

– And President Obama will meet with the three Americans, including two service members, who helped thwart a gunman's attack last month on a Paris-bound train.

No Clear Winner Among the Lower Four

Unlike in the first Republican presidential debate, the shrinking field of "undercard" candidates was without a true standout performer on Wednesday night.

In an election cycle where political outsiders are in style, the contest featured four career politicians — all of whom either are or have been governors or senators. With such résumés, the case for being able to shake up Washington was hard to make.

For George E. Pataki, the former governor of New York, the debate was a rare moment in the spotlight to share his moderate conservative message. Rick Santorum, the former Pennsylvania senator, who has been canvassing Iowa in hopes of recreating his connection with caucusgoers there, tried nonetheless to paint himself as an outsider who could bring change to Washington.

The winner was most likely a draw between Gov. Bobby Jindal of Louisiana and Senator Lindsey Graham of South Carolina. Mr. Jindal continued to hammer away at Mr. Trump while attempting to lay claim to the mantle of being the most conservative candidate. Mr. Graham mixed his usual blend of doomsday predictions on foreign affairs with political pragmatism domestically.

Known for his wry sense of humor, Mr. Graham may have made the most popular proposal of the night when recalling how former President Ronald Reagan and Tip O'Neill, then the Democratic House Speaker, used to find common ground over drinks.

"That's the first thing I'm going to do as president," said Mr. Graham, whose family owned a bar in South Carolina. "We're going to drink more."

Highlights From the Debate Live Blog

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In the live coverage of the debates, The Times broke out some moments worth remembering and fact-checking. Here's a sampling:

– In the first debate, Mr. Pataki said that he would aid Israel by providing it with the Massive Ordnance Penetrator bomb, which, The Times writes, "would mark a huge change," in United States policy.

– And, Mr. Pataki said, "The Supreme Court's ruling on gay marriage is splitting the Republican Party."

In the prime-time debate:

– Mr. Trump, The Times writes , played down the complexity of efforts to deal with North Korea's nuclear program.

– Mr. Trump and Mr. Bush sparred over immigration .

– Foreign policy seemed to be the biggest wedge among the candidates.

– And Mr. Christie accused Mr. Trump and Mrs. Fiorina of talking too much about themselves. "The fact is," he said, "we don't want to hear about your careers," adding that they should be talking instead about the difficulties faced by everyday Americans. "You're both successful people. Congratulations," Mr. Christie said, adding a moment later, "Stop this childish back-and-forth."

Democrats Opposed to Iran Deal Hold the Party Line

By forcing repeated procedural votes on the Iran nuclear deal, Senator Mitch McConnell, the Kentucky Republican and majority leader, was hoping to change some Democratic votes. The strategy appears to have worked but perhaps not in the way Mr. McConnell intended.

At least two Democratic senators who have been voting with Mr. McConnell against the Iran deal — Chuck Schumer of New York and Benjamin Cardin of Maryland — informed their colleagues on Wednesday that while they still opposed the Iran deal, they would not join with Mr. McConnell on Thursday in his effort to bring up a politically charged amendment.

The reversal by Mr. Schumer and Mr. Cardin showed that rather than breaking, Democrats are becoming more united in their opposition to Mr. McConnell's tactics, which they decry as overtly political and a waste of time.

"No one is hiding their position," said Senator Richard J. Durbin of Illinois, the No. 2 Senate Democrat. "We know where we stand. It's time to move on."

While Mr. McConnell's efforts will fall short again, he will have succeeded in making Democrats vote against requiring Iran to recognize Israel and to free American prisoners — a vote that could surface in a later political campaign.

Our Other Favorites From The Times

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

– Ahmed Mohamed's homemade alarm clock got him suspended from his suburban high school in Irving, Tex., and led to him being detained and handcuffed by police officers on Monday after school officials accused him of making a fake bomb. By Wednesday, it had brought him an invitation to the White House, and support from Hillary Rodham Clinton as questions arose about whether he had been targeted because of his name and his religion.

– The White House reported on Wednesday that the number of people without health insurance dropped last year by 8.8 million, to a total of about 33 million, but that income remained stagnant and poverty rates stayed the same.

– And Mrs. Clinton appeared on "The Tonight Show Starring Jimmy Fallon," taking a phone call from Mr. Trump, as portrayed by Mr. Fallon wearing a blonde wig.

What We're Reading Elsewhere

– NPR says that a passage near the end of a recent speech by Mr. Trump reveals a lot about his success in the polls. "It's the message that's breaking through, delivered in a way only Donald Trump can deliver it," NPR writes, and "Trump's supporters aren't with him because they want to hear the wonky details. They want someone to channel what they feel."

– Before the debate, there were several looks ahead to what might happen. Politico painted Mr. Bush's situation as dire, and The Atlantic said that the undercard debate might even be the more interesting forum.

– And checking in on the Democrats, Time says the party is "playing a dangerous game," by scheduling only six debates, a schedule that Martin O'Malley has been criticizing for a while.

Hi John-

I'm really sorry about the bus failures. I hadn't heard a solid decision from you about travel until you emailed me this morning on your way in to the office. I brought this issue to the travel team right away and the second that I heard about the change in bus policy I brought it to you right away. The day was just so packed that the timing was a little stretched out.

I think the primary issue wasn't actually that we waited to book but that they pulled the rug out under us by changing the bus policy. I know it's a tricky issue politically since we went on the whole bus parade but given that they've restricted our bus options so substantially I think we might just need to start taking the train again.

Until we get more guidance on bus lines (waiting on political) we're basically restricted to the Bolt Bus and Megabus (and Greyhound- but that's basically a non-option given the stops). For the future I will make sure to remember that the Bolt Bus really does book up 48 hours in advance, so that will be our new deadline for booking tickets.

Dear John,

You asked that I prepare a series of items needed from the current administration immediately before and after November 4. The following outlines what we believe to be the most important needs.

Requests to be made as soon as possible:

1) Request the use of military aircraft to transport the President-elect during the entire time of the transition period on a non-reimburseable basis.

2) Request assistance with finding temporary SCIF in Chicago. GSA is having a hard time finding a temporary SCIF in Chicago because they can't say who it would be used by (having to fly under the radar in chi). We would like assistance in identifying a contact either with FBI or CIA in Chicago for GSA or us to talk about using a location on a temporary basis until our office is up and running.

3) Request WHCA support services be made available on an as needed basis immediately following election.

Requests for immediately after November 4:

1) Request (selective) use of White House Transportation Agency resources for the incoming Chief of Staff and National Security Advisor;
2) Photographic services from the White House Photo Office for purposes of an official photo of the President-elect and Vice President-elect;
3) Medical care and support for the President-elect and Vice President-elect from military personnel stationed at the White House medical unit (we believe this is already done, so just need confirmation);
4) Valet services for the President-elect from White House Mess personnel;
5) Request use of Blair House by the President-elect and members of his immediate family beginning January 2, 2009 through noon on Inauguration Day.
6) Request to have office space made available in EEOB for one Management/Ops head and 1-2 assistants to help ensure smooth process will be in place for January 20 intake of personnel.

John, by way of background, the then-incoming Bush Administration officially requested the use of military aircraft and use of Blair House starting January 5, 2001. Aircraft use was granted just before inauguration day, but I cannot find where we actually granted use of Blair at all. Blair House, if I remember correctly, is actually controlled by State and I think they had issue with providing it, but I may be wrong.

I added #6 because I was reminded that Bush Administration sought, and we provided, office space for Hector to use along with one-two assistants right after the New Year. They were the only people we allowed to have office space prior to noon on Jan. 20.

Let me know if you need anything else.

not necessary at all. Not that I don't love your cooking. But 30 reporters is like a lot of work. More important for me to be at the DA reception if that ends up happening :)
Glad you're doing it though - GREAT plan.

Btw - I can make it to the dinner w/ the Ambanis (?) - the elegant Alabaman Indians. Not sure about Ben though as we need to hook up a babysitter.

Subject: Hillary needs you before Tuesday:

Before the fundraising deadline on June 30th, we are reviewing all donation records to ensure completeness. Here is what we have down for this email address:

Em ail: john.podesta@gmail.com
Status: HFA supporter - thank you! (But looks like you haven't chipped in yet)
Suggested contribution: $1

Please note: These records are specific to this exact email address and may not reflect recent or offline donations.

Friend --

I could yell and scream about how important it is for you to chip in to support Hillary before this Tuesday at midnight, but I don't think I need to.

It's the first fundraising deadline of this campaign to elect Hillary Clinton as our next president.

If you need more than that to get going... well, I'm just not sure what to tell you!

If we're going to win this race, we need to build an organization from the ground floor up -- that's why Hillary needs you to step up at the very beginning.

So before Tuesday, be one of the people who is going to elect Hillary. Donate $1 or more:

https://www.hillaryclinton.com/deadline/

Thanks,

James Carville

Subject:	Thursday "big think" meeting agenda
Attachments:	August “Big Think” Meeting Agenda.pdf

Team,

Attached is the agenda for our Thursday meeting. Feedback is welcome.

We have one homework assignment:

In the "mid course review" section of the agenda, we have some questions in red (and listed below) that we'd like everyone to think about in advance of the meeting and come with ideas. Our plan is to have everyone share their thoughts and then synthesize and discuss them as a group. Especially when thinking about what we did well in the last month, we wanted to focus on WHY we think something went well (the answer to "so what?") so we can pinpoint key learning.

The result of this session will be a set of key takeaways that we will seek to implement over the next month and review at our meeting in September.

Let us know if you have any questions.

Thanks--looking forward to it!

Overall review

What have we done this summer that really mattered and advanced our imperatives?

What do we want to do more of?

What should we do differently or better?

Specific questions

How do we pivot focus to our core economic home base?

How do we fully leverage assets other than HRC to communicate and organize?

What should we be doing to motivate our supporters?

How do we add good work and good moments to the narrative of our campaign--through the press filter and outside of the press filter?

Dear John and Andrew, there are so many people who take advantage of the fact that seniors and people with disabilities don't have the money or physical stamina many times to get to state and federal capitals and claim to speak for us. It's absolutely terrible but these well-funded organizations claim to be our voice when they are not. Thank you guys for doing the right thing and standing up for the little guy and gal. --

Nothing About Us Without Us!" (Latin: "Nihil de nobis, sine nobis") is a slogan used to communicate the idea that no policy should be decided by any representative without the full and direct participation of members the group(s) affected by that policy. This involves national, ethnic, disability based or other groups that are often thought to be marginalized from political, social, and economic opportunities.*

These organizations like The National Consumer Longterm Voice and Caring Across Generations have the audacity to say they speak for us! And they tell legislators they are us, when they are just trying to trick and use us, and they have Gobs of money. All the more reason YOU must call youe legislators about what YOU need!

At times David has conducted himself perfectly professionally at our events. At times he has been disruptive – shouting over and disrupting other reporters to the point that other journalists have complained to the campaign. We expect that kind of exchange during the rough and tumble of a presidential campaign. But we find the motorcade incidents disturbing and wanted to bring them to your attention.

Robert,

Thanks for coming out to Carolyn's last month--I really appreciate you taking the time. You helped me set the record for holding a Hillary event the farthest distance from Brooklyn HQ!

Looking forward to working with you in the future.

Best,
John

John--

We know you are getting tons of emails so we will keep this brief. We are $1235 from our February goal and your support by midnight tonight can help us reach that goal. Your support ensures that we have the resources we need to target voters and win this election in the fall. Chip in $10, $25, $50, or whatever you can before midnight.

Here is a link directly to our contribution page:

THE COMMON GOOD

de·moc·ra·cy

noun - a system of government by the whole population or all the eligible members of a state, typically through elected representatives.

Week ending August 21, 2015

Weekly roundup about our democracy and The Common Good community

Polls

Rubio leads Clinton in key swing states:
Florida: Rubio 51, Clinton 39. Rubio up by 12
Ohio: Rubio 42, Clinton 40. Rubio up by 2
Pennsylvania: Rubio 47, Clinton 40. Rubio up by 7
(Quinnipiac, 8/20/15)

President Obama job approval is negative:
Approve 45, Disapprove 50
(Gallup, 8/19/15)

2016 Presidential Campaign

Is Rubio the one Dems should fear? Rubio bests Clinton in swing states: "Senator Marco Rubio of Florida could be the toughest Republican challenger for Hillary Rodham Clinton in three crucial swing states if the two were to face off in the general election, a new poll from Quinnipiac University has found. In a survey of voters in Ohio, Florida and Pennsylvania, Mr. Rubio beats Mrs. Clinton in a general election matchup by the widest margins of any Republican presidential candidate." Alan Rappeport, New York Times
[More]

Can Google determine the election?: "America's next president could be eased into office not just by TV ads or speeches, but by Google's secret decisions, and no one—except for me and perhaps a few other obscure researchers—would know how this was accomplished. Research I have been directing in recent years suggests that Google, Inc., has amassed far more power to control elections—indeed, to control a wide variety of opinions and beliefs—than any company in history has ever had." Robert Epstein, Politico
[More]

Mr. Trump is not going away: "With the issue of illegal immigration as his energy source, Mr. Trump has not only survived any fallout from the Fox News debate, he has thrived. So Republicans are increasingly forced to find ways to respond, either by acting more like him (such as Gov. Scott Walker of Wisconsin and Senator Ted Cruz of Texas), or by acknowledging his power but respectfully disagreeing, like Gov. John R. Kasich of Ohio. Then there's Jeb Bush, the former Florida governor who has seen his poll numbers fall since the debate, and who in the last two days has tried challenging Mr. Trump head on. Mr. Trump's emphasis on immigration also took a violent turn in the last two days, as two men were charged in an attack on a homeless Hispanic man in Boston. One of the accused is reported to have cited Mr. Trump's views as an inspiration. Mr. Trump responded by calling his supporters "passionate," but he did not denounce the act." Maggie Haberman, The New York Times [More]

Ted Cruz's plan to win back the anti-establishment vote: "The Texas senator has deployed a strategy to unseat Trump as the outsider of choice. " Ted Cruz has quietly embarked on a strategy designed to reclaim the mantle of the anti-establishment presidential candidate, methodically scoring endorsements, locking down the support of hardliner activists and creating an extensive grassroots network, even as Donald Trump keeps a firm grip on the title for now." Katie Glueck, Politico [More]

The Economy

Stocks plunge as fear and uncertainty in the marketplace continues: On Friday, the Dow fell 530 points to 16,459, and the S&P 500 fell 3.2% to 1970.89 -- a brutal finish to the worst week in the market in four years.
"U.S. stocks extended this week's sharp losses with a renewed selloff on Friday as worries about global growth, fueled by carnage in China's stock market persists... a week after Beijing's surprise move to devalue China's currency... 'We are seeing a lot of fear on Wall Street, but at the same time, investors are not running to Treasuries and gold. The stock market has been vulnerable for some time and I would not be surprised to see a 10%-15% correction this year,' said Jim Paulsen, chief investment strategist & Economist at Wells Capital Management." Anora Mahmudova, MarketWatch [More]

Emerging market weakness spreading shock waves: "Allianz Chief Economic Adviser Mohamed El-Erian gave a gloomy outlook for global markets: 'What we're seeing is a classic overshoot that starts in the emerging markets world and it starts spreading,' he told CNBC's 'Squawk on the Street '. El-Erian noted the outflows of funds hits emerging markets the hardest first, with the capacity to send shock waves to other markets 'and at the end is the equity market in the U.S." Zack Guzman, CNBC [More]

The White House and presidential candidates are ignoring economic distress: "More than a year remains before Americans go to the polls to choose a new president. For now, froth is dominating the campaigns; voters deserve a serious, sustained discussion of how the candidates intend to improve their lives by addressing economic problems that have been neglected for too long." Mortimer Zuckerman (TCG Speaker),Wall Street Journal [More]

Cheap oil and global disruption: "While we have been watching the Islamic State and discussing Iran, something much bigger is happening in the world. We are witnessing a historic fall in the price of oil, down more than 50 percent in less than a year...Supply is up substantially because a decade of high oil prices encouraged producers throughout the world to invest vast amounts of money in finding new sources. A primary reason for the accelerated price decline is that Saudi Arabia, the world's 'swing supplier' — the one that can most easily increase or decrease production — has decided to keep pumping...Major oil-producing countries everywhere are facing a fiscal reckoning like nothing they have seen in decades, perhaps ever." Fareed Zakaria, The Washington Post [More]

Why haven't tech advances increased productivity and growth? The mystery of productivity: "In a corner of the data world — productivity — the picture looks so baffling it is hard to see how anyone could depend on those numbers. And while this data fog has not yet attracted much public debate, the mystery could complicate the Fed's policy challenge — not least because it makes it hard to tell how fast the economy can grow before it needs more rate hikes." Tett cites Alan Blinder, former Vice Chair of the Fed (TCG Speaker), and MIT economist Andrew McAfee and Gillian Tett (TCG Speaker), Financial Times [More]

Foreign Affairs/National Security

Biggest migration crisis since the end of WWII: "Europe's migration crisis took on new dimensions Thursday as at least three countries announced added security measures to address the biggest movement of refugees and migrants seen here since the aftermath of World War II. The sheer numbers of migrants are now clogging critical choke points across Europe. In July alone, 107,500 migrants entered the 28-nation European Union, according to Frontex, the bloc's border management agency. That was more than three times the number in the same month last year." Alison Smale and Stephen Castle, New York Times [More]

Another election for Greece: "Greece's prime minister Alexis Tsipras resigns, calls snap elections, to shore up support in a bid to combat dissent within his own party. "The decision injected fresh uncertainty into Greece's turbulent economics. The nation last month narrowly escaped being cast out of the euro currency zone and instead took on a new round of austerity in exchange for its third bailout in five years. Tsipras aims to win a renewed mandate for his firebrand populism, but he has faced a rebellion inside his own Syriza political party." Michael Birnbaum , Washington Post [More]

Learning from the US failure in Syria last month: "The United States' botched effort last month to support a Syrian moderate rebel group known as Division 30was a chain of errors that recalls, in a small way, the 1961 Bay Bay of Pigs fiasco. The Division 30 debacle has some clear and disturbing lessons: The rebels weren't well prepared for their mission, and they had poor intelligence about potential adversaries inside Syria. The United States was too dependent on Turkey, and it didn't have clear plans about how to respond if the rebels were attacked; although the United States eventually provided air support, it was too late to do much good." David Ignatius, Washington Post [More]

Apocalypse theology has led ISIS to out-terrorize Bin Laden: "The U.S. invasion of Iraq and the stupendous violence that followed dramatically increased the Sunni public's appetite for apocalyptic explanations of a world turned upside down. A spate of bestsellers put the United States at the center of the End-Times drama, a new 'Rome' careering throughout the region in a murderous stampede to prevent violence on its own shores. The Iraq war ... changed apocalyptic discourse in the global jihadist movement." William McCants, Politico [More]

Cyber attacks on the IRS worse than thought: "The Internal Revenue Service says identity thieves may have attacked thousands more taxpayer accounts than the agency thought when a review was done in May. The IRS said Monday a new review identified an additional 220,000 attempts where individuals "with taxpayer-specific sensitive data" cleared the Get Transcript verification process, meaning hackers accessed information." Carla Caldwell , Atlanta Business Chronicle [More]

World's biggest human rights group votes to legalize prostitution: "Amnesty International now joins the United Nations, Human Rights Watch, the World Health Organization and other global groups that argue the best way to protect the safety of people who sell sex is to legalize the industry." Corinne Purtill, USA Today [More]

More from the TCG Community

Homage to Julian Bond: "The fight for voting rights was always a key cause for Julian Bond over his distinguished life: In 1965, as communications director for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), Bond coordinated the group's media response from Atlanta after SNCC Chairman John Lewis nearly died marching for voting rights on Bloody Sundayin Selma, Alabama. Bond made sure the country knew about the atrocities in Selma and finally did something about it. Later that year, Bond won election to the Georgia House of Representatives, at twenty-five, illustrating the power of the new Voting Rights Act (VRA). After the legislature refused to seat him, for saying he agreed with a SNCC letter denouncing the Vietnam War, Bond appealed to the Supreme Court and won two more elections before the Court unanimously ruled that Bond deserved his seat." Ari Berman (Upcoming TCG Speaker), The Nation [More]

Crowd of 1700 here at the Carpenters Union. She did the Trump topper again and people went nuts, particularly when she quoted Edward R. Murrow (although I'm not sure anyone has caught onto that being what she's doing yet).

She's transitioned to the jobs stuff now, will keep everyone posted.

6 radio interviews and 2 coffee shops this morning. Interviews were all live or taped Detroit stations with the exception of one we did into Flint. Quick hits, mostly centered around getting out to vote. Flint came up in every one, and then education, and ACA. No flags. Every single interviewer was for her. Highlight of the morning was one of the hosts, whose stage name is "Foolish" asked a question, to which HRC replied "Well, Foolish, that is far from a foolish question." Awkward chuckles all around.

We did 2 OTRs, both at very hip coffee shops a couple of miles outside of downtown Detroit.

The first was Avalon, not too far from the Shinola Store. HRC walked in and chatted with the baristas a little, then went to one of two small sitting areas and shook a lot of hands. She had several interesting conversations, one with a woman who has cystic fibrosis, and her friend who also has it had met and chatted with HRC in NH. We'll get the audio and have the exchanges transcribed.

Second OTR was at Astro coffee, near the old Detroit train station, which was pretty striking. HRC shook a lot of hands and ordered yet more coffee. Lots of people seemed to have voted, and lots said they'd voted for her.

Back at the hotel now, likely until we leave for Cleveland this evening.

asking if Senator Sanders should stay in the race until the end. She said that's for him to decide, she's proud to have more delegates and to have built a broad coalition that can win in November. He asked about enthusiasm on the Republican side. She said that she was proud to have gotten more votes than anyone in this race, and mentioned that she has more white support than anyone if you exclude Vermont. She got asked about Trump bring people into his coalition, she said she wanted everyone in hers. Asked about emails and played a little offense on the WaPo report this morning that made clear how many state officials, including career, we're sending what's now considered classified. Name-checked Powell and mentioned that he called this all absurd. Final question was about Libya, stemming from the NYT 2-parter last week. Handled it well.

Then we went to church. 3 to be exact.

We began at the Holy Ghost Cathedral, with about 400 congregants I'd guess. The Bishop gave a rousing introduction about how much she loves Hillary Clinton, because HRC is a woman who's been through difficult times and come out on the other side with the Glory of God.

HRC's remarks were powerful, she talked about the need for us to unite. That we need citizenship and stewardship in addition to leadership. Real togetherness message. She told the story of the prodigal son, and used it to talk to the congregation about the discipline of gratitude. She then did Flint, schools in Detroit, and then a litany on breaking down barriers. Ended by talking about the need to never grow weary doing good.

Next up was Russell Street Missionary Baptist Church

Pastor gave a nice intro, started by praising President Clinton, said "today she comes before us standing in her own shoes, with her own record, and her own vision." Mentioned Debra and other strong women from the bible.

HRC opened with love and kindness. Talked about Flint, ended by saying that we need to stand up for each other and our future.

Final church was Triumph Church. The sanctuary was a beautiful wooden dome with stained glass windows. She opened with barriers here, then praised Obama and the ACA. Talked about togetherness, and did Flint at the end.

Very good morning.

On a personal note, I just had two Coney Island hot dogs at the famous Lafayette Coney Island next to the hotel. I highly recommend. Bring your defibrillator, or ask to borrow one from USSS.

Did an OTR at Kuzzo's Chicken and Waffles with the Mayor and Congresswoman Brenda Lawrence. Lots of enthusiasm, lots of selfies.

We did 4 radio interviews, into Jackson, MS, New Orleans x2, and Detroit. All very positive interviews, disproportionately about college affordability and education writ large.

Two OTRs with Governor Mark Dayton complete.

Walked into Mapps Cafe in a trendy neighborhood near U of M, greeted by about 50 patrons and 25 press.

We are now officially no longer 88 days from a press avail, but 0. Merica, Karni, Abby Philipps, and some locals asked her questions. Merica asked her about expectations today, she said were working hard, hope people turn out. Asked about Sanders' path, she declined to comment, said she's going to keep going.

Local asked about message for Minnesota voters today. Talked about breaking down barriers.

Abby Philipps asked her about Trump being the eventual nominee. She dodged. Said they all have deeply troubling views.

of the WaPo asked about Trump, she said things like this need to be repudiated. She would continue speak out against bigotry.

Annie Karni asked her another expectations question (I think), she again have a pretty stock answer. She tried to ask about asking for Bernie to get out of the race, she said that everyone has to make their own decisions.

Local asked her about Trump, she talked about speaking out against insults.

She met a Somali woman who wanted to tel her she was going caucus for her through her daughter who was translation. HRC told her she would be the president for everyone.

She met another Somali American on the city council who she was impressed by.

HRC, Dayton, and the Lieutenant Governor made it to the counter ordered coffee (HRC got something called the Big Bang).

A guy came over to her at the counter and told her that he had just received a letter back from her yesterday. He had written HRC about a health problem (I think with his dad). They had a really nice exchange about how useful it was for her to hear stories like his so she can figure out how to help.

Her final real interaction before leaving was with a Somali-American girl, probably 26 or 27, who said that Somali-American youth are being marginalized and experiencing prejudice, and given her comments about the African American community, how do we know she'd be any different now? She mentioned super predator specifically. HRC said she'd used the word one time, and to look at her record. The young woman said she knew what her record was and that it was supportive of the African American community, which is why so many have supported her campaign. She mentioned the Somali-American councilman that she'd just seen, and that she'd met with members of the community last time she was in Minneapolis. The girl responded by saying something to the effect of the councilman doesn't count. HRC told her that if she believes that than maybe she should run for office. At this point the Governor intervened and the conversation ended.

Left the coffee shop for Global Market, and indoor market with food and other stands that sell various things. We got mobbed in the lobby so barely made it to the proper market everywhere. Took some selfies and then out.

Taxiing now to head to Miami.

Roland Martin started off with a question about job growth for small businesses. Sharpton asked her about who she'd appoint as AG to protect voting rights, same with SCOTUS justices. Don Lemon, said she stopped talking about Sanders on the trail. She basically refuted that citing her rallies yesterday and proceeded to draw contrasts. Jacque Reid asked her about what can be done in communities. She talked a lot about breaking down barriers. Finally, Sybil Wilkes asked her about how her presidency would be different than her husbands.

Why is it important to get out and vote, Trump, asked about WJC in the WH. Last question was about Morgan Freeman voice HRC's ads.

"Mista Madd" opened by calling her Madam President, pretending it was a slip of the tongue. Questions were college loans, talked about making America whole again. Final Q was about wages. And then the final final Q was about what she'd do about health care.

We just wrapped up some satellite TV hits into Atlanta, Oklahoma City, Denver, and Little Rock. She got or emails in all but Denver. Executive summary: This was one of Hillary's best recent rallies. She looked incredibly comfortable on stage as she spoke about the differences between her and the Republican nominees, our country's economic success under her husband, voting rights, Supreme Court and more.

Reporters noticed Hillary speaking more freely about her husband, referring to him by his first name and to his time as president. Mentions of her time in Arkansas, investment in jobs and infrastructure and debt-free college got the most applause. She got a lot of nods when she said, "its not enough to create opportunities for my granddaughter, I want to create opportunities for everybody."

She gave a similar speech at each, sort of an abbreviated new stump, did togetherness, mothers of the movement, health care, love and kindness. First one was probably a little better organized, but crowd at each was fired up. Lots of applause and lots of individual cheers.

Left there and flew to Nashville, where we joined Tony Goldwyn and the Mayor Megan Barry for a coffee stop at Fido, near Vanderbilt. The place was packed, she ordered some coffee and took lots of photos, spoke to the owner and his son for awhile. On small thing to note: on the way in Tony asked her what she thought of Trump's David Duke comments this morning. She replied that it was "pathetic" under her breath, which has made a little news (in a good way).

The rally at Meharry Medical college was high-energy. Tony Goldwyn did LONG but solid intro. HRC visited an overflow room with about 400. 800 in the main room. She told the story again about the young, affluent white guy that emailed her after her Harlem speech and said he'd been arrested but through connections his parents made the charges go away. She addressed the Democratic Caucus and did a short version of her stump that was pretty crisp. She used a line about spending 10 months crafting policies, and while the press may have thought that was boring, she's very proud of it. People loved it. There were no press in the room.

We took many a selfie while wading through throngs of people, with more pouring over the balconies, and headed to Octane coffee shop for an OTR. Usher was going to join us but got stuck in traffic...

Dan Merica asked her if she was jealous that she didn't get Christie's endorsement, to which she responded with a prolonged smile (you could see the gears turning), and then said "Dan, I really like you. I really really like you." They are basically courting each other at this point.

Geneva Reed-Veal, Sandra Bland's mom. Did a wonderful rant on the media and how tired she was of them. Go out and vote. We have 9 months to put her in, she's the new baby."There are no secret emails."

Mark Kelly: X percent of children that die from gun violence in the developing world die in the US.

Gabby- Here to talk about Hillary Clinton, who is tough, she is courageous, she will fight to make our families safer. In the WH she will stand up to the gun lobby. Thanks why IU'm voting for Hillary. Speaking is difficult for me but come January I want to say these two words...Madame President.

Standing ovation from the room, someone stood up and yelled "Madame President!" Everyone went nuts.

HRC said thanks to everyone, talked about their courage. I hope this is a movement that lasts, and ended to work a rope line.

- She was asked to help in the dispute between the UFW and CA-based Gerawan Farming. She said she's do everything possible. After the meeting, she had a private conversation with Arturo and expressed caution b/c of campaign.
- She was asked about healthcare for the undocumented community. Stated her support for all undocumented people to be able to buy in the exchange, but acknowledged that most people don't have the resources to afford it. She also said she would work to make the exchanges available to all, including subsidies, but immediately linked it to CIR. Also wants to work with states like CA and the UFW to explore other ways to provide HC

- Re Central American kids, she said government funded legal counsel for UCs and working with El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras to take down drug cartels and build the region.
- She was asked if she would appoint Obama to the SCOTUS. She said he would be a very good candidate, but she wouldn't have that power...and he probably wants a normal life. It was a fun exchange bet. her and the farm workers.

Just met with the farm workers for an hour here in Palo Alto. Very positive experience. I'll let Lorella expand, but from outside the room there was a lot of clapping and cheering, and chanting of Sí Se Peude.

Two SC radio interviews today:

1) We did a repeat with Cynthia Hardy that ended up being a very brief conversation HRC joined in progress about health disparities in communities of color.

2) She did a slightly tougher but ultimately very strong interview with Judi Gatson of 103.1 KISS FM. She asked HRC about her recent comments on not being in this for herself, and said that some doubt that. The answer was very strong, and invoked a little reflection on sexism. She asked about youth, but the framing was interesting, which was that BdB and Eric Garner's mom endorse, but children of BdB and Eric Garner's sister do not. The other question most of note was Judi observing that she hears people in the community say that HRC embraces Obama only to pander to the AfAm population. Interesting that that broke through, (Stephanie if you talked to her I'd be curious to hear more about how often she's hearing that), HRC's answer was good, she said that Senator Sanders claiming that was offensive, that she nominated him at the convention, campaigned for him, worked for him for 4 years, and that it "affects" her "personally" to hear Sanders and his supporters say that stuff.

Finance event in Atherton was largely uneventful. She did take questions. She dinged Uber when talking about the Kalamazoo shooter, which thrilled many in the audience here in Silicon Valley, I'm sure. No encryption questions.

One more finance event and then we're off to LA to spend the night.

Good live interview with Univision local this morning. Bernie was supposed to be on right after us but bailed late last night. She did her pitch, talked about immigration, no fireworks.

Left there and dos two back of house visits, Caesars and Harrah's. Bernie was at Harrah's immediately before us, stayed 5 minutes and left. We spent about 25 shaking hands and telling people where to caucus.

Left there and went to 2 caucus sites, the second of which she's working the (long) line at as we speak.

The Bernie folks are definitely here, but our organizers tell us these are very strong locations for us.

We visited the home of Vicki Early, a retired California utility company employee who moved to Nevada to buy her first home, and installed solar panels on the roof, which she could afford with the Public Utility Commission offsets on her fixed income until they got rolled back. She and her boyfriend Tyrone showed HRC the panels in the back yard and told her story. HRC had the press come in closer to listen and then dos brief remarks of her own on the importance of this issue for people like Vicki. Pretty great stuff.

Next we went to Youthbuild, an organization with a Nevada chapter that builds houses for Habitat for Humanity. We walked through a big warehouse where HRC individually met about 15 workers. She was intrigued by how most of them found the place, which was through Craigslist, and probed them on what they were learning and what they wanted to do next. Most wanted to continue in the building trades. She spoke briefly, and invited the Youthbuild and Habitat folks to speak as well.

We've also squeezed in two SC radio interviews. Both went well, talked about the Clyburn's endorsement, support for President Obama, her plans on college affordability.

Headed to the town hall with high school students now.

Women and Families Roundtable:

Very engaging discussion, topics ranged from early childhood education to food deserts to Flint. HRC brought up Flint proactively, and a woman stood up and said that she had family there, appreciated HRC saying that, her work there, and that her assessment was exactly right. Audience was diverse across the board, lots of millennials and lots of young people who work for various NGOs and advocacy groups with a lot of very good questions and passionate comments. At the end HRC commented on her life's work, figuring out how to make difference in people's lives as opposed to promising them the moon, and making sure lives are better when you're done than when you started. Wasn't too hot but poignant and noticeable following 45 minutes of discussing the importance of reading to your children every day.

We're now going to divert course and make a pit stop at a woman's house who has been affected by the Nevada Public Utility Commissions retroactive rate changes on people selling solar back to the grid. Pool is with us.

Woke up in Milwaukee this morning and did a fundraiser at Harbor House. Very pretty setting just outside of downtown on a partially frozen bright blue Lake Michigan. She gave a pretty standard stump, no Qs, and we headed out.

South Carolina was quite something. Good crowd of about 450/500 at Denmark-Olar Elementary School (home of the Vikings). HRC stuck largely to her remarks and outlined her $125 billion plan to improve underserved communities, and took questions on just about everything: social security, health care multiple times, body cameras, Flint, homeless vets, Trump, student loans, who she's pick for VP, and a little girl who gave her a drawing that said on it: "I'm not bossy I have leadership skills." It was a very engaged, high-energy affair.

Following the town hall and a long ropeline, we did 2 TV stand ups and a print interview. Discussion in both revolved around race relations, the state of the race, and education, which HRC discussed at length in a dilapidated older locker room with paint people off the walls in the background.

Our print interviewer, Princess Williams, was really impressive. She won an award last year for best student journalist in a college under 5000 students from the South Carolina Press Association. She was nervous but did a great job, asked HRC about education, what we can't do beyond government programs to help level the playing field, attracting young voters, and what life is like off the campaign trail.

We're in the air now headed back north to St. Paul for the Humphrey-Mondale Dinner.

We did a radio interview with Greg and the morning buzz. Like the first local NH hit this morning, it was all about NH and allowed her to talk about how grateful she is to the people here.

Also just did a 10 minute satellite hit with Al Sharpton. They talked about heading to Nevada and her strategy there, he asked her how she would distinguish he civil rights record, then Flint, millennial women, voting rights, and a question about Cruz's comments on Flint and Katrina both being cities with crisis and two very liberal mayors. She didn't engage most of the answer and at the end said "that's not the world I live in, and not the world I'd govern as President."

Strong interview in substance and tone.

Transcripts to follow.

HRC and WJC stopped by Chez Vachon for breakfast. Nice greasy spoon with a French Canadian twist. HRC and WJC worked the tables, ran into some longtime supporters, took a lot of selfies. President Clinton was excited to see his photo still on the wall from when he visited last.

Dan O'Neil, former Dodd and O'Malley supporter but '92 Clinton supporter joined them for omelettes. Following breakfast, some more selfie-taking ensued as did a conversation with a couple of vets. Restaurant felt overwhelmingly supportive.

We went back to the hotel and taped 6 TV interviews with local and Boston affiliates. Lots about the state of the race here and the weather. Most asked about Warren which she handled well, a couple of transcripts questions and a good exchange with FOX on sexism in politics.

From there we went to Manchester Community College. Crowd of about 1100, she did a few things differently, including calling Bernie out for accepting DSCC money that came in part from Wall Street.

We taped Rachel Maddow after the event. It opened with the staffing question and then covered the waterfront...Flint, trust, attacks, transcripts. We let it go so Rachel would spend more time on the positive which she did.

After Maddow we went to the Velcro factory. She went table to table in their cafeteria which looked like a Johnny Rockets, shaking hands, sometimes sitting down for brief conversations. Press pool got some good stuff.

We're now back at the Radisson waiting to depart for WMUR where we'll do a quick live hit on WMUR, she'll simply make a one minute pitch to voters direct to camera.

Flint was quite moving. When we walked in the church and the water fountains were covered and marked "out of order," all we've read and seen in the news suddenly became much more real.

HRC met with mayor and an usher briefly, and she said that she fight to keep the lights from dimming on this.

The crowd was extraordinarily supportive. Her remarks were brief (12/15) but strong, with powerful response.

Afterwards she took photos, she did a very quick local standup in the sanctuary (all about Flint), met with a group of local pastors and went into the stakeholders/electeds meeting with the mayor.

On the way to the airport we called the editor of the National Newspaper Association, quick 5 minute interview on the importance of Flint and their being many other Flints. Transcript to follow.

Subject:	John Podesta and The Statue of Liberty?
Attachments:	Mother of Exiles Mix 2 .mp3

Hello John,

My Name is Gregory Roman.
I live in Central Falls, Rhode Island.

There is a poem titled "The New Colossus" which is engraved on a bronze plaque inside the lower level of The Statue of Liberty in New York's Harbor that was written by Emma Lazarus in 1883.

The New Colossus

Not like the brazen giant of Greek fame,

With conquering limbs astride from land to land;

Here at our sea-washed, sunset gates shall stand

A mighty woman with a torch, whose flame

Is the imprisoned lightning, and her name

Mother of Exiles. From her beacon-hand

Glows world-wide welcome; her mild eyes command

The air-bridged harbor that twin cities frame.

"Keep ancient lands, your storied pomp!" cries she

With silent lips. "Give me your tired, your poor,

Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,

The wretched refuse of your teeming shore.

Send these, the homeless, tempest-tost to me,

I lift my lamp beside the golden door!"

I've taken the words from that famous poem and set it to music in a new song I've written called "Mother of Exiles".

I've spent the past few weeks in a recording studio recording/producing "Mother of Exiles" and have attached an MP-3 of the song for you to listen to.

My goal is to somehow get my song to President Obama and also to Hillary Clinton, because I think they would both appreciate the positive message in "Mother of Exiles"*.
I remembered that you recently served as Counsel to President Obama and are also The Chairman of the 2016 Hillary Clinton Campaign, so I thought I'd e-mail you. I realize asking you to send "Mother of Exiles" to President Obama and/or Hillary Clinton is a shot in the dark, but I've always believed that you never know until you ask...;)

In any event, have a great rest of the day and I hope you enjoy the song...;)

Sincerely,

Gregory Roman

SEIU SENDS THIRD "DEAR JOHN" LETTER TO SENATOR JOHN MCCAIN

SEIU today sent a third "Dear John" letter to Senator John McCain, the presumptive Republican nominee for president. SEIU members are offering their assistance in the absence of any economic blueprint from McCain and will continue sending letters until he meets with them and presents proposals that put working families first.

In the letter, Roselilly Story, a registered nurse from Gulfport, Florida and member of SEIU Healthcare Florida, suggests how McCain can address one of the major economic concerns working families have - the high cost of health care. When McCain stopped in the Tampa area to release his health care plan, Story participated in a news conference highlighting the plan's shortcomings.

"Dear John,

"You came to Florida recently to discuss a health care plan you admit still needs more details. The problem isn't so much in the details – it's that your plan will help insurance companies while forcing millions of Americans to pay more money for worse coverage.

"Most Americans get health care through their employer, but by making that coverage taxable, your plan will shift the high cost of health care onto workers. You should instead give employers the choice to either provide insurance or contribute toward the cost of a public plan. That will give them affordable options while covering more working families.

"Second, your proposed $5,000 tax credit per family will not buy much coverage in the individual insurance market. Stop pretending that the amount will come anywhere near the coverage those with employer health care receive currently.

Finally, I hope you'll no longer use children for photo opportunities like the one in Miami who wouldn't even be covered by your plan because he has a cleft palate (called a pre-existing condition by insurance companies). As you campaign across the country, try giving us some straight talk and admit your plan does nothing to require insurers to cover pre-existing conditions for people like your fellow cancer survivors and will leave millions without access to health care.

I understand you are doing a Hillstarter finance strategy reception this morning at Lynn Schenk's office in San Diego. We've recently opened a San Diego, led by Drew Lieberman -- he and his wife Annie will be attending the event, and I just wanted to put it on your radar for when he introduces himself.

Hope all is well.

Eric Garcetti FOR MAYOR 2013

Dear John,

Big news! You can win two tickets to see Moby, Will Ferrell and Jimmy Kimmel at the Fonda on February 7th.

On Thursday, February 7, Moby, Will Ferrell and Jimmy Kimmel are throwing an event to benefit Eric's campaign. Moby is playing an acoustic set, with special appearances by Jimmy Kimmel and Will Ferrell. Would you like to join them? Please donate $10 by noon on Wednesday, February 6, 2013 and we will automatically enter you for a chance to attend this event with a guest.

Eric is running for Mayor to move Los Angeles forward. He wants to transform City Hall into a place focused on problem solving, customer service and economic growth.

If you would like a chance to join Eric, Moby, Will Ferrell and Jimmy Kimmel please donate $10 by noon on Wednesday, February 6, 2013.

Thank you,

- Team Garcetti

Hi John,

I am Mae's friend from McKinsey and the co-Founder of DipJar.

DipJar enables one-step collection and seamless disbursement of credit/debit card donations. Individuals simply “dip” their credit cards to give a fixed, pre-set amount in its 3G-connected hardware. The platform manages disbursement and display of data to administrators. The company has recently been featured in a front-page New York Times article and dedicated CNN piece.

Thanks for passing this along to relevant folks within the campaign, p.s., we mocked up what we think a custom Hillary DipJar could look like.

Jordan

Well John, I'm a married man!

So I bet you're thinking: shouldn't you be on your honeymoon and NOT emailing me?

I probably should be, yes. But I'm back at work because there's a battle I can't ignore right now.

John, my wedding is a testament to the progress we've fought so hard to achieve and I refuse to see that progress erased.

Not for other LGBT men and women who want to marry their partner. Not for my children who deserve to live in a country defined by equality and opportunity.

There are a lot of people – with a lot of money – who hate our values and want to destroy the gains we've made. That's why Randy and I agreed that I need to get back to work; the honeymoon has to wait.

The NY primary is tomorrow and the biggest FEC public filing deadline is seven days away.

I wouldn't be asking – in fact, I wouldn't be here today – if this weren't so important.

Please donate whatever you can to my campaign before midnight tomorrow by using this link: https://secure.actblue.com/contribute/page/spmrapidresponse

It would be a huge help and since I can't spend these next few days with my husband, I might as well make it worth it and beat these guys coming after me.

Thanks again and we'll send pictures along ASAP!

Sean

P.S. Now that the wedding is over I can admit it – yes, I was a little nervous…no, I don't feel any different!

I write to tell you of a job transition. I am leaving ProPublica after Labor Day for a new job -- director of development for the Schwarzman Scholars program. Maybe you read about it when it was announced:

Steve Schwarzman devised a program, and contributed $100 million in launch funds, to build a Rhodes Scholar-like program for the best and brightest of graduating seniors. It will be based at Tsinghua University in Beijing, with an eye on building a cohort of top talent who will spend a year in China, earn a master's degree and learn about and understand China in an unprecedented way – something he, and now I, believe, will positively shape global relationships now and in the future. Here's a link to the Schwarzman Scholars website:

http://schwarzmanscholars.org/

My new email there will be debby.goldberg@schwarzmanscholars.org and my permanent email is debby.goldberg@gmail.com My cell remains 917-770-9662 .

It is definitely sad to be leaving ProPublica, an organization whose mission I believe in deeply. Having worked here now for five years I am confident that ProPublica will continue to publish extraordinary stories, and will continue its record of success.

Hope and expect our paths will cross again.

Warm regards,

Debby

Subject:	Pope Francis speech proposal

Please note: While this memo is addressed to Hillary Clinton, I am sending a blind copy to Secretary of State Kerry, because Secretary Clinton and Secretary Kerry are the two leading American public figures who can give different versions, from different perspectives, of a major address translating the teachings of the pope into actionable policy ideas at the domestic and global level.

Let me propose that Hillary give a major address with a title such as "How Pope Francis Inspires Me" and a subtitle such as "A Bill of Rights for the poor." Such as speech would combine direct references to specific teachings of Pope Francis, lessons she has learned from her own Methodist faith, and common teachings about helping the poor from the great religions of the world.

Such a speech could emphasize the hope for ultimately setting aside our political divisions, which the pope explicitly called for in his speech to the joint session of Congress. In my vision of this speech, she would specify her own plan listing details on major issues for a Bill of Rights for the poor, one by one, offering specific major proposals within a broader narrative beginning with Pope Francis and extending to the other great religions

And she would pledge, if elected, that one of her first actions in office would be to seek a bipartisan meeting with Congressional leaders from both parties, to develop a bipartisan bill of rights for the poor that would welcome Republican and conservative ideas, in the tradition of Jack Kemp, along with Democratic and progressive ideas.

Such a speech could be in the nature of a formal address, or remarks in the form of a sermon or homily at a church or major religious convention. The venue could be the JFK presidential library, Notre Dame University, St. Patrick's Cathedral, or the National Press Club. And again, since the pope explicitly called for political leaders to set aside their differences in pursuit of higher common goals, while the "Bill of Rights for the poor" would have directly progressive overtones, the willingness to meet with Republicans and conservatives would offer an honorable answer to the pope's call with a legitimately nonpartisan tone.

If there is serious interest, I would be more than happy to volunteer to draft either a detailed narrative memo listing content ideas or a first version of speech language, though I emphasize I would not want money, a job, or any form of public recognition if this works---which I am highly confident it will. I am just so inspired by the pope and so disgusted by our politics today that trying to offer any alternative---including this note--qualifies as a labor of love.

Regarding HRC, I am linking a good brief article detailing her Methodist social gospel views that I might use as the basis for a future column. Brent

Subject: Friday Meeting Information

Dear Roger, Anne, Bob, Bob, Larry and Laura,

Bill Daley and I look forward to seeing you on Friday. In advance of that meeting, we wanted to provide you with some additional information:

1. Background on the transition Economic Team's Work:
 a. The transition economic team is focused on identifying the key economic issues confronting a new administration during the transition and once in office, and providing options on these issues that we hope will accelerate the new administration's decision making process.
 b. We are explicitly NOT making recommendations on matters such as how to prioritize between deficit reduction and investment (the role that the NEC and OMB will play in a new administration). We believe that the new President, Vice President and their team will make these choices.
2. Objectives for Friday's Meeting:
 a. Given the nature of our work, we will therefore seek your advice on the following broad questions:
 1. Are there issues of importance that we have failed to identify?
 2. Have we provided useful background information on the issues identified to date and then identified the appropriate options for addressing them?
 3. Have we characterized these options in an insightful, yet balanced manner?
 b. To help facilitate the discussion, you will see that each topic discussed will be proceeded by a slide that outlines what we believe are the key questions where we would seek your guidance. For example, on the budget, "What should be the timing of rolling back the 2001/2003 tax cuts?"
 c. To be clear, we do not expect to come out of the meeting with recommendations for the next administration, but rather greater insight into how we can prepare useful briefing materials. So, on the question identified above about the timing of tax rollbacks, we are not looking for consensus around a certain date, but rather a discussion of the options and their relative merits.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

 d. Finally, while we will present materials that by necessity contain a significant amount of technical background on certain matters, we hope to avoid having the discussion center around these technical questions (e.g., how Congress should score the TARP for budget purposes).

2. Agenda:
 a. At the meeting, we will cover the following topics:
 1. Stimulus
 2. Budget
 3. Financial Markets
 4. International Economics
 5. Draft Post-Election Q&A
 a. In addition to these topics that will be addressed at the meeting, the group is also working on the following topics:
 1. Labor issues
 2. Credit cards
 3. Legal framework for financial markets actions
3. Confidentiality:
 a. With my apologies in advance for stating what I am sure is obvious, the content of this meeting and the fact that it is occurring are both strictly confidential and should not be discussed with members of the press or anyone else who is not participating in the meeting.
 b. The work that will be presented represents the opinion of the team presenting. This effort is independent of the Obama campaign and the materials presented should not in any be construed as reflecting the campaign's positions.
4. Materials:
 a. The presentations will be on a projected screen. Given the confidential nature of the materials and the fact that they are evolving rapidly in light of recent market and government developments, we do not plan to distribute hard copies of the presentations in advance of or at the meeting.
5. Biographies:
 a. Rather than go through introductions at the meeting, I have attached biographies on each of the people presenting (for the sake of clarity, I would note that Jack Lew is both presenting and a member of the advisory board).
 b. You will see from the "cc's" above that we will be joined at the meeting by a few senior members of the overall transition effort.
6. Logistics Reminder:
 a. Friday, October 17th in NYC.
 b. The meeting will take place in the offices of Simpson, Thatcher and Bartlett.
 c. Address: 425 Lexington Avenue, between 43rd & 44th street, 30th floor, Conference room 30J
 d. Please make sure to have proper ID to enter the building.
 e. The meeting will run from 9:00 am thru 3:00 pm
 f. Breakfast and Lunch will be served.

Please let Bill or me know if you have any questions or suggestions. We thank you in advance for your help.

Best,

Josh

Here are two draft paragraphs that John and you should obviously feel free to edit. I've copied John since he was there. Hope it's helpful:

On October 17th in New York, the transition economic team (led by Bill Daley) met with its informal "advisory board," which consists of Laura Tyson, Roger Ferguson, Anne Mulcahy, Bob Reich, Bob Rubin, Larry Summers, Paul Volker and Jack Lew. All members except Mr. Volker were scheduled to attend, but Mr. Ferguson was unable to come at the last minute. In addition, John Podesta, Pete Rouse, Bob Litan, Todd Stern and Michael Froman attended. The group spent six hours reviewing the following topics: Stimulus, Budget, Financial Markets (including foreclosures) and International Econonics. Each area began with a review of the positions expressed during the campaign.

Several high level areas received particular attention: 1) framing the budget discussions in contrast to the situation in 1993 and in light of the current economic climate; 2) the size, timing and content of a stimulus plan given the economic climate and budget picture; 3) efforts to address the foreclosure crisis; and, 4) reviewing the international agenda in light of potentially conflicting priorities (e.g., addressing China's currency policies without compromising important bilateral financial relationships).

This comes from Anita Dunn, one of our communications people on the campaign: "Both the Times (Peter Baker) and the Post (Balz, Shaleigh Murray) are working on big transition pieces. A timely reminder to all our task force members not to talk to the press is definitely in order." Please pass this message to others on your teams. And just a reminder, all press calls should be directed to Anita Dunn or Dan Pfeiffer at the campaign. Thanks.

Friends -

During tomorrow's debate, we'll be launching our "Trusted Tweeters" program, and will be sending periodic updates on how we're responding in key moments.

This is something of a real-time, twitter version of the talkers updates you already receive. Rob Flaherty runs our "tweeters" program, and he's CC'd here. If you're interested in these updates, please email him with the email address you'd like him to add to the list.

In the future, the list will be used to give you periodic messaging updates and content to share.

Thanks!

Debate People,

Attached is a full mock script for Tuesday. Please review and comment.

As for the session itself, we will do some Q-and-A drills before we start the mock. So we won't get through this entire mock, but we will use pieces of it. I will send around a proposed agenda later today.

And of course, Karen will be having a baby on Tuesday early morning, so, she'll probably be an hour or two late for our 9am start.

Dear John,

We wanted to give you a heads up that Google is exploring ideas for a potentially big company initiative related to climate change. We've heard about this from Sergio's brother in law, who is on the Energy and Sustainability Team at Google. One of Google's ideas is to help shed light on national-level "deep decarbonization pathways" in advance of the Paris climate talks (see below).

Would you have any interest in a discussion with the senior policy and energy people at Google about what they could do that would be helpful? We can gather more specifics if this is of interest.

The project's goal is to fill a significant gap in current energy and climate discussions by:

Creating a publicly available, transparent and flexible platform for developing,displaying, and comparing long term greenhouse gas reduction scenarios worldwide.

Encouraging the discussion of decarbonization pathways and helping to convene the right parties (research, policy, and industry) in support of climate conversations and strong policy setting.

The subject-matter area is broadly defined as any particular matter, field of policy, or agency. In addition, this option would require deregistration before joining the Transition.
> The second option involves a similar 12-month substantive look back period, but would prohibit federally-registered lobbyist from engaging in any lobbying activity during the period of their involvement in the Transition rather than requiring deregistration.
> While both options create substantial restrictions on lobbyist involvement in the Transition that would be consistent with President-elect Obama's stated commitment during the campaign, several concerns have been raised by our lawyers regarding the deregistration requirement. In short, they have argued that a two-month deregistration requirement, following which any number will promptly re-register, seems dodgy, hard to defend in the press and doesn't address the conflict of interest concern. In addition, the deregistration process is cumbersome to the point that any deregistration would not be immediately accessible to the public. As such, any enterprising reporter seeking to confirm registration status would not be able to confirm a deregistration.
> Based on the above, I recommend that the Board approve the second option. The attached document includes a draft of the code of conduct with the second option outlined in paragraph 3. Please review and share your feedback. We would like to finalize this document by the end of the day in order to begin the process of fully vetting staff and volunteers to the Transition.

Mayor Webb flagged that there was a survey that was conducted of all members in the assembly and senate and a lot of them are supporting HRC but there's room for improvement – he is getting the results for us.

We asked for their help with Mayors and Polis and Perlmutter's staff are sending Jessica a list of Democratic Mayors in their district.

Steve Bachar is putting together a list of businesses he thinks we should engage.

Crisanta, Angela, and Brittany are connecting Jessica with legislators over email and will work on putting together a list of members with their personal contact information.

Is there anyone you think we should add? Do you think Secretary Salazar would want to participate on this?

This program will provide an introductory review on the federal procurement bid protest process, with a focus both on the procedural complexities of bid protest litigation, as well as a high-level review of the types of substantive legal issues that frequently arise in bid protests. Our expert panel will help you:

- Become familiar with the rules and practices of the most common bid protest forums including the Government Accountability Office, the United States Court of Federal Claims, and FAA's Office of Dispute Resolution
- Prepare for tight bid protest timelines, the unusual discovery limitations of an administrative record review, and handle confidential procurement information
- Issue-spot common protest allegations and avoid common pitfalls that lead to dismissed protests and waivers of key arguments

Hello John,

It was good to catch up today.

First, I sat down with the team and we sorted out the scheduling issues to make the 9th work as we've planned. I'd like to stay for the meeting the morning of the 10th with Larry Kramer as well, if that would work for you. As it turns out, one of the grants we're looking at has Hewlett funding and there might be some interesting connections.

Second, how about doing the White Board session on March 3rd (Tuesday) from 3 to 5 or 6 pm? Ed and Elisabeth will join for that and I'm copying them to coordinate all our calendars.

Best,
Heather

Subject:	What are they hiding?

Dear John,

Why are the Republicans trying to protect corporations? Why don't they want the American people to know who's trying to influence their votes? What are they trying to hide?

Please stand with me and call on the GOP to stop their obstruction and bring transparency and accountability to our election process.

Click here to sign a petition demanding that Republicans in Congress support the DISCLOSE Act and stop allowing corporations to buy elections and disenfranchise voters.

Every year, corporate special interests spend millions of dollars on nasty, negative ads. But unlike candidates, who have to stand by each of their ads, corporations don't have to come clean about their involvement. It isn't right. Voters deserve to know exactly where these messages are coming from.

The DISCLOSE Act would require corporations and advocacy groups to appear in every ad they run and approve its message. And no company that has a government contract of more than $50,000, or gets taxpayer-funded assistance through a program like TARP, would be able to spend money on elections.

These and other reform measures would help reduce the power and influence corporations have on our elections, but the Republicans say they don't want them. They don't want voters to know who they're beholden to. They don't want to bring transparency and accountability to Washington.

Click here to tell the Republicans that you want to know who's paying for campaign ads. Tell them you won't tolerate special interests having too much influence on the election process.

Citizens United was the wrong decision for our country, but we don't have to let it stand. We can counter it with legislation that brings fairness and honesty back to our elections.

Sincerely,

Kirsten Gillibrand

Hey John: Thanks so much for your help with this! Attached is a document describing our PAC, SoS for Democracy. Please let me know if this is what you had in mind -- we can make any changes you think would be helpful. As I mentioned, AFSCME, SEIU, Emily's List and NEA are all on board. We are extremely excited about the opportunities -- and believe this is a much-needed project. Again, sincere thanks for your help with this. And it goes without saying, but if you need anything once you move back into your new gig please let me know. Best, Steve Adding my incredible awe of LP and Megan and all of you for this amazing statement, and to Dominic for working with the community so effectively.

I just got this nice note from friends who were among the first in line to get married in San Francisco in 2004 when Gavin first opened the doors to City Hall. They had been together for 20+ years by the time they got married.

Hi, Ann:

Jen and I wanted to tell you how incredibly impressed we were with HRC when she was able to apologize for what she said about the Reagans etc. in such a remarkably humble and authentic way. She showed true leadership, something we are not seeing a lot of these days. We are so proud of her and moved by her courage to open herself up publicly in this manner. Definitely presidential material!!

Hope you are well. Keep up the good work!

Love,

Viki and Jen

HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON

STATEMENT ON HIV AND AIDS

Yesterday, at Nancy Reagan's funeral, I said something inaccurate when speaking about the Reagans' record on HIV and AIDS. Since then, I've heard from countless people who were devastated by the loss of friends and loved ones, and hurt and disappointed by what I said, and I understand why. I made a mistake, plain and simple.

I want to use this opportunity to talk not only about where we've come from but where we must go in the fight against HIV and AIDS.

To be clear, the Reagans did not start a national conversation about HIV and AIDS. Unfortunately, the opposite was true. That distinction belongs to generations of brave men and women who started not just a conversation but a movement that continues to this day.

The AIDS crisis in America began as a quiet, deadly epidemic. Because of discrimination and disregard, it remained that way for far too long. When many in positions of power turned a blind eye, it was groups like ACT UP, Gay Men's Health Crisis and others that came forward to shatter the silence. They organized and marched, held die-ins on the steps of city halls and vigils in the streets. They fought alongside a few courageous voices in Washington, like U.S. Representative Henry Waxman, who spoke out from the floor of Congress.

Then there were all the people whose names we don't often hear today – the unsung heroes who fought on the frontlines of the crisis, from hospital wards and bedsides, some with their last breath. Slowly, too slowly, ignorance was crowded out by information. People who had once closed their eyes opened their hearts.

If not for those advocates, activists and ordinary, heroic people, we would not be where we are in preventing and treating HIV and AIDS. Their courage – and their refusal to accept silence as the status quo – saved lives.

We've come a long way. But we still have work to do to eradicate this disease for good and to erase the stigma that is an echo of a shameful and painful period in our country's history.

This issue is important to me. At the 1992 Democratic National Convention, when my husband accepted the nomination for president, we marked a break with the past by having two HIV-positive speakers -- the first time that ever happened at a national convention. As First Lady, I brought together world leaders to strategize and coordinate efforts to take on HIV and AIDS around the world. In the Senate, I put forward legislation to expand global AIDS research and assistance and to increase prevention and education. And as Secretary of State, I launched a campaign to usher in an AIDS-free generation through prevention and treatment, targeting the populations at greatest risk of contracting HIV.

The AIDS crisis looks very different today. There are more options for treatment and prevention than ever before. More people with HIV are leading full and happy lives. But HIV and AIDS are still with us. They continue to disproportionately impact communities of color, transgender people, young people and gay and bisexual men. There are still 1.2 million people living with HIV in the United States today, with about 50,000 people newly diagnosed each year. In Sub-Saharan Africa, almost 60 percent of people with HIV are women and girls. Even though the tools exist to end this epidemic once and for all, there are still far too many people dying today. That is absolutely inexcusable.

I believe there's even more we can – and must – do together. For starters, let's continue to increase HIV and AIDS research and invest in the promising innovations that research is producing. Medications like PrEP are proving effective in preventing HIV infection; we should expand access to that drug for everyone, including at-risk populations. We should call on Republican governors to put people's health and well-being ahead of politics and extend Medicaid, which would provide healthcare to those with HIV and AIDS. We should call on states to reform outdated and stigmatizing HIV criminalization laws. We should increase funding for the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR). And we should cap out-of-pocket expenses and drug costs, and hold companies like Turing and Valeant accountable when they attempt to gouge patients by jacking up the price of lifesaving medications.

We're still surrounded by memories of loved ones lost and lives cut short. But we're also surrounded by survivors who are fighting harder than ever. We owe it to them and to future generations to continue that fight together. For the first time, an AIDS-free generation is in sight. As president, I promise you that I will not let up until we reach that goal. We will not leave anyone behind.

When many in positions of power turned a blind eye, it was groups like ACT UP, Gay Men's Health Crisis, and others that came forward to shatter the silence. They organized and marched, held die-ins on the steps of city halls and vigils in the streets. They fought alongside a few courageous voices in Washington, like U.S. Representative Henry Waxman, who spoke out from the floor of Congress.

Then there were all the people whose names we don't hear and maybe don't even know – the unsung heroes who fought on the front lines of the crisis, from hospital wards and bedsides, some with their last breath. Slowly, too slowly, ignorance was crowded out by information. People who had once closed their eyes opened their hearts.

If not for those advocates, activists, and ordinary people, we would not be where we are in preventing and treating HIV/AIDS. Their courage and their refusal to accept silence as the status quo saved lives.

We've come a long way since. But we still have work to do to eradicate this disease for good, and erase the stigma that is an echo of a shameful and painful period in our country's history.

This is work that I've been committed to for a long time. As First Lady, I brought together world leaders to strategize and coordinate efforts to take on HIV/AIDS around the globe. In the Senate, I put forward legislation to expand global AIDS research and assistance, and increase prevention and education. And as Secretary of State, I launched a campaign to usher in an AIDS-free generation through prevention and treatment, targeting the populations at greatest risk of contracting HIV (including key populations at risk of discrimination), and investing in innovative research and technology.

I believe there's even more we can do together. For starters, we should call on Republican governors to put people's health and well-being ahead of politics and extend Medicaid, which would provide health care to those living with HIV/AIDS. And we should cap out-of-pocket expenses, and hold companies like Turing and Valeant accountable when they attempt to gouge prices of lifesaving medications. And we should expand access to medications like PrEP.

The AIDS crisis looks very different today. We're still surrounded by memories of loved ones lost and lives cut short. But we're also surrounded by survivors who are fighting harder than ever. We owe it to them, and to future generations, to continue that fight together. There are more options for treatment and prevention than ever before. More people with HIV are leading full, happy lives. For the first time, an AIDS-free generation is in sight. And we can't let up until we reach that goal.

Have floated this idea in a couple of places, but putting it on this thread as well--we have two places online that we could respond to in terms of digital organizing perspective. There is an Out for Hillary group with 14k members that I think some kind of extended engagment over this would be helpful--an AMA with Dominic/Robby/Dennis, a special Note (which is a long form format over Facebook), re-purposing the Medium piece there, etc would go a long way. Our other option is Reddit, which has an extremely vocal core of LGBT members, but I would prioritize this Facebook group, which is the largest LGBT community of Hillary's supporters I know. These are friendlies, they are already carrying water for us making sure the apology is out there, and they firmly sit in groups 1 and 2 that Dom identified.

Whatever we did to send our LGBT talking points to folks has really worked, they are popping up everywhere on the supporter Facebook groups.

and comms

I think our lingering problem on this is that people just don't understand, on a fact level, what happened and how she could have gotten so mixed up. And in the absence of any explanatory information, they assume the worst -- like that this was some cynical political strategy of ours. (Which, I would note, makes no sense -- why would our strategy be to piss everyone off? -- but regardless.)

So I would vote to do a little something just to give people an understanding of how this happened, and then pivot to something else -- maybe that's celebrating the people who really did start a national conversation on AIDS, or something else.

Believe LP is working on a draft that could be a Facebook note or a Medium post, just to give something to react to.

on how we're thinking of responding in the short and long term. (Sending to a smaller group from yesterday's call but please do loop in others who should be a part of this convo.)

First, as you can imagine, most people are expressing palpable anger and hurt over the comments. I won't belabor the point because I'm sure we all fielded calls, texts, tweets in the last 24 hours over this. But suffice to say, we aren't in a good place with the community right now.

If I had to break things down, I'd put people into three categories: 1) supporters who were horrified at the comment but accept the apology; 2) supporters who are angry and can only be mollified with a longer statement, tv appearance, roundtable, or something else big that shows she "gets it." They will continue to make hay in the meantime; and 3) Bernie folks who are happy to have a new line of attack.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

What concerns me is that in that second group are a lot folks from Queer Nation, ACT UP, and other activists who are out, loud, and not afraid of direct action or aggressive confrontation. Given that, I'd love if we could build on yesterday's response -- and quickly. I don't want this to fester.

I assume we're prepping an answer for tomorrow's town hall, but has there been talk in the office of doing more today?

Looking ahead, is it possible to bump up an HIV / AIDS policy rollout? Is there any interest in putting a roundtable conversation or OTR together? (Robbie Kaplan has already volunteered GMHC.)

Would love to know where your heads are at and to be a part of the conversation today about next steps and moving forward.

Thanks,

D.

Subject: GiveGreen to fight Big Oil!

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS ACTION FUND

Dear John:

Election Day may be 216 days from now, but our friends in Congress are already facing a barrage of negative attacks from corporate polluters and their allies. Consider the following:

Don't let corporate polluters defeat our clean energy champions in Congress.

Donate to pro-environment candidates through GiveGreen today!

- Sarah Palin recently announced that she'll be organizing her supporters to defeat 20 House incumbents. Among her targets are several pro-environment House members.
- Big Oil's allies in Washington have already run TV and radio ads against 14 House members who voted for the American Clean Energy and Security Act, including a TV ad against Rep. Tom Perriello that was so misleading that one station refused to air it.
- The Ohio Coal Association has put up dozens of billboards also attacking House members who supported the historic climate bill last year. The coal group said the billboards were just the beginning of a "sizable campaign."

And this is just the beginning of what we expect to be an all out assault on those candidates who are willing to stand up to corporate polluters by supporting efforts to curb global warming pollution. January's landmark Supreme Court ruling lifted restrictions on how much money big corporations like ExxonMobil can spend defeating our allies — flooding the democratic process with vast sums of corporate cash.

But you can help counter the influence of Big Oil, Dirty Coal and other polluting interests on elections by donating through GiveGreen – the only website dedicated to supporting environmental candidates.

Click here to see the list of GiveGreen candidates and donate.

Through GiveGreen, you can give to candidates who will fight for a clean energy future, such as:

- Tom Perriello (VA-05) – This first-term House member represents one of the most competitive congressional districts in the country and is already facing scathing attacks for standing up to corporate special interests and supporting comprehensive clean energy legislation.
- Robin Carnahan (MO-Sen) – Unlike her opponent, Dirty Dozen member Roy "Big Oil" Blunt, Carnahan recognizes that clean energy can help jump-start the economy and create new jobs.
- Bill Halter (AR-Sen) – Taking on Democratic senator – and Dirty Dozen member – Blanche Lincoln, Halter opposes the incumbents attempt to block the Environmental Protection Agency from limiting harmful global warming pollution.
- Paul Hodes (NH-Sen) – With a perfect 100% LCV lifetime score, Hodes' election this November would add a strong pro-environment voice and a clean energy leader to the U.S. Senate.

Click here to give to these or other pro-environment candidates today.

March 31st marks the end of the fundraising quarter – and candidates' quarterly fundraising totals serve as a key early measure of their campaign's success. That's why giving to these candidates now, before the end of the month, is critical to demonstrating to political watchers that pro-environment candidates are up for the fight in 2010. And why donate to environmental candidates through GiveGreen? Because when candidates receive contributions from you and hundreds of others through GiveGreen, they get a strong message that you are concerned about clean energy and global warming, and other environmental issues.

Stand with us against Big Oil, and donate to one of these outstanding candidates today . And please share this email with friends and family who share your environmental values.

Thank you,

Gene Karpinski
President

Huckabee new GOP leader in Iowa Poll

By JONATHAN ROOS • REGISTER STAFF WRITER • Copyright 2007, Des Moines Register and Tribune Company • December 2, 2007

Mike Huckabee has leaped ahead of Republican presidential rival Mitt Romney in Iowa, seizing first place in a new Des Moines Register poll of likely Republican caucus participants.

Huckabee wins the support of 29 percent of Iowans who say they definitely or probably will attend the Republican Party's caucuses on Jan. 3. That's a gain of 17 percentage points since the last Iowa Poll was taken in early October, when Huckabee trailed both Romney and Fred Thompson.

Other poll findings indicate that the former Arkansas governor is making the most of a low-budget campaign by tapping into the support of Iowa's social conservatives.

Romney, who has invested more time and money campaigning in the state than any other GOP candidate, remains in the thick of the Iowa race with the backing of 24 percent of likely caucusgoers. But that's a drop of 5 points since October for the former Massachusetts governor.

Former New York mayor Rudy Giuliani, the frontrunner in national polls, holds third place in Iowa at 13 percent, despite waging a limited campaign in the state.

Thompson, a former U.S. senator from Tennessee who waited until September to formally enter the race for the Republican nomination, has slipped to fourth place in the Iowa Poll, at 9 percent.

U.S. Sen. John McCain of Arizona and U.S. Rep. Ron Paul of Texas are tied for fifth place at 7 percent each. Four other candidates trail them. The new Iowa Poll, conducted over four days last week, has a margin of error of plus or minus 4.4 percentage points.

The complexion of the race could easily change in the last month of intense campaigning ahead of the caucuses, which lead off the presidential nominating process. Roughly six in 10 likely Republican caucus participants say they could still be persuaded to support another candidate. Poll participant Thelma Whittaker, a retired teacher from Columbus Junction, is leaning toward supporting Huckabee in the caucuses but also could back Romney.

"I'm a very conservative Republican and I feel that (Huckabee) follows through with those ideas," said Whittaker, who is troubled by the country's moral decline. On the other hand, she wonders if Huckabee is a strong enough candidate to win the White House for the GOP.

When it comes to Romney, "I go along with a lot of his ideas,'" Whittaker said, "but he's also done some flip-flopping that scares me on issues like abortion and taxes."

Huckabee has come a long way since last May, when he languished in a tie for sixth place in the Register's poll, garnering the support of just 4 percent of likely caucus participants then.

His campaign picked up steam after he notched a surprising second-place finish in the Iowa Republican Party's straw poll in August.

The Register's new scientific poll shows Huckabee, a former Baptist minister, leading Romney 38 percent to 22 percent among those who consider themselves born-again Christians. In October, Romney edged Huckabee 23 percent to 18 percent among people in that group, which accounts for one-half of all likely caucus participants.

Similarly, Huckabee holds a 2-to-1 lead over Romney among those who say it is more important for a presidential candidate to be socially conservative than fiscally conservative.

Here are some other key comparisons for the two leading candidates in the poll:

- Huckabee leads Romney among men, 28 percent to 20 percent. They run neck-and-neck among women.

- Huckabee draws more support than Romney among caucusgoers between the ages of 35 and 54, while Romney does better among younger adults. They compete almost evenly among those 55 or older.

Older Iowans generally turn out in larger numbers for the caucuses than do younger adults.

- Both candidates are regarded favorably by more than three-fourths of likely caucus participants.

- Huckabee outscores Romney and the rest of the Republican field as the candidate seen as the most socially conservative, the most civil in tone and the most principled.

- Romney leads on six characteristics, including the most presidential of the GOP candidates, the most fiscally conservative and the best able to bring about real change.

Giuliani, the poll's third-place finisher, is seen as the most electable of the candidates and also has a slight edge as the most effective negotiator and the best able to bring Republicans and Democrats together.

On the other hand, Giuliani is seen by more likely caucus participants as the most ego-driven of the candidates.

Other poll findings show that Giuliani is more of a polarizing figure than the other top-tier candidates in Iowa:

- Thirty-four percent of likely caucusgoers see him as one of the worst choices for the Republican nomination. Paul ranks second in that category, at 26 percent.

- While 61 percent regard Giuliani favorably, 38 percent have unfavorable feelings toward him. Only Paul has a higher unfavorable mark in the poll, at 44 percent.

"He's too New York," Whittaker, the retired teacher, said of Giuliani. "He doesn't understand us. He doesn't care to understand us."

But poll participant Mark Pottorff, an agronomist from Sergeant Bluff, sides with those who have a high regard for Giuliani, citing his experience as a federal prosecutor and big-city mayor.

"He is tough on crime and during September 2001 he led New York City through some very tough and dark days," said Pottorff, 51. "I think he has the ability and the fortitude to stand up to dictators and terrorists."

Pottorff's second choice for the Republican presidential nomination is Romney, citing his experience in business and government and his commitment to his family.

Other poll findings show Thompson, the fourth-place finisher overall, tying with Huckabee as the candidate who is most like Ronald Reagan — the Republican president often cited by party leaders as their role model.

Paul, an opponent of the war in Iraq, has the dubious distinction as the GOP candidate who outpolls his rivals as the most negative contender.

But Paul, who has a loyal following and a well-funded campaign, has been creeping up in the Register's polls this year of likely caucus participants, matching McCain's level of support in the latest survey.

Subject: ICYMI: Hillary Clinton's Fair Growth Gambit [LA Times]

Friends -

Flagging for all of you the following column that ran in the LA Times over the weekend, highlighting Hillary Clinton's economic policy.

Key Quote: "The details will be important, of course. But Clinton has managed not only to find a sensible starting point in the middle of the Democratic Party; she's introduced some useful new ideas to the campaign and launched a debate that will force rivals in both parties to respond."

Hillary Clinton's fair growth gambit

By: Doyle McManus - LA Times

July 19, 2015

http://www.latimes.com/opinion/op-ed/la-oe-0719-mcmanus-hillary-clinton-economics-20150719-column.html

For most of a generation, Democrats have divided into two broad camps on economic policy. There are "growth Democrats," who argue that a rising tide will lift all boats; that was the reigning view during the Bill Clinton administration under Treasury Secretaries Robert Rubin and Lawrence H. Summers. And there are "fairness Democrats," who argue that the central problem is inequality. That's the view of the party's progressive wing, led today by Sen. Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts and Sen. Bernie Sanders of Vermont.

As she began spelling out her views for the 2016 presidential campaign, Hillary Rodham Clinton faced a choice: Which Democrat was she going to be?

Her answer: She wants to be both. "I believe we have to build a growth and fairness economy," she said last week. "You can't have one without the other."

Politically, that put Clinton exactly where she wants to be: to the left of her husband's long-ago administration, which progressives think was too solicitous toward Wall Street, but to the right of Sanders, who's running as the scourge of the billionaire class.

So her economic policy speech included a dose of the pro-worker Hillary, calling for stronger union bargaining power and demanding equal pay for equal work, but also the pro-business Hillary, extolling entrepreneurs and promising to be "the small-business president."

There was recycled Obama administration policy too: a higher minimum wage, an infrastructure bank, investment in education and renewable energy. In economic policy a Hillary Clinton presidency would look more like a third Obama term than a third Bill Clinton term.

But she offered some intriguing new elements as well — policies that could not only help her bridge the gaps between her party's wings but also make her pitch more than just a warmed-over version of the last eight years.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

She promised proposals to promote long-term investment by businesses instead of a chase for quarterly results — a problem she called "short-termism." (It may be the first time any presidential candidate has ever used that word.)

Clinton offered ... policies that could ... bridge the gaps between her party's wings, but also make her pitch ... more than just a warmed-over version of the last eight years.-

"Too many pressures in our economy push us toward short-termism," Clinton said. "Everything is focused on the next earnings report or the short-term share price, and the result is too little attention to the sources of long-term growth: research and development, physical capital and talent."

She promised proposals for "making sure stock buybacks aren't used only for an immediate boost in share prices," a practice economists fear is soaking up funds that might go to more productive investments. And she said she wants to make sure stock markets "work for everyday investors, not just high-frequency traders."

Clinton hasn't spelled out any details yet. But it sounded as though she may propose changing Securities and Exchange Commission rules to make it harder for companies to buy back their own stock, an idea Warren and other progressives have championed.

Aides said Clinton also plans to propose changes in the tax treatment of capital gains — income from investments — to reward long-term investors. Laurence Fink, chairman of the investment firm BlackRock, has proposed lengthening the holding period for long-term capital gains (which benefit from a low tax rate) from one year to three years, and perhaps making all gains tax-free after 10 years.

"U.S. tax policy, as it stands, incentivizes short-term behavior," Fink wrote. "Tax reform that promotes long-term investment will benefit both the companies who rely on capital markets and the hundreds of millions of people saving for retirement."

Finally, Clinton called for a broader shift in the way American businesses behave. "We need to get businesses back looking after their employees and their customers and their communities and our country, not just their executives and their shareholders," she said in New Hampshire on Thursday.

In effect, she was arguing for abandoning a principle many U.S. firms have followed since the 1970s: the idea that the sole duty of a corporation is to maximize shareholder value.

"There's increasing debate in the business community over a fundamental question: What's the purpose of a corporation?" Judith Samuelson, director of the Aspen Institute's Business and Society Program, told me. "We've been in thrall to a very simplistic idea — that the purpose is to maximize shareholder value. But that's not the only purpose, and it doesn't need to be."

Some of these ideas, intriguingly, appeal not only to Democratic business leaders but to some Republicans. too. Conservative writer James Pethokoukis of the American Enterprise Institute warned: "Arguing against short-termism should be a natural fit for Republicans…. Hillary Clinton just stole a potentially powerful theme right from under them."

The details will be important, of course. But Clinton has managed not only to find a sensible starting point in the middle of the Democratic Party; she's introduced some useful new ideas to the campaign and launched a debate that will force rivals in both parties to respond.

truthout

Once again, violence and mayhem in the shattered nation of Iraq is making headlines. Meanwhile, the George W. Bush-era authors of that nation's ongoing war have taken to the airwaves and the editorial pages in an effort to distance themselves from the carnage and misery their actions have wrought. While they desperately attempt to shove their culpability away from themselves and into the lap of the administration which inherited their folly, a new e-book from Truthout sets the record straight.

In The Mass Destruction of Iraq , Truthout writers William Rivers Pitt and Dahr Jamail provide the definitive history of what happened to Iraq, why it happened, and who is responsible. From Pitt's early reporting on the ultimate motivations behind the Iraq invasion, to Jamail's unembedded reporting from Iraq as the occupation ground on, to the detailed breakdown of every lie we were told to justify this war, to the serial naming of those who had a hand in it, this book is the period at the end of a long, bleeding sentence.

This is why it happened, and this is who is responsible. Order The Mass Destruction of Iraq for Kindle now!

John --

Last year, millions of Americans came together for a great purpose.

Folks like you assembled a grassroots movement that shocked the political establishment and changed the course of our nation. When Washington insiders counted us out, we put it all on the line and changed our democracy from the bottom up. But that's not why we did it.

The pundits told us it was impossible -- that the donations working people could afford and the hours volunteers could give would never loosen the vise grip of big money and powerful special interests. We proved them wrong. But as important as that was, that's not why we did it.

Today, spiraling health care costs are pushing our families and businesses to the brink of ruin, while millions of Americans go without the care they desperately need. Fixing this broken system will be enormously difficult. But we can succeed. The chance to make fundamental change like this in people's daily lives -- that is why we did it.

The campaign to pass real health care reform in 2009 is the biggest test of our movement since the election. Once again, victory is far from certain. Our opposition will be fierce, and they have been down this road before. To prevail, we must once more build a coast-to-coast operation ready to knock on doors, deploy volunteers, get out the facts, and show the world how real change happens in America.

And just like before, I cannot do it without your support.

So I'm asking you to remember all that you gave over the last two years to get us here -- all the time, resources, and faith you invested as a down payment to earn us our place at this crossroads in history. All that you've done has led up to this -- and whether or not our country takes the next crucial step depends on what you do right now.

Please donate whatever you can afford to support the campaign for real health care reform in 2009.

It doesn't matter how much you can give, as long as you give what you can. Millions of families on the brink are counting on us to do just that. I know we can deliver.

Thank you, so much, for getting us this far. And thank you for standing up once again to take us the rest of the way.

Sincerely,

President Barack Obama

Professor Podesta,

I know that today is your last day as counselor to President Obama and wanted to send you a quick note to say thank you. Though we are not on the same side of the political aisle, I have the utmost respect and admiration for your dedication and continued service to our country at the highest levels of government (while still finding time to teach at Georgetown).

I know there are many rumors about your next move, and I wish you the best in your next endeavor - though I humbly ask that you take it easy on us in 2016. We probably need it.

Thank you again for your continued career of service, and I hope to have the opportunity catch up in the near future.

Best Regards,

Bryan

Subject:	IAM

Hi guys
I just spoke with IAM, they have confidentiality shared with us that Buffenbarger will be moving his board to take a endorsement vote on August 14th in NYC. Only three officers at IAM are aware of this, so its being tightly held so that they don't have any issues on the board with timing.

They will be requesting that the Secretary attend a retirement dinner for Sec/Treasurer Robert Roach at the Hilton NYC the evening of August 14th. The vote will have happened earlier that day and all of Buffenbarger's board will be in attendance at the dinner. I wanted to flag this for scheduling.

The IAM endorsement is usually made at their Convention. But their next Convention is not until 2016. Buffenbarger didn't want to wait. Great news.

John:

You were great today. Our "how to do it all" memo is being prepared for release Wednesday. We've put entitlement reform as part of fiscal discipline squarely on the table (but clearly only in the context of reform of social safety net -- right side up retirement security and universal health care). Exceprts below on this and also short summary of the brief defense language rudy still to provide. (Full memo attached.) Let me know if you have concerns.

OVERVIEW -- After need for stimulus, energy, health care, education...

The serious economic threats facing our economy are more urgent than this year's budget deficit, but like American families, we also need to start quickly to restore financial discipline and the public's confidence in government. Even as we are spending more in the short term, we must make a serious commitment to scrub the budget of inefficient and ineffective programs and tax incentives, make tough choices among competing priorities, and address the sustainability of Medicare and Social Security – the looming fiscal challenge in the coming decades – in the context of reform of the social safety net that provides retirement and health care security.

MEDICARE

Putting Medicare on a sustainable path is not possible without broader health care reform as described above. Reforming health care could be the single most important step we could take to restore budget discipline. According to the Government Accountability Office, "the real driver of the long-term fiscal outlook is health care spending."[i] Federal spending on Medicare and Medicaid is projected to increase from 4 percent of the economy today to 12 percent in 2050.[ii] Slowing their growth is only possible if we can slow health care costs across the economy,[iii] which requires comprehensive reform based on universal coverage, a focus on prevention, cost-effectiveness, and a business-like embrace of health information technology to reduce costs.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The challenges facing Social Security are smaller and further into the future, but nonetheless Social Security faces a projected deficit equal to 1.7 percent of taxable payroll (or 0.7 percent of the economy) over the next 75 years.[iv] Because Social Security remains the foundation of retirement security for most families, reforms to shore up Social Security and address inequities are needed, but should be tackled only along with efforts to remedy the system of "upside down"[FN SPERLING] subsidies for retirement savings and to bolster private pensions.. Proposals for consideration should include boosting savings outside Social Security with a new universal 401(k) [FN SPERLING] and ___[TAKE ONE OF CHRISTIAN'S PROPOSALS RE STRENGTHENING PRIVATE PENSIONS IF POSSIBLE]. In the context of comprehensive pension reform that strengthens savings incentives for middle class and low-income families and the security of pensions, a variety of social security reform approaches could be on the table, including a tax surcharge on the highest-earning workers and slowing the growth of benefits for some better-off retirees.

DEFENSE

NO TEXT AVAILABLE YET. Waiting for Rudy. Will only be a short paragraph in context of financial discipline section. We weren't sure if you were okay including at all. Idea is to lay out the urgent needs -- The substantial demands of ending two foreign wars and redeploying to address other security challenges, maintaining an adequate supply of troops, and the procurement of modern equipment. But over time a responsible end to the conflict in Iraq, rejection of unnecessary cold war era systems, hard scrutiny of the out of control contracting of DoD and other security agencies may yield long term savings that will help strengthen our security and maintain fiscal responsibility.

John,

Wow, what a night that was! The feedback has been over the top and I just want to thank you for that in addition to all you have done.

We were all so elated that your contributions to conservation and extraordinary leadership could be recognized in such incredible style. President Clinton's speech was so outstanding, so personal, so reflective of your conservation leadership, and so nicely tied into Ansel Adams (e.g. "what matters is not the camera but the heart, mind and soul 12" behind it"). The fact that President Clinton accepted the invite and put so much into it speak volumes to your legacy. I just don't know how it could get better than that!

And your speech was also so outstanding and moving as well. I loved your comment about it being the first time following Clinton. The breadth of your achievements is staggering as well as your vision about the path forward for sustaining this planet. It would be so great to get a copy of your speech if you would not mind sharing it with us.

Finally, It was so great your family could join us. What impressive kids you all have!

Good luck on the Ragnar with your son as well as the big race of course.

All the best,

Jamie

STATEMENT ON HIV AND AIDS

Yesterday, at Nancy Reagan's funeral, I said something inaccurate when speaking about the Reagans' record on HIV and AIDS. Since then, I've heard from countless people who were devastated by the loss of friends and loved ones, and hurt and disappointed by what I said, and I understand why. I made a mistake, plain and simple.

I want to use this opportunity to talk not only about where we've come from but where we must go in the fight against HIV and AIDS.

To be clear, the Reagans did not start a national conversation about HIV and AIDS. Unfortunately, the opposite was true. That distinction belongs to generations of brave men and women who started not just a conversation but a movement that continues to this day.

The AIDS crisis in America began as a quiet, deadly epidemic. Because of discrimination and disregard, it remained that way for far too long. When many in positions of power turned a blind eye, it was groups like ACT UP, Gay Men's Health Crisis and others that came forward to shatter the silence. They organized and marched, held die-ins on the steps of city halls and vigils in the streets. They fought alongside a few courageous voices in Washington, like U.S. Representative Henry Waxman, who spoke out from the floor of Congress.

Then there were all the people whose names we don't often hear today – the unsung heroes who fought on the frontlines of the crisis, from hospital wards and bedsides, some with their last breath. Slowly, too slowly, ignorance was crowded out by information. People who had once closed their eyes opened their hearts.

If not for those advocates, activists and ordinary, heroic people, we would not be where we are in preventing and treating HIV and AIDS. Their courage – and their refusal to accept silence as the status quo – saved lives.

We've come a long way. But we still have work to do to eradicate this disease for good and to erase the stigma that is an echo of a shameful and painful period in our country's history.

This issue is important to me. At the 1992 Democratic National Convention, when my husband accepted the nomination for president, we marked a break with the past by having two HIV-positive speakers -- the first time that ever happened at a national convention. As First Lady, I brought together world leaders to strategize and coordinate efforts to take on HIV and AIDS around the world. In the Senate, I put forward legislation to expand global AIDS research and assistance and to increase prevention and education. And as Secretary of State, I launched a campaign to usher in an AIDS-free generation through prevention and treatment, targeting the populations at greatest risk of contracting HIV.

The AIDS crisis looks very different today. There are more options for treatment and prevention than ever before. More people with HIV are leading full and happy lives. But HIV and AIDS are still with us. They continue to disproportionately impact communities of color, transgender people, young people and gay and bisexual men. There are still 1.2 million people living with HIV in the United States today, with about 50,000 people newly diagnosed each year. In Sub-Saharan Africa, almost 60 percent of people with HIV are women and girls. Even though the tools exist to end this epidemic once and for all, there are still far too many people dying today. That is absolutely inexcusable.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I believe there's even more we can – and must – do together. For starters, let's continue to increase HIV and AIDS research and invest in the promising innovations that research is producing. Medications like PrEP are proving effective in preventing HIV infection; we should expand access to that drug for everyone, including at-risk populations. We should call on Republican governors to put people's health and well-being ahead of politics and extend Medicaid, which would provide healthcare to those with HIV and AIDS. We should call on states to reform outdated and stigmatizing HIV criminalization laws. We should increase funding for the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR). And we should cap out-of-pocket expenses and drug costs, and hold companies like Turing and Valeant accountable when they attempt to gouge patients by jacking up the price of lifesaving medications.

We're still surrounded by memories of loved ones lost and lives cut short. But we're also surrounded by survivors who are fighting harder than ever. We owe it to them and to future generations to continue that fight together. For the first time, an AIDS-free generation is in sight. As president, I promise you that I will not let up until we reach that goal. We will not leave anyone behind.

eradicate this disease for good, and erase the stigma that is an echo of a shameful and painful period in our country's history. This is work that I've been committed to for a long time. As First Lady, I brought together world leaders to strategize and coordinate efforts to take on HIV AND AIDS around the globe. In the Senate, I put forward legislation to expand global AIDS research and assistance, and increase prevention and education. And as Secretary of State, I launched a campaign to usher in an AIDS-free generation through prevention and treatment, targeting the populations at greatest risk of contracting HIV (including key populations at risk of discrimination), and investing in innovative research and technology.

I believe there's even more we can do together. For starters, we should call on Republican governors to put people's health and well-being ahead of politics and extend Medicaid, which would provide health care to those living with HIV AND AIDS. And we should cap out-of-pocket expenses, and hold companies like Turing and Valeant accountable when they attempt to gouge prices of lifesaving medications. And we should expand access to medications like PrEP.
The AIDS crisis looks very different today. We're still surrounded by memories of loved ones lost and lives cut short. But we're also surrounded by survivors who are fighting harder than ever. We owe it to them, and to future generations, to continue that fight together. There are more options for treatment and prevention than ever before. BUT IN EXCUSABLY, HIV AND AIDS CONTINUES TO DISPROPORTIONATELY IMPACT COMMUNITIES OF COLOR, TRANSGENDER PEOPLE, YOUTH AND STILL GAY AND BISEXUAL MEN. WHEN THE TOOLS EXIST TO END THIS EPIDEMIC ONCE AND FOR ALL, THERE ARE STILL FAR TOO MANY PEOPLE DYING TODAY.

More people with HIV are leading full, happy lives. For the first time, an AIDS-free generation is in sight. And AS PRESIDENT, I PROMISE YOU THAT I WILL NOT let up until we reach that goal.

I've heard from countless people who are hurt and disappointed by what I said yesterday at Nancy Reagan's funeral about the Reagans' record on HIV/AIDS, and I understand why. The comment was just wrong, and I said so right away.

The Reagans did not start a national conversation about HIV/AIDS. Unfortunately, the opposite is true. That distinction belongs to generations of brave men and women who started not just a conversation, but a movement that continues to this day.

The AIDS crisis in America began as a quiet, deadly epidemic. And I think they are looking for more of an explanation, as Teddy mentioned, because they are just so dumbfounded by the comment. But agree that it can then be an opportunity for HRC to talk about her policy agenda for an AIDS free generation, etc.

Have floated this idea in a couple of places, but putting it on this thread as well--we have two places online that we could respond to in terms of digital organizing perspective. There is an Out for Hillary group with 14k members that I think some kind of extended engagment over this would be helpful--an AMA with Dominic/ Robby/Dennis, a special Note (which is a long form format over Facebook), re-purposing the Medium piece there, etc would go a long way. Our other option is Reddit, which has an extremely vocal core of LGBT members, but I would prioritize this Facebook group, which is the largest LGBT community of Hillary's supporters I know. These are friendlies, they are already carrying water for us making sure the apology is out there, and they firmly sit in groups 1 and 2 that Dom identified.

Whatever we did to send our LGBT talking points to folks has really worked, they are popping up everywhere on the supporter Facebook groups.

how she could have gotten so mixed up. And in the absence of any explanatory information, they assume the worst -- like that this was some cynical political strategy of ours. (Which, I would note, makes no sense -- why would our strategy be to piss everyone off? -- but regardless.)

So I would vote to do a little something just to give people an understanding of how this happened, and then pivot to something else -- maybe that's celebrating the people who really did start a national conversation on AIDS, or something else.

Believe LP is working on a draft that could be a Facebook note or a Medium post, just to give something to react to.

I wanted to start a new thread to give a brief update about what I'm hearing from folks and get up to speed on how we're thinking of responding in the short and long term. (Sending to a smaller group from yesterday's call but please do loop in others who should be a part of this convo.)

First, as you can imagine, most people are expressing palpable anger and hurt over the comments. I won't belabor the point because I'm sure we all fielded calls, texts, tweets in the last 24 hours over this. But suffice to say, we aren't in a good place with the community right now.

If I had to break things down, I'd put people into three categories: 1) supporters who were horrified at the comment but accept the apology; 2) supporters who are angry and can only be mollified with a longer statement, tv appearance, roundtable, or something else big that shows she "gets it." They will continue to make hay in the meantime; and 3) Bernie folks who are happy to have a new line of attack.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

What concerns me is that in that second group are a lot folks from Queer Nation, ACT UP, and other activists who are out, loud, and not afraid of direct action or aggressive confrontation. Given that, I'd love if we could build on yesterday's response -- and quickly. I don't want this to fester.

I assume we're prepping an answer for tomorrow's town hall, but has there been talk in the office of doing more today?

Looking ahead,

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

is it possible to bump up an HIV / AIDS policy rollout? Is there any interest in putting a roundtable conversation or OTR together? (Robbie Kaplan has already volunteered GMHC.)

Would love to know where your heads are at and to be a part of the conversation today about next steps and moving forward.

Thanks,

D.

I gotta say I think it's weird for her to say Bernie is attacking her. That will be what press focuses on. It also sets up everything she says after that comment as an attack on Bernie. So would not do.

Dear Georgetown Law Community,

I am delighted to let you know that in less than two weeks we will be hosting our second annual Georgetown Law Family Weekend on Friday, September 11 and Saturday, September 12.

Last year was our first ever Family Weekend, with approximately 450 people in attendance. As of this morning, we have a huge turnout of over 900 new and returning students and their family members signed up to attend. This is quickly turning out to be one of our most popular events on campus.

Attached is a Schedule of Events so you can see what the entire two-day event looks like. So, if you see hundreds of smiling and very proud faces walking around campus, you'll know why.

Best,

Everybody was happy - well maybe not Huma - but that was with me not with Q-Tip. He was lovely and eloquent. He talked to her about how it's important to let a young black kid in Harlem know how the events in Paris effect him, and how it's so important to connect with the millennial generation in ways that speak to them - being unique and authentic. She remembered that he DJed Chelsea's bday party without prompting! She's amazing. He did mention the radio show BUT it was just in the context of the things he's working on now.

I talked to him a lot before and after - I asked him what he thought about doing the radio show with an audience - which I think would allow us to curate an amazing collection of diverse influencers. This takes us out of his house and gives us more bang for the buck. I'm going to follow up with Betsaida on this!

What do you think?!!!! And THANK YOU for your help with this this morning.

Friend,

I've seen the power of grassroots donations, first as an organizer and now as a public servant.

In our democracy, you don't have to be wealthy to support the causes you believe in -- and when we all pitch in together, we can accomplish things that none of us could on our own.

And listen, there's no better time to chip in than right now: your donation will be doubled.

Between now and Monday, a generous supporter has agreed to match every grassroots donation dollar-for-dollar.

That means your donation will go further than ever to help build this campaign.

I've been fighting for Illinois for a long time now, with folks like you working alongside me every step of the way.

We need to show that the grassroots can still go toe-to-toe with mega-donors -- like the ones my opponent is banking on for victory.

Right now, your support will go twice as far. Chip in $5 or more today to have your donation matched:

Thank you for standing with me,

Governor Quinn

After a discussion with John (who is calling to discuss w Bruce), we think the following is best:

1. Hold exec call today as scheduled
2. Schedule a Pre-Year End Meeting call on wednesday to tee up items for an agenda for an at length discussion on Friday.
3. Schedule a Pre-Year End Meeting in NY on Friday. Those who can join in person that would be great. Those that can't, can join by phone. An agenda and any related documents will be forwarded to you on Thursday. 4. Cancel the meeting that was tentative w BC for Friday as BC has expressed concern (to both John and I) that he thinks we need more time to prepare for the year end discussion with him
5. The Year End Meeting (formally the budget meeting) will cover both financial, strategic and policy issues so please ensure that your input, preparation and any documents in advance for the pre-meetings and the meeting include these issues.
6. We will reschedule the year end meeting w BC to a later date subject to his availability so please stand by for that date.
7. Michelle and Ana will follow-up on times for wednesday call and friday meeting as outlined above with this group.
8. Manifests, format and agenda for the year end meeting w BC will be developed and approved by Bruce and John. If you have items for wednesday's call please send them to John w a copy to Ana so an agenda can be developed.
9. Ana and Michelle will serve as the all-in coordination point: schedule of pre-calls+meetings; collection, organization and distribution of documents to be used; assistance with drafting the agendas as needed by Bruce and John.

Please let us know if you have any questions. Thanks lg

I cannot tell you how excited I was to learn that my friend Judy Feder just made the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee's (DCCC) list of top targeted races.

You probably know that I have been part of Senator Obama's Presidential campaign from the beginning. But, to deliver on Senator Obama's promise of change he is going to need strong allies in the Congress.

I have worked with Judy for years and I can promise you that no one is more capable of helping Senator Obama deliver affordable, universal health coverage than Judy Feder.

Click here to contribute to Judy and help get health care for every American.

Judy is running an incredibly strong campaign. But Frank Wolf and the GOP will do everything they can to protect the status quo. Judy needs to make a strong showing in the next 8 days to prove the strength of her campaign.

Contribute today to help Judy reach her goal of raising $35,000 before the June 30 deadline!

Change will not come easy, but together we really can transform our country. I hope you will consider making a contribution to Judy's campaign to make it happen.

Subject: Announcing Georgetown's Global Futures Initiative

Office of the President
Georgetown University

January 15, 2015

To the Members of the Georgetown University Community

Dear Ladies and Gentlemen:

I am writing to announce the launch of Global Futures, a university-wide collaboration designed to advance our mission and values in ways that recognize and address the critical challenges facing the global community.

Over the next two years, Global Futures will invite members of our community to undertake innovative teaching, research, and dialogue with world leaders in the public sector, business, and civil society around complex and pressing global issues. Our goal is to draw on Georgetown's distinctive character—our strengths across academic disciplines, our Catholic and Jesuit identity, and our presence in Washington, D.C.—to develop the model of an engaged global university in service to the wider world. I invite you to learn more by visiting the Global Futures website .

The Initiative will develop in thematic areas over four semesters in 2015 and 2016. The theme this first semester is "The Global Future of Development." A centerpiece will be a series of public lectures to be delivered by World Bank Group President Jim Yong Kim and Senior Vice President and Chief Economist Kaushik Basu on topics ranging from Ebola and climate change to the social and institutional factors at stake in development efforts. Around these and other events, faculty and students will be invited to participate with colleagues worldwide in an online dialogue about development challenges in their practical and ethical dimensions.

Over the course of the Initiative, the Global Futures Curriculum Studio, a collaboration with our Designing the Future(s) of the

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

University initiative, will advance curricular and co-curricular innovations that prepare our students as citizens and leaders in an interdependent world. In the research context, seminars, workshops, and conferences will highlight faculty and student inquiry on global issues and provide opportunities for critical feedback from the Georgetown community and outside experts.

In the fall semester, our Global Futures work will center on governance, and its focus in spring and fall 2016 will be on security and the environment.

The challenges we face today as a global community are more complex than ever, transcending national and cultural boundaries. I wish to express my gratitude to Thomas Banchoff, our Vice President for Global Engagement, for working closely with members of our faculty to lead this collaborative effort to address the challenges we share. Through the Global Futures framework, we will bring the resources of our university's distinctive tradition—our academic excellence, our history of broad global engagement—to bear in advancing thoughtful solutions that lead to a better future for all people.

Sincerely,

John J. DeGioia

Anthem (WellPoint Virginia)Takes Executive Director of the Virginia Organizing Project to Court Next Tuesday for Trespassing

Is it hubris?
Is it a giant PR mistake?
Or is it the health insurance industry showing its true colors?

At a time when health insurance industry malfeasance is a daily focus of the evening news, Anthem, the Virginia WellPoint subsidiary, has boldly decided to put their own customer on trial for asking to speak to a representative about their rates.

On Tuesday, September 22, 2009, Joe Szakos, executive director of the state-wide social justice organization, the Virginia Organizing Project , will stand trial to defend against trespassing charges brought against him by Anthem.

Click Here to See the Video of the Arrest

Szakos was charged with trespassing on Anthem's property in Richmond on July 24, 2009. He and three Virginia Organizing Project board members attempted to meet with Anthem officials to discuss their concerns about a 14.1 percent insurance premium increase and Anthem's anti-reform lobbying activities. Anthem officials locked the front door to their corporate headquarters when the group approached the building, and called the police to have Szakos arrested.

Anthem declined opportunities to drop the charges. Szakos's legal defense team has subpoenaed Anthem's CEO C. Burke King and director of public relations Scott Golden to appear in court on Tuesday.

The Virginia Organizing Project will be holding a press conference prior to the trial where community members will share their own Anthem horror stories and call for their members of Congress to take action on health care reform.

The Virginia Organizing Project is a statewide, multi-issue grassroots organization committed to challenging injustice by empowering people in local communities to address issues that affect the quality of their lives.

Subject: New Quinnipiac Poll "confirms Joe Sestak's surge"; Toomey's "Panic mode starts ...now"!

Dear John,
Breaking this morning … for the 3rd day in a row ... an independent pollster is confirming our closing surge!!

Quinnipiac has the race:

- Toomey 48% - Sestak 46% !

Quinnipiac's major finding:

- "The race for Pennsylvania's U.S. Senate seat is now a statistical dead heat with Republican Pat Toomey getting 48 percent of likely voters to 46 percent for Democratic U.S. Rep. Joe Sestak ...

 This compares to a 50 - 43 percent likely voter lead for Toomey .. in a September 22 survey ..

 "Pennsylvania is a blue state and Democrats there have begun to come home. They are more engaged than they were earlier in the race. This is not unusual, especially in off-year elections. Democrats often engage later in the campaign than do Republicans. The political environment is more favorable now for them, as evidenced by President Barack Obama's improved, but still decidedly negative, job approval rating."

The Pittsburgh Post Gazette's headline on this "breaking news story" says it best:

- "Panic mode starts . . . now

 A third poll has confirmed Joe Sestak's surge in the US Senate race, though in this one Pat Toomey holds on to a bare 2-point advantage."

Joining this morning in a "CHOIR OF PANIC" for Congressman Toomey's faltering campaign were the following:

The Washington Post is reporting:

- "Toomey is running against the tide … the Quinnipiac Poll continues the string of bad news."

The Daily Caller states:

- "More Toomey voters ... say they may yet change their minds than those now backing Sestak."

Politicalwire reports:

- "Toomey's lead collapses in Pennsylvania."

And, the NY Daily News states:

- "Pennsylvania Rep. Joe Sestak has made a habit of building momentum and coming from behind to win — just ask Arlen Specter — and a new Quinnipiac poll out today suggests he might do it again ...

In a wave year, you'd have to say Toomey has the clear edge, but if there's one place where a state will defy common wisdom and serve as a breakwater, it feels like the Keystone State.

For one thing, Sestak has closed strong in his last two contests, and seems to be able to gin up his own brand of enthusiasm among voters, tapping his military background and his heritage. Indeed, Democratic voters in Pennsylvania seem to be engaging finally, Quinnipiac's Peter Brown said.

For another, even though the anger this year is on the right, a lot of it is directed not just at the government, but at big business, and Toomey was the head of the Club for Growth — less regulation on Wall Street is not a selling point this year."

We do have a "habit of building momentum" …. and we are "closing strong"!!

And, in a potential wave year, Pennsylvania will be the "one place where a state will defy common wisdom and serve as a breakwater"!!

As was highlighted by Joe at last night's winning debate, Congressman Toomey is all about "We The Corporation" rather than "WE THEPEOPLE" … "big business is not a good selling point this year". Joe is the right candidate for Pennsylvania and these times!

We are off to a good start today … there are just 12 days left … we are asking you to please make a needed contribution TODAY of $15, $25, $50, $75, $100, $250 – even if its just a few dollars – to continue to "fuel our closing surge"!

Our closing, operational GOTV strategy of "Bring It On Home " is working! WE NEED TO FULLY FUND IT! Congressman Toomey's campaign is faltering.

Now is the most critical time to keep the pressure on Congressman Toomey! Please make that CRITICAL contribution today to prevent Congressman Toomey from "turning things back in his favor" ... every dollar is making a difference!

Thank you … let's have a great day … in continuing to "bring this race on home"!

Best regards,

Rich Sestak

Subject:	More official results

Still not final. But from official election bureau and based on 97% of precincts reporting. So likely to hold. Also means that fraud is not material. I'll do a statement after the Constitutional Court certifies the result.

From our clips:

Results of referendum to dismiss the President:

- Romania held the referendum to dismiss its president on Sunday. The turnout was 46.13 pct, with a 3 pct margin of error, the Central Electoral Office (BEC) announced at 10 a.m on Monday. These results suggest Basescu survives the recall because the number of voters who cast ballots was short of the required 50 pct turnout threshold needed for the referendum's results to be valid. This latest estimate of turnout includes also some polling stations from abroad. According to BEC 87.55% of those voted opted to dismiss the president and 11.12% voted against the president's ouster.

Subject: [big campaign] Like the Iraq and Afghanistan Wars? You'll LOVE This!

I wanted to share our latest on DailyKos. Dramatic writing aside, McCain and McKeon are dead serious about this bill and it couldn't be more alarming. We're going to need all hands on deck to fight this, and I'll be sending more resources as we move forward. I hope everyone will do what the can to get the word out about this and gin up the progressive and libertarian grassroots to fight these bills.

As usual, feel free to use or steal from our action alert, at: www.winwithoutwar.org/noblankcheck

Like the Iraq and Afghanistan Wars? You'll LOVE This!

by Tom Andrews
Thu Apr 28, 2011

If you like the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan then you'll love what Senator John McCain and Congressman "Buck" McKeon, the new Chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, are proposing: Congress should give the President and the Secretary of Defense a blank check to wage war against anyone he or she declares "associated" with al-Qaeda or the Taliban – anytime, anywhere, anyhow.

Just what and who is an "associated force" of al Qaeda and the Taliban? Chairman McKeon's bill leaves that determination entirely up to the Secretary of Defense. Shock and awe – the sequel – might not be far behind. And there would be no need to get authorization from Congress before the missiles start flying – that would all be covered in this new blank-check legislation.

What could be more efficient?!? No more messy Congressional authorization, with all of those hearings, debates and prolonged votes. No more having to deal with intruding Congressional inquiries! No more having to worry about the likes of Congressmen Jim McGovern (D-MA) and Walter Jones (R-NC) who insist on accountability by the administration and oversight by the Congress!

This is not a pipe dream. Legislation that will do what I have just described has not only been introduced in both the House (H.R. 968) and Senate (S. 551), it is likely to end up in the Defense Authorization bill that emerges from the House Armed Services Committee a few weeks from now. Those keeping score should note that the new authorization is:

- Global in scope. With no geographic boundary, the Secretary of Defense could take America to war in any country in the world where a suspected terrorist resides;

- Never ending. This language is open ended and doesn't require the President to return to Congress for additional authority;

- Divorced from national security concerns. Unlike the 2001 authorization passed days after the 9/11 attacks that ties the authority to use military force to a direct attack on America, this language is not linked to any attack or imminent threat to American citizens.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

It is arguably the greatest ceding of unchecked authority to the Executive Branch in modern history. Not only would this bill abdicate Congress' authority to declare war, it would relieve the Administration of the need to seek Congressional resolutions of support or authorizations for new military actions.

But wait, there's more! In addition to providing a blank check for war, the proposed legislation would give the president dangerous new powers to detain anyone suspected of links to terrorism (the ostensible purpose of the legislation, titled the "Detainee Security Act of 2011"). It requires that all suspects be held by the military (unless the Defense Secretary grants a waiver), and either tried by military commission or held indefinitely. This provision alone diminishes the authority of law enforcement agencies integral to our anti-terror efforts, obstructs the counterterrorism operations of officials who have a record of successful intelligence gathering, overburdens the military with responsibilities it does not want, and limits the president's options in defending America's national security interests. Dozens of federal agencies with critical expertise would be prevented from participating in a review of whether suspects posed a threat to national security.

The odds of the Committee stripping any of this dangerous language from the bill before it hits the floor of the House are about as long as my being signed by my Boston Red Sox. House leadership is very likely to support their Chairman and push hard for passage on the floor. Passage of similar language in the Senate Armed Services Committee is not a sure bet, but it is a distinct possibility. While the Democrats hold a voting edge on the panel, one of those "edges" is none other than Senator Joe Lieberman – a Co-sponsor of the McCain version of the bill! That leaves Senator Ben Nelson as the swing vote, putting opponents of a blank check for endless war in a very precarious position at best. If Senator Nelson votes for the bill, Senator McCain will have a victory in Committee and have plenty of momentum as the bill heads to the Senate floor.

But the first stop for the bill will be the House Armed Services Committee and then the House floor. It will begin to make its way in just a few weeks and a final floor vote will more than likely occur by Memorial Day.

Those who believe that this legislative attempt to grease the skids for the next US military adventure is outrageous and irresponsible need to worry. Better still, we need to get busy. Chairman McKeon's legislation has so far been flying well below the radar of public attention. His bill is alive and well without a peep of public opposition or concern. This has to change now.

Take one minute right now and tell your Representative to oppose Chairman McKeon's blank check for endless war.

Members of Congress need to start hearing from opponents of endless war and supporters of the U.S. Constitution. This tidy little provision – that heretofore has gone completely unnoticed by the public - should not be allowed to be tucked into a Defense Authorization bill without a fight. If there isn't one, and Chairman McKeon and Senator McCain prevail, public opposition to any future US military action around the world won't matter. It will have already been authorized by Congress.

Do you know Betsy Myers?

I am planning to contact her and ask her to speak at one of our chapter meetings (Financial Planning Association, East Bay chapter -- of which I am Programs Director).

We typically book financial topics that offer continuing ed credit, but one of our goals this year is to book one meeting that is not necessarily financial but truly inspirational, and ideally someone who is known nationally. I have been given a $2500 budget (also unusual, as a non-profit we typically don't pay anything for speakers). A fellow board member suggested her name.

I plan to reach out to her through her website, just thought I'd check and see if you know her well, have any advice on how I might present my group as potentially interesting to her. ?

Thanks,
Megan

P.S. We meet in Alamo, CA @7 AM on the first Wed. of each month, looking for Sept - Dec this year.

John,

Another point I should add is that the Japanese government in recent years (and Abe in particular) has expressed interest in forging stronger ties with American leaders of Japanese ancestry (part of the reason Abe is visiting San Francisco and Los Angeles on his trip to the U.S. this month), and I certainly fit that category.

Thanks, and I hope you can get me in the dinner!

John,

I'm informed that the White House will host a State Dinner for PM Abe on April 29. I haven't been invited yet, but could you ask the WH to include me on the guest list? Reasons you can provide:

1. I was a member of Presidential Partners in 2011-2012, contributing over $70,000 myself to President Obama's reelection, and I did fundraising for his election among the American business community in Japan.

2. I am one of the most active private sector Americans working to strengthen ties between the U.S. and Japan, having visited Japan 10 times in 2013, 7 times in 2014, and a planned 7 times in 2015.

3. I have been working especially to strengthen ties between the Japanese Establishment and American Democrats.

4. I represented American commercial interests in Japan as VP and President of the American Chamber of Commerce in Japan from 1993-1999, during the Clinton Administration (I did this after declining in 1993 Ron Brown's offer to be his Assistant Secretary of Commerce for International Economic Policy, the job eventually taken by Chuck Meissner).

5. I was the one who introduced U.S. Ambassador John Roos to Shinzo Abe in a private 3-person lunch in Tokyo in July 2011, a year and a half before Abe made his comeback as Prime Minister in Dec. 2012.

6. I joined the DSCC Majority Trust in Martha's Vineyard (contributing over $32,400 to Democratic senators) in July 2014 and will join the DCCC Speaker's Cabinet Napa Valley Weekend (contributing over $33,400 to Democratic House members) in August 2015.

Thanks, and please let me know if you need additional information.

Glen

Excerpts from McCain's Remarks in Fresno, California

URL: http://thepage.time.com/excerpts-from-mccains-remarks-in-fresno-california/

Excerpts from Remarks At Fresno State University
Fresno, CA
June 23, 2008

All across this state and nation, people are hurting because the price of gasoline is higher than it should be, and more than many folks can afford. Because of far-off events in the world oil market, a barrel of oil has more than doubled in a year. And the bad effects of that are spreading across our economy. The cost of business is rising, the cost of food and other essentials is rising, the whole cost of living is rising. What isn't rising is the value of your paychecks and the rate of America's economic growth. Back in the 1970's, they used to call this "stagflation." And it feels the same today, because the unwise policies of our government have left America's energy future in the control of others.

Some in Washington seem to think that we can still persuade OPEC to lower prices – as if reason or cajolery had never been tried before. Others have even suggested suing OPEC – as if we can litigate our way to energy security. But America is not going to meet this great challenge as a supplicant or a plaintiff. We are not going to meet it with words at all – we are going to meet it with action. We're going to produce more, conserve more, and invent more. And to a large extent, this strategy hinges on innovations in the cars and trucks we drive.

Ninety-seven percent of transportation in America runs on oil. And of all that oil, about 60 percent is used in cars and trucks. Yet the CAFE standards we apply to automakers – to increase the fuel efficiency of their cars – are lightly enforced by a small fine. The result is that some companies don't even bother to observe CAFE standards. Instead they just write a check to the government and pass the cost along to you. Higher end auto companies like BMW, Porsche, and Mercedes employ some of the best engineering talent in the world. But that talent isn't put to the job of fuel efficiency, when the penalties are too small to encourage innovation. CAFE standards should serve large national goals in energy independence, not the purpose of small-time revenue collection.

Innovation in the use of alternative fuels in transportation presents the greatest opportunity for energy independence. At the moment, entrepreneurs and engineers are trying to figure out which among the various alternatives to oil works best. Alcohol-based fuels are the farthest along in both development and commercial use. Some, such as ethanol, are on the market now, and new sources of ethanol are on the horizon that will not require the use of so much cropland. Corn-based ethanol, thanks to the money and influence of lobbyists, has been a case study in the law of unintended consequences. Our government pays to subsidize corn-based ethanol even as it collects tariffs that prevent consumers from benefiting from other kinds of ethanol, such as sugarcane-based ethanol from Brazil. The result is that Americans take the financial hit coming and going. As taxpayers, we foot the bill for the enormous subsides paid to corn producers. And as consumers, we pay extra at the pump because of government barriers to cheaper products from abroad.

Here's a better way. Instead of playing favorites, our government should level the playing field for all alcohol fuels that break the monopoly of gasoline, lowering both gasoline prices and carbon emissions. And this can be done with a simple federal standard to hasten the conversion of all new vehicles in America to flex-fuel technology – allowing drivers to use alcohol fuels instead of gas in their cars. Brazil went from about five to over 70 percent of all new vehicles with flex-fuel capacity. It did all that in just three years. Yet those same automakers that helped Brazil make the change say it will take them longer to reach the goal of 50 percent new flex-fuel vehicles for America. But I am confident they can do more, and do it faster, in the interest of our energy security. And if I am elected president, they will. Whether it takes a meeting with automakers during my first month in office, or my signature on an act of Congress, we will meet the goal of a swift conversion of American vehicles away from oil.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

At the same time, smart policy can also help to broaden the market for energy-efficient cars. Right now we have a hodgepodge of incentives for the purchase of fuel-efficient cars. Different hybrids and natural-gas cars carry different incentives, ranging from a few hundreds dollars to four grand. They're the handiwork of lobbyists, with all the inconsistency and irrationality that involves.

My administration will issue a Clean Car Challenge to the automakers of America, in the form of a single and substantial tax credit based on the reduction of carbon emissions. For every automaker who can sell a zero-emissions car, we will commit a 5,000 dollar tax credit for each and every customer who buys that car. For other vehicles, whatever type they may be, the lower the carbon emissions, the higher the tax credit. And these large tax credits will be available to everyone – not just to those who have an accountant to explain it to them.

Furthermore, in the quest for alternatives to oil, our government has thrown around enough money subsidizing special interests and excusing failure. From now on, we will encourage heroic efforts in engineering, and we will reward the greatest success.

I further propose we inspire the ingenuity and resolve of the American people by offering a $300 million prize for the development of a battery package that has the size, capacity, cost and power to leapfrog the commercially available plug-in hybrids or electric cars. This is one dollar for every man, woman and child in the U.S. – a small price to pay for helping to break the back of our oil dependency – and should deliver a power source at 30 percent of the current costs.

My friends, energy security is the great national challenge of our time. And rising to this challenge will take all of the vision, creativity, and resolve of which we are capable. The good news is, these qualities have never been in short supply. We are the country of Edison, Fulton, and two brothers named Wright. It was American ingenuity that took three brave men to the moon and brought them back. Think of all the highest scientific endeavors of our age – the invention of the silicon chip, the creation of the Internet, the mapping of the human genome. In so many cases, you can draw a straight line back to American inventors, and often to the foresighted aid of the United States government.

Bush gets emotional during tribute to himself. »

Today, Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Olmert warmly welcomed President Bush during his visit to the country. “He is a great leader, a great friend, a source of inspiration,” Olmert said of Bush in a speech. Reuters notes that during the speech, Bush “appeared to well up with emotion .” Dan Froomkin writes :

> Could it be that despite the outward signs of confidence, all the criticism being heaped upon President Bush is getting to him? It’s sheer speculation, of course, but how do you explain why the president, welcomed to Israel with adulation, started to cry while being praised by a fellow world leader who expressed seemingly sincere admiration.

“Bush has cried many times during his presidency — when he’s met with the families of dead soldiers, after 9/11, at disaster scenes. But this was different. In this case, it seems his tears were for himself ,” Froomkin adds.

So I hate to bug you with anything else knowing how much must be going on, but the Rahm Emanuel as Chief of Staff rumor is circulating like wildfire...folks know how explosive that would be in my part of the world, no? The FIRST thing we'll get asked is why he picked someone who has been consistently hostile to immigrants, and we'll have to respond.

PROGRESSIVE TURNOUT PROJECT

John, there's still time to take the 2015 Democratic Debate Survey. Click here →

John --

So far nearly 30,000 supporters have taken our Democratic Debate Day Survey. These supporters shared their thoughts on the state of the presidential race so far. Here's what we've learned:

83% think door-to-door contacts are an effective way to encourage a citizen to vote.

99% have donated to either a local or national political campaign/organization.

91% plan to vote/caucus in the 2016 Democratic Presidential primary.

99% have signed online petitions to help a political cause.

Agree? Disagree? Click here to share your thoughts →

The message is loud and clear: We need more participation in our democracy, not less.

And that's exactly what the Progressive Turnout Project is all about: using innovative, data driven tactics to have one-on-one conversations that get Democrats to the polls in the most competitive races. We know that's the key to increasing voter turnout and winning in 2016.

30,000 is a good start, but we need 50,000 responses before we break for the holidays to ensure a statistically significant result. It's crucial we reach 50,000 or our results will not be 100% reliable.

John, input from the PTP community is incredibly insightful and has been very valuable throughout our 2016 planning process. That's why we're asking for your feedback before the end of this year.

Hillary, Bernie and O'Malley may have left the debate stage for the last time in 2015, but the election is just getting started. We need your input today . Please take one minute to complete our Democratic Debate Survey:

Mary Pat,

In response to the questions you asked this morning -

1. John is not able to travel to New York any time this month except for March 20, as you had previously discussed.

2. John is not available to do a call on Monday, March 10. Perhaps this could be done with Paul Begala instead?

3. John had specifically asked that your office not contact Mr. Hans Wyss regarding FFA. Please do not contact his office. I am attaching to his email, the list of donors that your office should not contact before discussing with us. Any contact with donors on this list poses a serious problem.

If you have any questions regarding these points, please let me know.

Thank you,
Caitlin

I would greatly appreciate it if you could put a good word in for Lizzie. Attached are her cover letter, resume, and writing sample. She is a sociology major at Connecticut College in New London (my hometown) with a 3.08 average and strong writing skills. As part of her Sociology major she has taken several courses on race relations, which is a special interest of hers as an Asian American adoptee from South Korea. In addition, she also studied immigration issues as part of her Danish Politics course during her semester abroad in Copenhagen. She has also focused on global women's empowerment, child exploitation, education and special needs children issues through internships with Child Plan, a global non-profit focused on young women and children, For Love of Children (FLOC) a DC based tutoring program and an Arlington County School Summer Life Skills Program for special needs children. Lizzie is very committed to making a contribution on important public policy issues like race relations, immigration, human trafficking and child exploitation. She is a hard worker, capable of juggling many tasks and would be honored to have the opportunity to work at CAP.

An interesting thought from David Beckmann on the pope's visit and its timing with all things SDG, probably worth sharing with John.

Also, do you know anything about the poverty and inequality task force to which David refers?

John,

As I'm thinking about the panel discussion I just wrote to you about, I had a thought I want to share with you - and a question I want to ask.

The thought is that Pope Francis' visit in September might be an excellent occasion for President Obama to explain his thinking about ending extreme poverty in our country and around the world to the American people. I presume he will want to launch a process, preferably a bipartisan process, to formulate goals to overcome poverty and related problems in the United States. Pope Francis will also be speaking to a joint session of Congress, and he is almost sure to affirm the global goals and urge our country to get serious about hunger and poverty within our own borders. In effect, this amazingly popular pope will be telling our country and its political leaders that God has made it possible to end extreme poverty and hunger in our time and urging us to get with the program. President Obama can announce his support in response to Pope Francis, and key Republicans might have a hard time saying no just then to an invitation to be part of a bipartisan process of goal-setting for the United States. What do you think??

The White House is vetting me as a possible participate in a task force on poverty and inequality. Do you know about this task force? Is the White House thinking that this task force will draw on the momentum of the global goals to articulate goals for the United States?

If you have time to talk today or tomorrow, my cell phone is 202-321-0473 .

David

EPA and Parks, Environmental Justice and the Disposable of Society NRPA Magazine

Social Equity 2015-08-01 by Robert García and Ariel Collins
NRPA National Recreation and Parks Association, Parks & Recreation Magazine

In Pope Francis' recently released Laudato Si' — his encyclical on the interrelated relationship between humans and the environment—he asks the people of the world to care about climate, creation and the poor. The Pope writes about parks and green space: "In some places, rural and urban alike," he writes, "the privatization of certain spaces has restricted people's access to places of particular beauty. In others, 'ecological' neighborhoods have been created which are closed to outsiders in order to ensure an artificial tranquility. Frequently, we find beautiful and carefully manicured green spaces in so-called 'safer' areas of cities, but not in the more hidden areas where the disposable of society live."

United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) Administrator Gina McCarthy agrees with the Pope: "I think the most important thing that we can do, working with the Pope, is to try to remind ourselves that this is really about protecting natural resources that human beings rely on, and that those folks that are most vulnerable — that the church has always been focused on, those in poverty and low income — are the first that are going to be hit and impacted by a changing climate."

Environmental injustice occurs in the context of extreme inequalities in income, wealth and power. During the past four decades, we've seen extreme income inequality in the United States explode. In 2010, it was estimated that the top 1 percent of the U.S. population owned 42 percent of non-home wealth, and the top 5 percent owned 72 percent of non-home wealth; according to a report from the University of California, Santa Cruz, the bottom 80 percent owned less than 5 percent. Average white non-home wealth was almost 20 times more than African-American and 70 times more than Latino wealth. These inequities threaten prospects for democracy and environmental justice, according to the North Carolina Environmental Justice Network (NCEJN).

California Rep. Judy Chu (CA-27) emphasizes parks as an environmental justice issue through her leadership on the proposed national recreation area in the San Gabriel Mountains. In a speech before the U.S. House Committee on Natural Resources forum on climate, environmental justice and green access, she said:

"Los Angeles is one of the most park-poor places in the country. Just 15 percent of the region's population has pedestrian access to green spaces, leaving more than 85 percent of residents without easy access to public parks or green spaces, particularly affecting minorities and those from low-income communities. And there's a color divide. Did you know that in L.A., white neighborhoods enjoy 32 acres of parks per 1,000 people, but for African-American neighborhoods it's 1.7, and for Latino neighborhoods it's .6?"

Even President Obama, when he dedicated the San Gabriel Mountains National Monument in Southern California in 2014, emphasized that there are not enough parks, especially for children of color.

While these facts are about Los Angeles, communities of color and low income communities across the nation suffer from disparities in access to resources for parks and healthy living. This is part of the continuing legacy and pattern of residential segregation resulting, to some degree, from racially restrictive housing covenants, discriminatory mortgage policies, and structural inequalities in wealth and income.

California-based The City Project, a civil rights group working for equal justice, democracy and livability for all, and its allied partners, have asked the EPA to improve access to parks and recreation as an environmental justice and civil rights issue. Communities across the nation led by Earthjustice, "the nation's original and largest nonprofit environmental law organization," have also filed a lawsuit to require the EPA to take civil rights laws seriously by investigating and resolving environmental justice pollution complaints on which the EPA has failed to act for more than 10 years.

There is hope that the EPA will improve access to parks and recreation and the health, environment and resiliency of communities of color and low income communities. Its proposed EJ 2020 action plan, a strategy to advance environmental justice through its programs, policies and activities, to make a visible difference in environmentally overburdened, underserved and economically distressed communities, could help. But, the EPA has a "record of poor performance" on civil rights, according to a 2011 study by Deloitte Consulting LLP.

What Can the EPA Do?

To overcome its legacy of poor civil rights performance, and to improve access to parks and recreation as an environmental justice issue, the EPA should take the following steps:

- Adopt an objective to expand access to healthy parks, green space and natural areas.
- Develop standards for park access to measure progress and equity and hold public officials accountable.
- Add parks, green space and natural areas to the EPA's online mapping tool called EJScreen, which focuses on toxins and pollution.
- Prioritize protecting and expanding free access to healthy parks, green space and natural areas for communities of color and low-income communities that have long been deprived of these environmental benefits.
- Provide leadership, best practices and best results in speed, access to clean and healthy natural areas, public information and participation, and community satisfaction in the results, as has occurred in communities without environmental justice concerns. Examples discussed above are best practices.
- Enforce civil rights and environmental justice laws and principles to improve park access, and improve the health, environment and resiliency of communities of color and low-income communities.

Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and its regulations, for example, prohibit intentional discrimination, as well unjustified discriminatory impacts without proof of intent, based on race, color or national origin by recipients of federal funding. This applies to recipients of EPA funding, including state and local agencies and private recipients. Executive Order 12898, signed by President Clinton in 1994, requires each federal agency, including the EPA, to achieve environmental justice as part of its mission by identifying and addressing disproportionately high and adverse human health or environmental effects of its activities on minority populations and low-income populations.

As NRPA begins its next 50 years, the EPA might do well to help promote NRPA's Three Pillars of Conservation, Health and Wellness, and Social Equity. We do not seek Blue parks or Red parks, based on ideology or party affiliation. We seek green parks for all.

Hi all -- this is a draft for tomorrow's event in Montgomery -- the 60th anniversary of Rosa Parks's arrest and the Montgomery bus boycott.

You'll see that it's about 50 percent looking back, celebrating RP and the lawyers and judges who were part of the movement... and about 50 percent looking ahead, with a litany of relevant policy positions.

I welcome any and all edits!

I'll be sending this to the book fairly soon, but please send me any comments whenever you're able tonight.

Thanks,

Dear John, this is a historic and critical time and I would like to be part of it. I frankly don't know how to express my interest in the most effective way. I have three ideas, at least one of which may be utterly unrealistic but I'll say it anyway. The long shot idea is to be Secretary of Labor, which covers the issues I care about the most. The second is to work on issues of low-income people in the White House (whatever the chosen terminology is). The third, if Shirley Sagawa is not interested or is nor being considered for some reason, is to be the CEO of the Corporation on National and Community Service. You may remember that I helped to draft Americorps in 1993. So that would be a wonderfully challenging assignment.. I would be open to other ideas as well. You and I have been friends for a long time and I would greatly appreciate your advice and assistance. An e-mail response would be fine although a 10 or 15 chat in person or by phone would be lovely. Thanks you for whatever attention you are able to devote to this.

Donald Trump says that, if the Republicans nominate Cruz, "the Democrats" will file a lawsuit challenging Cruz' eligibility.

DSW -- or, more ambitiously, DSW, Clinton, Sanders and O'Malley -- should issue a statement saying that, If Cruz is nominated, the Democratic Party will not challenge his eligibility and that the voters should reject him because of his views and record, not his birthplace.

Thousands of Coloradans Tell Gessler: Serve Colorado or Resign

ProgressNow Colorado delivers names, comments of nearly 5,000 citizens demanding Gessler give up irresponsible "moonlighting" plans

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
Thursday, January 27th 2010
CONTACT: Kjersten Forseth, ProgressNow Colorado at 719-641-4674

DENVER: Responding to the week-long controversy over Colorado Secretary of State Scott Gessler's decision to continue working part time for his law firm while he serves, ProgressNow Colorado, the state's largest online progressive advocacy organization, today delivered a petition signed by nearly 5,000 citizens to Gessler's office--demanding that Gessler abandon this irresponsible plan.

"The response to our call for Gessler to give up his 'moonlighting' plans was overwhelming," said Kjersten Forseth, Executive Director of ProgressNow Colorado. "What you're seeing today is an outraged answer from both sides of the aisle to an irresponsible and hopelessly conflicted situation. It's time for Gessler to listen to what the people of Colorado are very clearly saying, or step down."

Gessler's law firm the Hackstaff Law Group, formerly Hackstaff Gessler, has represented some of the most politically controversial right wing groups and candidates in the state. Gessler has asserted that he will not take cases that could conflict with his duties as Secretary of State, but leading ethics watchdogs such as Colorado Ethics Watch have denounced Gessler's decision, noting that he would be shielded from many necessary disclosures by attorney-client privilege.

The Denver Post, the Boulder Daily Camera, and the Grand Junction Sentinel have all published editorials this week condemning Gessler's plan. As of Thursday afternoon, 4,916 people have signed ProgressNow Colorado's petition --with more continuing to come in.

"Thousands of ProgressNow Colorado members signed this petition, but also many more who received it from friends and colleagues, or found it online through a variety of sources," said Forseth. "Colorado citizens understand clearly that Gessler's previous work for this law firm creates a massive conflict of interest with his duties as Secretary of State--potentially endangering free and fair elections here. They are appalled that Gessler claims he 'can't survive' on an income significantly higher than the average in Colorado, and they cannot reconcile his claims with his right wing colleagues in the Colorado legislature who just voted to cut school breakfast funding for poor children.

"They also understand that Gessler did win the election, and he is Colorado's Secretary of State," concluded Forseth. "That is why we are calling today for Gessler to do the right thing, put an end to this distracting controversy, and agree to put the interests of Colorado first as he swore to do just a couple of weeks ago. Colorado needs a full-time Secretary of State, whose interests will not be subject to continuous second-guessing due to an avoidable conflict. It is only if Gessler cannot do that should he be asked to resign."

Subject:	for WJC: Plan Colombia for Central America?

Dear Hannah, WJC has mentioned a few times his concerns that Plan Colombia has been so effective that it pushed narco-trafficking into Central America. Conversely, below is a new article about Plan Colombia that may be of interest for him – it asks if a similar approach could help in Central America. Sincerely, Ami

Plan Colombia: A Retrospective

AMERICA'S QUARTERLY
BY MICHA EL SHIFTER

It may work in Central America as well.

At first glance, perhaps the most notable feature of Plan Colombia has been its longevity. Given the current divisiveness in Washington, the bipartisan support it has received across three administrations now seems remarkable. After 12 years, the plan is gradually winding down, but the U.S. allocated more than $300 million under the program in 2012 alone.

Although the Plan has evolved considerably since it was approved by the U.S. Congress in July 2000, it has become shorthand for wide-ranging U.S. cooperation with Colombia to assist that country in combating drugs, guerrilla violence, and related institutional and social problems. All told, the U.S. has spent nearly $8 billion on the initiative—more than anywhere outside of the Middle East, and Iraq and Afghanistan since the end of the Cold War. Although the effort gave priority to counter-narcotics operations—and specifically the eradication of coca in southern Colombia—from the outset it also encompassed assistance for the judiciary and economic development.

What lessons can be derived from such a sustained commitment—arguably the most significant U.S. policy initiative in the Western Hemisphere in recent times? Does it offer any guidelines for addressing comparable regional challenges in coming years?

One such challenge is already urgent: Central America's emergence as a nexus of drug trafficking and violent crime. Despite differences in the type and scope of the problems as well as in the institutional capacities of the governments involved, there are some striking parallels with Colombia.

Central America is sliding into ungovernability, just as Colombia was in 2000, and Washington has a similarly high stake in preventing that catastrophe. Moreover, like Colombia, Central America is open to closer collaboration with the U.S. in a way that would have been unimaginable during earlier periods of tension. So it is instructive to take a close look at how Plan Colombia began, and examine how the two countries worked their way toward a mutually beneficial strategy that produced solid results.

Political Timing and Framing

The level of U.S. commitment and resources dedicated to Plan Colombia would be difficult, if not impossible, to recapture today. It is hard to imagine that a Latin American security problem—even one the size and gravity of Colombia's—would have drawn similar attention from Washington during the age of the "war on terror."

Plan Colombia was adopted just over a year before the terrorist attacks on September 11, 2001— before the U.S. military response in Afghanistan a month later, and two years before the overwhelming military operation in Iraq.

In that relatively calmer era, Colombia's spreading lawlessness and seeming near-collapse of democratic governance—the product of drug trafficking, organized crime and insurgency—riveted the attention of senior U.S. policymakers. After he visited the country in 1999, then so-called drug czar Gen. Barry McCaffrey proclaimed that Colombia was in a state of "emergency." In reality, of course, neither Colombia's leftist insurgency, the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionaras de Colombia (FARC), nor the Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia (AUC), the umbrella organization of paramilitary forces, posed the kind of clear and present danger to U.S. security interests that Islamist terrorism, and Al-Qaeda in particular, represented to Washington after 9/11.

At the same time, in 2000, the U.S. government found itself with a fiscal surplus. The debate then (in sad contrast to today) was whether to save the surplus or reduce the tax burden. Today, policymakers do not enjoy the same level of fiscal flexibility.

If the timing of Plan Colombia was fortuitous in terms of competing U.S. foreign policy priorities and Washington's favorable fiscal position, it was especially critical for Colombia itself. Whether or not the nation was on the verge of becoming a failed state in 1999, it is hard to dispute the claim that the FARC, and even the AUC, at the time presented a strategic threat to the authority of the Colombian state.

Lawlessness was rampant, and the government was at risk of being overwhelmed by increasingly violent and powerful actors, fueled by the drug trade and other criminal activities. In 1999, according to Colombia's Defense Ministry, the country experienced nearly 2,000 terrorist acts and more than 3,000 kidnappings. The homicide rate was nearly 60 per 100,000. The FARC then numbered an estimated 18,000. Roughly half of Colombia's national territory lacked a government security presence.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Plan Colombia played a key role in reducing such lawlessness and helping to reassert the authority of the Colombian state. Yet the U.S. contribution, albeit important, was not the only factor—perhaps not even the deciding one. The fact is, by 1999, Colombians had reached a collective conclusion that, if the deteriorating conditions remained unchecked, the viability of the nation was in question. In October of that year, more than 1 million Colombians marched against the FARC in a "No más" nationwide protest.

Colombians—many middle class—were then leaving the country in droves. According to Colombia's National Administrative Statistics Department (DANE), over 700,000 migrants left the country from 1995 to 2000. Such an outflow led many Colombians to recognize that the status quo was not sustainable. Something dramatic had to be done.

A convergence of Colombian and U.S. interests—and capacity—made that possible.

But did Plan Colombia reflect Colombia's priorities or those of the United States? Some, including Robert White, former U.S. ambassador to El Salvador and Paraguay, argued that the Plan, heavily focused on security aid and narrowly oriented toward fighting drugs, had little to do with Colombian concerns and was essentially imposed by Washington. "They [the Colombians] ask for bread and you give them stones," White said.

Others more sympathetic to the cooperative arrangement, such as Gabriel Marcella of the Strategic Studies Institute, have suggested that it was a product of extensive consultations between both countries and demonstrated the spirit of partnership. As Marcella commented, "Contrary to speculation in the media [Plan Colombia] was authored by a Colombian—Jaime Ruiz, chief of staff for [then-President Andrés] Pastrana."

The truth lies somewhere in between. The original Colombian version of Plan Colombia emphasized development and social priorities—both of which received short shrift in the program that was eventually adopted in Washington. But the Colombian government, under Pastrana administration, also requested some $600 million in military assistance from the United States. The resulting package was skewed toward anti-drug operations, with a strong security focus.

Of the original $860 million Colombia received, $632 million was devoted to military and police assistance. The remaining $227 million went to the general categories of economic development, displaced persons, human rights and administration of justice. The expectation was that the social aspects of the plan would be amply funded by European and other sources.

Plan Colombia struck a balance between what was politically feasible in Washington and Colombia's priorities based on the realities on the ground. It was far from a perfect fit, but probably the best compromise under the circumstances. For practical reasons, assistance had to be directly aligned with U.S. interests, as understood in Washington. The result was a focus on counter-narcotics rather than social and economic development.

The plan needed to be sold to U.S. voters and policymakers as a facet of the so-called "war on drugs." In 2000, drug-related violence was a far more important domestic political concern in the U.S. than it is today. According to Gallup, between March 2001 and March 2012 the percentage of U.S. citizens who expressed "a great deal" of concern about drug use as a problem facing the country dropped from 58 percent to 37 percent.

The drug question was the hook that enabled Congress to enact the $1.3-billion package. The fact that 90 percent of the cocaine consumed in the U.S. came from Colombia proved a politically compelling argument. By focusing on counter-narcotics, the Clinton administration sold a plan that could garner bipartisan support. In a May 2000 speech to the Council of the Americas, President Bill Clinton urged Congress to endorse the package, highlighting both countries' security: "Colombia's drug traffickers directly threaten America's security," and arguing that Plan Colombia "would enable Colombia's counter-drug program to inflict serious damage on the rapidly expanding drug production activity in areas now dominated by guerrillas or paramilitary groups."

If the package had been framed in terms of broad social development, or defense of democracy or of the Colombian state, it would have generated scant political support in the U.S. Congress or among the public at large.

These were the political realities that had to be addressed, despite the potential distortions they may have caused in the shape and initial focus of the plan.

There was little in the original assistance package aimed at strengthening and improving the effectiveness of Colombia's security forces to reduce violence perpetuated by the FARC and the AUC, as there should have been.

While the protection of Colombia's citizens should have been paramount from the beginning, 9/11 allowed greater scope for achieving that goal. In August 2002, U.S. legislation permitted the aid to be used more broadly than in the original measure. No longer would U.S. resources have to be directly tied to the drug question. Now they could be used in combating the FARC, Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN), and AUC—all of which were considered terrorist groups by the U.S. government.

This shift meant greater latitude in the use of Plan Colombia funds, which in turn helped align Colombian realities—and the central concern with security—with U.S. support.

Determining precisely which changes U.S. cooperation helped bring about in Colombia is a challenging exercise.

The positive changes in the security situation are, however, undeniable. Under the rubric of "democratic security," developed by Álvaro Uribe, Colombia's two-term president (2002–2010), the presence of the national police was extended throughout the country, to all of Colombia's 1,300 municipalities.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Thanks to the strengthened capacity of Colombia's security forces and vastly improved intelligence capabilities, kidnappings declined between 2002 and 2009, from nearly 3,000 to just over 200 annually, and killings were reduced by nearly half in the same period. The size of the FARC insurgency was also halved, from an estimated 17,000–20,000 members to 8,000–10,000.

The Importance of Clearly Defined and Agreed-Upon Goals

The real shift came when President Uribe was elected in 2002. While Uribe's strategy, supported by Plan Colombia, yielded important positive results in the security outlook, it was not an unmitigated success. In framing and defending Plan Colombia as an anti-narcotics and security policy initiative, both countries focused too narrowly on military and police aid—with a resulting cost to human rights and the rule of law in the short term, and to the sustainability and consolidation of security over the long term.

Despite the sharp drop in killings and kidnappings nationwide, the human rights situation in Colombia barely improved in some conflict zones. The numbers of internally displaced people—among the world's highest—remained essentially unchanged.

Moreover, the enormous pressures to pursue violent actors—particularly the FARC—led to new and disturbing abuses. The "false positive" scandal, which arose from a program that rewarded military officers who captured or killed insurgents, was a notorious example. Under the program, according to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, an estimated 3,000 innocent civilians were killed by security forces (mainly the army), most of them between 2004 and 2008.

Recently, signs of backsliding on security advances have also started to appear. For example, thousands of supposedly demobilized combatants have become involved in spreading criminal activity throughout the country.

Developments like these only underscore the importance of consolidating the gains that have been made.

Fortunately, the government of President Juan Manuel Santos, building on the foundation established during the Uribe administrations, has emphasized the consolidation objective—extending the permanent, regular presence of security forces in small towns, and seeking to foster community-based services and institutions.

Finally, there is little evidence that the stated, overriding goal behind the U.S. decision to support Plan Colombia—to reduce drug trafficking—was actually met.

As has happened repeatedly in the four-decade-old drug war, any government pressure applied in a particular location to eliminate drug production or trafficking tends to move it to another place—within a country or to other countries. The so-called balloon effect is rarely disputed, even by proponents of current drug policy.

Defenders argue the situation would have been worse otherwise. But if one returns to the original congressional debates about Plan Colombia—the argument that was often made was that going after supply would ultimately result in a change in availability and price on the streets of major U.S. cities—then it is hard to maintain that the $8 billion investment has paid off for the United States.

But using a different metric, it can be argued that the plan was a win-win for both countries. By heading off what seemed to be the collapse of the Colombian state, and avoiding the ensuing chaos and uncontrolled violence, U.S. foreign policy furthered its goals in the hemisphere of protecting democracy and defending human lives.

It is now clear that supporters of Plan Colombia in President Clinton's administration, understood this—even though for public consumption, and for political support, the emphasis was largely on drugs. The policy's bipartisan support—between Democratic and Republican administrations as well as Congress—was fundamental to its success.

Plan Colombia was also a successful demonstration of how the U.S. could achieve security aims with a limited investment of military force. The use of U.S. soldiers and contractors as military advisors generated the most controversy during domestic debates over the plan, as critics worried that American forces would increasingly be drawn by mission creep into a Vietnam-style quagmire in the Andes. But the numbers of U.S. personnel—set in 2004 at 800 for military and 600 for private contractors—were kept within legal bounds. The U.S. maintained an essentially supportive function.

Colombians, in fact, assumed the major responsibility and role in restoring a measure of state authority. From 2000 to 2009, for example, Colombia's defense budget tripled to nearly $12 billion. That carried important lessons for future U.S. policy. Washington, through its laws and self-restraint—the result, in part, of Congressional oversight—managed to defy the "slippery slope" hypothesis that had been advanced with such certainty by so many.

Plan Colombia proved that it is possible to successfully carry out a sustained involvement in another country aimed at reducing intolerably high levels of violence and insecurity. Colombia continues to face serious challenges, such as crime, social exclusion and continuing coca and cocaine production. But the doomsday scenarios of state collapse have been forgotten.

Does It Apply to Central America?

In the current context, the lessons derived from Plan Colombia effort can, with appropriate cautions and caveats, be applied to current policy challenges in Mexico and, particularly, the Northern Triangle countries—Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador—in Central America.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

To be sure, conditions in those nations are different from those that prevailed when Plan Colombia was undertaken. There is, for example, no active insurgency in Central America today comparable to the FARC. Unlike Colombia, Central America is not a major producer of cocaine but a transit point from producer countries to the major consumer nation, the United States.

Such a key difference surely has implications for the nature and scale of security assistance required. Still, some parallels are striking and should be taken into account in fashioning future U.S. approaches.

The core problem in the three Northern Triangle countries in 2012 is, as it was in 2000 in Colombia, spreading lawlessness and lack of state authority.

Today in Central America, organized crime and gang violence is the dominant problem, whereas in Colombia a dozen years ago, the FARC insurgency (along with the AUC) was the key concern. Both places have a history of political and criminal violence. But Central America's current predicament poses a serious risk to already fragile governance and the rule of law.

According to the United Nations, Honduras and El Salvador registered the highest homicides levels in the world in 2011—82 and 66 per 100,000, respectively. Guatemala is not far behind, and even countries long associated with peace and order, such as Costa Rica, are battling rising criminal violence.

For the U.S., the argument for sustained involvement and support—and the interests at stake—are not too different from what they were a dozen years ago.

To begin with, the U.S., still the major consumer of cocaine, bears responsibility for the criminal violence wreaking havoc in a region where, World Bank and Council on Foreign Relations studies show, drugs have become a major driver of lawlessness.

Although the notion of "shared responsibility" has become fashionable today in relation to U.S. collaboration with Mexico, it had already been properly invoked to justify support for Plan Colombia in 2000.

In fact, one can argue that the U.S. has an even greater responsibility to assist Central America at a significant level than it did for Colombia in 2000. The illicit narcotics trade is an equally if not more significant factor, driving violence in the region today than it was in Colombia, where political insurgency and not drug-related criminal activity (such as kidnapping) were particularly relevant. In addition, the availability of arms—another important risk factor in criminal violence—is high in Central America, not only because so many guns have remained at large in the aftermath of the region's civil conflicts, but because U.S. suppliers are a relatively close source of (legally purchased or smuggled) sophisticated weaponry.

U.S. Responsibility

Washington has a moral responsibility to address the continuing domestic instability and weakness of the region's political and social institutions. Many of those weaknesses are part of a legacy of the heavy intervention in the region and the battles that took place during the 1980s (e.g., Nicaragua, El Salvador).

The U.S. has a responsibility to address the continuing aftershocks. And the U.S. and Central America are increasingly intertwined in other key respects. More than 3 million Central Americans live in the U.S., and remittance flows constitute a significant share—roughly 15 percent—of some of the region's economies.

In this effort, the lessons of Plan Colombia should guide the rationale and objectives of U.S. engagement in Central America today.

The goal should be to help protect the civilian population, and to support national institutions—particularly the police and the justice system—in their efforts to reduce levels of violence and strengthen the rule of law. The focus on drugs—in the case of Central America, trafficking, as opposed to production—should be regarded as only a narrow piece of a broader strategy that emphasizes the strengthening of democratic governance.

To be sure, after years of being off the radar, Central America is once again preoccupying U.S. policymakers. Concern about the deteriorating security situation resulted in tacking on an additional $50 million in assistance for Central America to the Merida Initiative, adopted in 2008 and aimed chiefly at containing the drug-fueled violence in Mexico.

A year later, in 2009, the Obama administration developed the Central American Regional Security Initiative, or CARSI, which is run by the U.S. Department of State and currently supports Central America at the level of roughly $100 million each year for security cooperation, drug interdiction, intelligence, and institutional support.

Money, of course, isn't everything. But resources are fundamental to a program's success, especially when one is dealing with powerful groups—whether insurgents, organized crime syndicates or well-funded gangs. A proper balance of force needs to be achieved.

Also crucial, as the record of Plan Colombia reveals, are constructive guidance and assistance in matters such as intelligence-gathering techniques. Moreover, the U.S. is uniquely positioned to play a coordinating and catalytic role in marshaling support for Central America's vulnerable states from Colombia, Mexico and others inside the hemisphere and beyond.

It is tempting to despair of the situation today in Central America, just as it was in Colombia in 1999. Skeptics of increased U.S. assistance—however wisely designed and implemented—such as José Miguel Cruz in a Spring 2012 article on AQ Online predictably point to the weakness and widespread corruption of Central American institutions, both private and public. They argue that such aid, even if smartly applied, will do little good. Others maintain, sensibly, that as long as the drug problem persists and the drug war remains so ineffective, criminal violence will continue to spread, making aid packages of any sort pointless.

Such doubts are understandable. But it is useful to recall that similar misgivings were registered about Plan Colombia a dozen years ago. It is especially important to focus on the above-mentioned parallels. Undoubtedly, Colombia—South America's oldest democracy, with a model Constitutional Court and longstanding political parties—has long enjoyed institutional respect and support compared to Central America, but in 2000 Colombia faced similar challenges in governance.

Not only does Central America demonstrate the compelling need for a more robust approach, the timing is especially right for such a strategy. Governments in Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador are all keenly seeking broader and more sustained levels of cooperation with the U.S.—a fortuitous alignment of interests not seen for many years in the region.

There is, to be sure, little appetite in the U.S. for a sustained engagement any place in the world today, especially after the draining wars in Afghanistan and Iraq. The U.S. government's fiscal health is more precarious. Nonetheless, the concrete achievements of Plan Colombia should reassure a wary U.S. public and Congress that it is in the U.S. national interest to adopt a similarly bipartisan consensus to assist neighbors in trouble.

Subject:	60,000 Against Arctic Drilling by Friday

John —

Great news: In just the past five days, more than 48,000 LCV members have signed our petition urging the U.S. Department of Interior to keep Shell out of America's Arctic and protect our Arctic waters, lands, and wildlife from dangerous oil drilling! This is an amazing response, but if we really want to see Shell held accountable for their reckless behavior, we need to keep broadcasting our message loud and strong while the Obama Administration investigates Shell's irresponsible Arctic plans.

Will you help us reach 60,000 signatures by Friday to protect the Arctic? Add your name here >>

Thanks,
Vanessa

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS

Sign our petition to get Shell Oil out of America's Arctic Ocean: Tell Interior Secretary Salazar to put a stop to Arctic drilling now!

John,

Shell Oil's irresponsible attempts to drill for oil in America's Arctic Ocean have gone from bad to worse in the past year. Now with the recent grounding of Shell's drilling rig off the coast of Alaska, we have an opportunity to get the U.S. Department of Interior to suspend Shell's project and all oil and gas drilling in America's Arctic.

Will you add your name to our petition to get Shell out of the Arctic?

On New Year's Eve, Shell's huge Kulluk oil drilling rig — with 150,000 gallons of fuel on board — broke loose from a tow vessel during a major storm and ran aground on some rocks along Alaska's coast.

The grounding of its drilling rig is just the latest in a series of troubling incidents in the past year that have marked Shell's debacle of an Arctic drilling program. They include its oil spill containment system failing catastrophically in a test overseen by government officials, an ongoing criminal investigation of safety and pollution control problems on one of Shell's drill ships, and an attempt by Shell to allow its rigs to pollute the air beyond the limits that the company had already agreed to meet.

And do you know why Shell was moving its drilling rig on New Year's Eve in the middle of a massive ocean storm? It's because they were attempting to avoid paying taxes they would have owed had they remained in an Alaska port on January 1! How can we possibly trust a company to operate in a pristine environment like the Arctic if it runs such enormous risks to its crew, the environment, and wildlife in order to save what amounts to a drop in the bucket of their profits?

We cannot let them get away with this recklessness.

Tell the U.S. Department of Interior: Suspend Shell's drilling in America's Arctic Ocean now!

This year, Shell has lost control of multiple rigs in Alaska waters. They haven't been able to persuade the Coast Guard to certify that their equipment could effectively respond to an oil spill if another disaster struck like in the Gulf of Mexico. And even other oil companies have backed out of any Arctic drilling efforts because of the major potential for disaster.

Earlier this week the Obama Administration announced that they will do a major review of Shell's Arctic operations and the Coast Guard began an investigation into the Kulluk accident.

This is our opportunity to convince our government to put a stop to Arctic drilling. If they hear from enough of us, at a time when the risks of this terrible project have just been exposed, the Department of Interior can suspend all oil and gas drilling in America's Arctic. But they need to hear from you today.

Sign our petition to Interior Secretary Salazar here >>

The Arctic is home to indigenous communities whose culture, history, and livelihoods are tied to these lands and waters. It is also the habitat of many forms of iconic wildlife including polar bears, arctic foxes, and 17 different types of whales, dolphins, and porpoises. Many Arctic species are already threatened because of the effects of man-made climate change, but would be put at even greater risk if Shell continues with its irresponsible plans to drill.

As Arctic ice melts at an increasingly rapid rate, oil companies like Shell want to use that as an opportunity to drill below waters that had once been frozen solid rather than heeding the warning it provides of how much our planet is warming.

If we have any chance of stopping them, we need to use this moment to hold Shell accountable for their actions and say enough is enough.

Will you take a moment to sign our petition to end Shell's reckless Arctic plans?

With your help we can protect one of our planet's most important places and those who live there. Thanks for adding your voice to our call today.

Subject:	Why Michelle's coming to Virginia

Friend,

I've had my share of long days during this campaign.

But I'll bet that meeting for meeting, event for event, my schedule doesn't touch Michelle Obama's.

That's why I'm honored she's joining us in Virginia on Thursday evening to talk about why this election is so important.

Donate $5 or more today and you'll be automatically entered for the chance join us — we'll even make sure you get a picture to remember the night.

Michelle is taking the time to support this campaign because the stakes couldn't be higher for Virginians who need a Governor to put jobs first instead of pushing a divisive social agenda.

And she's committed to protecting the progress Democrats made here last year electing Senator Kaine and reelecting her husband.

Michelle's doing her part to make sure we keep Virginia blue. Will you do yours?

Please chip in $5 or more today to support my campaign — if you donate before noon Wednesday, we'll throw your name in the hat to meet Michelle on Thursday night.

Thanks for your support and I hope to see you there,

Terry

1) are you still around tomorrow. Supposed to see the boss at 12:15 as of now. Do you have 15 minutes on either end?
2) let me know if there is grumpiness on any of her Face the Nation answers. I thought she was generous to POTUS on the economy and ACA; tough on the Pentagon on train and equip, but didn't take any swipes at him. Trying to calibrate whether we are threading the needle ok with you guys after Valerie getting her nose out of joint on Keystone. (She watches too much Morning Joe by the way; they are the only people who viewed her comments on being frustrated with the delay as a frontal attack on POTUS.)
3) not to sound like a whining weasel, but should I assume I didn't make the cut on the China dinner? Haven't heard anything and both Mary and I are trying to figure out travel plans.

The attached file is a report that looks at performance and undervote by county. We have the Presidential, Senate, SoS, and AG races here. It's impossible to do State House, City, or anything else that's not at the county or statewide level, with the data that we have today.

Topline undervote percentages are:
Senate Dem: 14.1%
Senate Rep: 1.4%
SoS Dem: 16%
SoS Rep: 27%
AG Dem: 20.3%

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The difference in Republican Senate and SoS races does seem odd to me. The ballot had two names in the Senate race (Gordon Smith and Gordon Leitch) and just one in SoS (Rick Dancer), which I think played a role. And the lack of a competitive race for the President meant the "top of the ticket" was actually a debatable thing.

The Democratic undervote being 14.1% in a competitive Senate race is the number to watch. Makes me nervous.

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

OPINION

Getting to Know John McCain

By KARL ROVE
April 30, 2008; Page A17

It came to me while I was having dinner with Doris Day. No, not that Doris Day. The Doris Day who is married to Col. Bud Day, Congressional Medal of Honor recipient, fighter pilot, Vietnam POW and roommate of John McCain at the Hanoi Hilton.

As we ate near the Days' home in Florida recently, I heard things about Sen. McCain that were deeply moving and politically troubling. Moving because they told me things about him the American people need to know. And troubling because it is clear that Mr. McCain is one of the most private individuals to run for president in history.

AP
Col. (Ret.) Bud Day with John McCain at a campaign stop in Pensacola, Fla., in January.

When it comes to choosing a president, the American people want to know more about a candidate than policy positions. They want to know about character, the values ingrained in his heart. For Mr. McCain, that means they will want to know more about him personally than he has been willing to reveal.

Mr. Day relayed to me one of the stories Americans should hear. It involves what happened to him after escaping from a North Vietnamese prison during the war. When he was recaptured, a Vietnamese captor broke his arm and said, "I told you I would make you a cripple."

The break was designed to shatter Mr. Day's will. He had survived in prison on the hope that one day he would return to the United States and be able to fly again. To kill that hope, the Vietnamese left part of a bone sticking out of his arm, and put him in a misshapen cast. This was done so that the arm would heal at "a goofy angle," as Mr. Day explained. Had it done so, he never would have flown again.

But it didn't heal that way because of John McCain. Risking severe punishment, Messrs. McCain and Day collected pieces of bamboo in the prison courtyard to use as a splint. Mr. McCain put Mr. Day on the floor of their cell and, using his foot, jerked the broken bone into place. Then, using strips from the bandage on his own wounded leg and the bamboo, he put Mr. Day's splint in place.

Years later, Air Force surgeons examined Mr. Day and complemented the treatment he'd gotten from his captors. Mr. Day corrected them. It was Dr. McCain who deserved the credit. Mr. Day went on to fly again.

Another story I heard over dinner with the Days involved Mr. McCain serving as one of the three chaplains for his fellow prisoners. At one point, after being shuttled among different prisons, Mr. Day had found himself as the most senior officer at the Hanoi Hilton. So he tapped Mr. McCain to help administer religious services to the other prisoners.

Today, Mr. Day, a very active 83, still vividly recalls Mr. McCain's sermons. "He remembered the Episcopal liturgy," Mr. Day says, "and sounded like a bona fide preacher." One of Mr. McCain's first sermons took as its text Luke 20:25 and Matthew 22:21, "render unto Caesar what is Caesar's and unto God what is God's." Mr. McCain said he and his fellow prisoners shouldn't ask God to free them, but to help them become the best people they could be while serving as POWs. It was Caesar who put them in prison and Caesar who would get them out. Their task was to act with honor.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Another McCain story, somewhat better known, is about the Vietnamese practice of torturing him by tying his head between his ankles with his arms behind him, and then leaving him for hours. The torture so badly busted up his shoulders that to this day Mr. McCain can't raise his arms over his head.

One night, a Vietnamese guard loosened his bonds, returning at the end of his watch to tighten them again so no one would notice. Shortly after, on Christmas Day, the same guard stood beside Mr. McCain in the prison yard and drew a cross in the sand before erasing it. Mr. McCain later said that when he returned to Vietnam for the first time after the war, the only person he really wanted to meet was that guard.

Mr. Day recalls with pride Mr. McCain stubbornly refusing to accept special treatment or curry favor to be released early, even when gravely ill. Mr. McCain knew the Vietnamese wanted the propaganda victory of the son and grandson of Navy admirals accepting special treatment. "He wasn't corruptible then," Mr. Day says, "and he's not corruptible today."

The stories told to me by the Days involve more than wartime valor.

For example, in 1991 Cindy McCain was visiting Mother Teresa's orphanage in Bangladesh when a dying infant was thrust into her hands. The orphanage could not provide the medical care needed to save her life, so Mrs. McCain brought the child home to America with her. She was met at the airport by her husband, who asked what all this was about.

Mrs. McCain replied that the child desperately needed surgery and years of rehabilitation. "I hope she can stay with us," she told her husband. Mr. McCain agreed. Today that child is their teenage daughter Bridget.

I was aware of this story. What I did not know, and what I learned from Doris, is that there was a second infant Mrs. McCain brought back. She ended up being adopted by a young McCain aide and his wife.

"We were called at midnight by Cindy," Wes Gullett remembers, and "five days later we met our new daughter Nicki at the L.A. airport wearing the only clothing Cindy could find on the trip back, a 7-Up T-shirt she bought in the Bangkok airport." Today, Nicki is a high school sophomore. Mr. Gullett told me, "I never saw a hospital bill" for her care.

A few, but not many, of the stories told to me by the Days have been written about, such as in Robert Timberg's 1996 book "A Nightingale's Song." But Mr. McCain rarely refers to them on the campaign trail. There is something admirable in his reticence, but he needs to overcome it.

Private people like Mr. McCain are rare in politics for a reason. Candidates who are uncomfortable sharing their interior lives limit their appeal. But if Mr. McCain is to win the election this fall, he has to open up.

Americans need to know about his vision for the nation's future, especially his policy positions and domestic reforms. They also need to learn about the moments in his life that shaped him. Mr. McCain cannot make this a biography-only campaign – but he can't afford to make it a biography-free campaign either. Unless he opens up more, many voters will never know the experiences of his life that show his character, integrity and essential decency.

These qualities mattered in America's first president and will matter as Americans decide on their 44th president.

Mr. Rove is the former senior adviser and deputy chief of staff to President George W. Bush.

Subject:	RE: message to staff for later

I've made a few more changes. See below. My only other question -- Do you feel comfortable stating that "The decisions about the next phase of the campaign will be made this week."? Are we sure about this? If not, you may simply want to say that there will be another update on the re-organization by the end of this week.

I know there has been a lot of uncertainty since the announcement that we are not running ads. I want to make sure I put an end to any speculation of what might happen next. As someone deeply vested in what we have built together this has not been easy.

First, I wanted to thank you for your head-down singular focus on knocking around the McCain team for their lobbyist ties. Working with our partners and relentlessly pursuing this you have broken through, despite the news about us not running ads.

The last week has shown exactly how an aggressive earned media campaign can screw with the McCain campaign. They are thin-skinned about these stories and there is a lot more there. We need to keep that going.

What is clear is that there are going to be changes in how we do our work. We are working on a restructuring plan.

I wanted to share some of the possible options with you and a timeline of what you can expect.

1. WHOLE CAMPAIGN TAKEOVER -We might be subsumed into the work of a new organization. We would continue to co-locate and work together.

2. COMPONENT CAMPAIGN PARTS RESTRUCTURED -We may divide up the campaign projects and have partners take over various parts of the work, various staff pods and projects subsumed by partners. We would try to continue to co-locate and work together.

Timeline:

-The decisions about the next phase of the campaign will be made this week.

-You still have your job. We are working to make sure the transition to a new organization or organizations is seamless and trying to figure out transition assistance (pay) when it might not be.

I said it last week and I will say it again. No group of people on the planet is better prepared to take on John McCain right now. Back to work.

American consumers – something we've seen too often over the past 15 years. We also need to get tougher on unfair subsidies, loopholes, and other underhanded trading practices. Some progress has been made in this agreement to better protect workers and the environment, but we need to go further, especially when it comes to clear, enforceable assurances that countries will meet their labor obligations under this deal. And, as I wrote in my book Hard Choices, I remain deeply concerned about a process for settling trade disputes that, despite new improvements, still favors powerful corporations at the expense of everyone else.

As President, I will pursue a comprehensive approach to trade that addresses these challenges and prioritizes the needs of American workers and families.

First, I will fight to improve our country's economic competitiveness based on strong growth, fair growth, and long-term growth. That's how we'll make trade work more for us rather than against us. We need to close tax loopholes that reward corporations for shipping jobs overseas and instead create more good-paying jobs at home and invest in the sources of American strength, from infrastructure to innovation to clean energy. Most of all, we have to invest in our people, so every American can get the skills and training they need to compete in the global economy.

Second, I will strengthen enforcement of the trade agreements we already have and hold China and others accountable for their unfair trading practices.

Third, I still believe a strong and fair trans-Pacific trade agreement is both possible and necessary, so I will build on the Obama administration's valuable work and negotiate a deal that meets our tests and delivers for everyday Americans.

Fourth, I will bring more transparency and inclusiveness to trade negotiations, including making sure that workers, labor unions, NGOs, and small businesses are well-represented at every stage. Just as we demand more open and fair markets, we should also demand more open and fair negotiations.

I will also continue to reassert American leadership in Asia, where so much of the future of the 21st century will be written. Our strategic position in the region, the security of allies like Japan and South Korea, and our ability to push China to act responsibly all depend on a strong American leadership.

As President, I'll keep doing what I've always done – fighting for families, fighting for fairness, fighting for you.

Subject: AP: Top Secret Emails Include Drone Talk

Top Secret Emaisl Include Drone Talk
News from The Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) -- The two emails on Hillary Rodham Clinton's private server that an auditor deemed "top secret" include a discussion of a news article detailing a U.S. drone operation and a separate conversation that could point back to highly classified material in an improper manner or merely reflect information collected independently, U.S. officials who have reviewed the correspondence told The Associated Press.

The sourcing of the information could have significant political implications as the 2016 presidential campaign heats up. Clinton, the front-runner for the Democratic nomination, agreed this week to turn over to the FBI the private server she used as secretary of state, and Republicans in Congress have seized on the involvement of federal law enforcement as a sign that she was either negligent with the nation's secrets or worse.

On Monday, the inspector general for the 17 spy agencies that make up what is known as the intelligence community told Congress that two of 40 emails in a random sample of the 30,000 emails Clinton gave the State Department for review contained information deemed "Top Secret/Sensitive Compartmented Information," one of the government's highest levels of classification.

The two emails were marked classified after consultations with the CIA, which is where the material originated, officials said.

The officials who spoke to the AP on condition of anonymity work in intelligence and other agencies. They wouldn't detail the contents of the emails because of ongoing questions about classification level. Clinton did not transmit the sensitive information herself, they said, and nothing in the emails she received makes clear reference to communications intercepts, confidential intelligence methods or any other form of sensitive sourcing.

The drone exchange, the officials said, begins with a copy of a news article that discusses the CIA drone program that targets terrorists in Pakistan and elsewhere. While a secret program, it is well-known and often reported on. The copy makes reference to classified information, and a Clinton adviser follows up by dancing around a top secret in a way that could possibly be inferred as confirmation, they said. Several officials, however, described this claim as tenuous.

But a second email reviewed by Charles McCullough, the intelligence community inspector general, appears more suspect. Nothing in the message is "lifted" from classified documents, the officials said, though they differed on where the information in it was sourced. Some said it improperly points back to highly classified material, while others countered that it was a classic case of what the government calls "parallel reporting" - different people knowing the same thing through different means.

The emails came to light Tuesday after Sen. Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa, reported that McCullough found four "highly classified" emails on the unusual homebrew server that Clinton used while she was secretary of State. Two were sent back to the State Department for review, but Grassley said the other two were, in fact, classified at the closely guarded "Top Secret/SCI level."

In a four-page fact sheet that accompanied a letter to Clinton supporters, Clinton spokeswoman Jennifer Palmieri stressed that Clinton was permitted to use her own email account as a government employee and that the same process concerning classification reviews would still be taking place had she used the standard "state.gov " email account used by most department employees. The State Department, meanwhile, stressed that it wasn't clear if the material at issue ought to be considered classified at all.

Still, the developments suggested that the security of Clinton's email setup and how she guarded the nation's secrets will remain relevant campaign topics. Even if the emails highlighted by the intelligence community prove innocuous, she will still face questions about whether she set up the private server with the aim of avoiding scrutiny, whether emails she deleted because she said they were personal were actually work-related, and whether she appropriately shielded such emails from possible foreign spies and hackers.

Clinton says she exchanged about 60,000 emails in her four years as secretary of state. She turned over all but what she said were personal emails late last year. The department has been making those public as they are reviewed and scrubbed of any sensitive data.

The State Department advised employees not to use personal email accounts for work, but it wasn't prohibited. But Clinton's senior advisers at the State Department would have been briefed upon basic protocol for handling classified information and retaining government records. In Clinton's time, most officials saved their emails onto a separate file or printed them out when leaving office. Only recently has the department begun automatically archiving the records of dozens of senior officials, including Secretary of State John Kerry.

In the emails, Clinton's advisers appear cognizant of secrecy protections.

In a series of August 2009 emails, Clinton aide Huma Abedin told Clinton that the U.S. point-man for Afghanistan, Richard Holbrooke, and another official wanted "to do a secure" conversation to discuss Afghan elections. Clinton said she could talk after she received a fax of a classified Holbrooke memo, also on a secure line. Later, Abedin wrote: "He can talk now. We can send secure fax now. And then connect call."

But other times, the line was blurred. Among Clinton's exchanges now censored as classified by the State Department was a brief exchange in October 2009 with Jeffrey Feltman, then the top U.S. diplomat for the Middle East. Both Clinton and Feltman's emails about an

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Egyptian proposal" for a reconciliation ceremony with Hamas are marked B-1.4, classified for national security reasons, and completely blacked out from the email release.

A longer email the same day from Clinton to former Sen. George Mitchell, then Mideast peace envoy, is also censored. Mitchell responds tersely and carefully that "the Egyptian document has been received and is being translated. We'll review it tonight and tomorrow morning, will consult with the Pals (Palestinians) through our Consul General, and then I'll talk with Gen. S again. We'll keep you advised."

Nøvember Vote No on the Numbers

We tried to send you information on where to vote, but our records show you're not a Colorado resident. If you live outside of Colorado, please contact your state or local elections officials for voting information. (Actually in Colorado?)

Dear Coloradan,

Angel of Death? Seriously? Not if we can help it.

Last week, I sent you the awful "Angel of Death" video that the campaign for Amendment 62 produced. It was so bad that asked for your ideas to spoof it. Well, you came through with hundreds of ideas—all of them great—but there had to be a winner. Want to see what it is?

On November 2nd we face a choice. We can elect candidates who will continue to expand and refine the change agenda that we overwhelmingly voted for in 2006 and 2008, or we can elect a slate of candidates like Ken Buck and Tom Tancredo whose extremist agendas brought us Tea Party propaganda like this.

After you watch, please forward this message to five progressive friends in Colorado and ask them to commit to vote on Tuesday, November 2nd.

Coloradans need to imagine the state and nation they want to live in and then vote accordingly. Do we want to return to the policies of endless war, lax regulation, and crony capitalism, or do we want to finish the job? Do we really want horrendous ideas like Amendments 60, 61, 62, 63, and Propositions 101 & 102 to destroy the state we love?

Think about it while you watch .

Thanks for all you do,

Jen Caltrider

Hi John-

I followed-up yesterday with the Ops & Tech teams to try and figure out where the communication failed on getting you an iPad with Touch ID. Long story short, they accidentally ordered the wrong iPad.

The team felt pretty badly about the mix-up and wants to exchange it for you. They can just swap out the one you have now for a version with Touch ID and they won't lose any money on the old device.

How does that sound? If you're on board they'll have the new one ready to swap out on Monday. But if you'd prefer to just keep the one you have we can also leave it.

Thanks!
Milia

Dear Mr. Podesta,

I am a 2009 graduate of Georgetown Law who is participating in a symposium on the Future of Artificial Intelligence that is being held at the Kimmel Center at New York University from January 11-13, 2016. This exclusive international symposium will convene a distinguished group of thought leaders around the world in New York City to discuss and debate the promises, challenges and risks of Artificial Intelligence. The symposium's Steering Committee has asked me to reach out to you and extend you an invitation to be a featured panelist at the symposium. Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg, Tesla Motors CEO Elon Musk, NVIDIA CEO Jen-Hsun Huang, and IBM Senior VP John Kelly are among the confirmed speakers at the event.

If you are available and willing, the symposium would benefit immensely from your presence and contribution. If you are interested, please reply to this email and I will send you additional information about the symposium and put you in direct contact with the symposium's organizers. I hope this message finds you well.

Sincerely,
Matt Scherer

John,

Congratulations on the opening of your new research center. It's much needed. Are there some projects we can work on together? Inequality and upward mobility are subjects of abiding interest to the Washington Monthly. In fact, the cover package of our current issue is devoted to them http://www.washingtonmonthly.com/magazine/index.php . For that package we partnered with he non-profit group Opportunity Nation and were jointly funded by the Annie E. Casey Foundation and would love to do something like that with you guys. The research in that package has gotten hundreds of newspaper and broadcast media hits.

One of the pieces from that package that's gotten a lot of attention (Jason Furman has been quoting it in his speeches) is this one http://www.washingtonmonthly.com/magazine/november_december_2013/features/stay_put_young_man047332.php. It's about how declining geographic mobility is contributing to the problems of growing inequality and lack of upward mobility. The author is journalist and Washington Monthly contributing editor Timothy Noah, who's written one of the best books on inequality http://www.amazon.com/The-Great-Divergence-Americas-Inequality/dp/1608196356. He's applied for a job with you guys and I highly recommend him.

All the best,

Paul

The problem is grave but simple: where poverty is rampant, traffickers have easy work. In 2012 Romania was reported to be the poorest country in the developed world with more than 20% of the population living on less than $4 per day. Facing bleak or absent opportunities at home, desperate Romanian women and girls make up a significant portion of the individuals exploited in the sex industry throughout Europe.

That's why we're expanding our program to help the most vulnerable in the community: children.

THE BIG IDEA:

Donald Trump's hardline position on immigration is the main reason he is favored to win the Arizona Republican primary on Tuesday—and lose the Utah caucuses.

The chasm between the neighboring states on the issue is extraordinary.

In Arizona, Trump has the strong support of Sheriff Joe Arpaio and former Gov. Jan Brewer, who signed the controversial SB1070 law in 2010. Last summer, during a rally in Phoenix, Trump said illegal immigrants "flow in like water." His best known promise is to build a border wall and make Mexico pay for it. Even nine months after he started talking about this, his crowds went wild when he brought it up.

But just to the north, in Utah, nearly two-thirds of the population is Mormon. Many served on mission trips overseas, including to Latin America, when they were young. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints settled in Utah to escape persecution in the east. As a result, religious tolerance and inclusiveness are central tenets of the faith. That makes many Mormons acutely uncomfortable with Trump's call for banning Muslims from entering the United States. The church even released a rare statement last year condemning Trump's proposal; it quoted church founder Joseph Smith.

When 26 Republican governors announced that Syrian refugees were not welcome in their states last fall, Utah's Gary Herbert (who is Mormon) was the lone Republican governor to declare his state would accept them.

"The LDS church has spent years lobbying for 'compassionate' immigration reform," McKay Coppins, who himself is Mormon, writes on BuzzFeed. "In 2011, church leaders offered a full-throated endorsement of 'the Utah Compact,' a state legislative initiative that discouraged deporting otherwise law-abiding undocumented immigrants and offered a path to residency for families that would be separated by deportation. These pro-immigrant attitudes are common among rank-and-file believers. … Mormons are more than twice as likely as evangelicals to say they support 'more immigration' to the United States, according to Notre Dame political scientist David Campbell. And a 2012 Pew survey found Mormons were more likely to say immigrants 'strengthen' the country than they were to call immigrants an overall 'burden.'"

Trump has fared terribly in areas where Mormons concentrate, from Nevada to Wyoming and Idaho. "In Idaho's heavily Mormon Madison County, Trump captured less than 8 percent of the vote, and he pulled in less than 20 percent in other southern Idaho counties that have large LDS populations," Katie Zezima notes from Utah.

Trump's controversial call for a ban on Muslims has been popular among majorities of Republican primary voters in exit polls. Not so in Utah. Matt Miles, a political scientist at a satellite campus of Brigham Young University (which is controlled by the Mormon church), told the Salt Lake Tribune that Trump's call for a ban on Muslims is a huge issue and stirs fear among the faithful. The paper notes that a Trump spokeswoman made the problem worse when, defending the policy, she mistakenly referred to the federal government shutting down "Mormon churches," when she actually meant the Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, a breakaway sect that practices polygamy."

-- "Sheriff Joe" should be viewed as a Trump antecedent, a right-wing populist who capitalized on fears of a growing minority population. The sheriff has been elected six times in a county that includes Phoenix and two-thirds of Arizona's population. "He forced jail inmates to wear pink underwear and live outside in tents during triple-digit heat," the AP recalls. "He launched dragnets to round up people in the country illegally, and a judge ruled that his operations illegally targeted Latinos. Arpaio then launched an investigation that … ended up targeting the judge. … He faces civil contempt charges over his department's defiance of orders to stop racial profiling."

"My secret weapon is just like Donald Trump: Go to the people," Arpaio told the AP, noting that he's done more than 4,000 TV interviews in his two decades as sheriff.

Paul Owens, left, leads a prayer over Ted Cruz at Fresh Start Church yesterday in Peoria, Ariz. (Courtney Pedroza/The Arizona Republic via AP)

-- Cruz has momentum in Utah. Mitt Romney announced Friday that he will caucus for Cruz and called on his followers to vote for the senator in forthcoming contests. It was a big blow to John Kasich just as he arrived for three town halls in the state. “I would have voted for him in Ohio,” the 2012 nominee wrote on Facebook. “But a vote for Governor Kasich in future contests makes it extremely likely that Trumpism would prevail."

The challenge for Cruz in the Beehive State is getting past 50 percent, which would entitle him to all 40 available delegates. Otherwise they’re divided up proportionally. A poll commissioned by the Deseret News, conducted in the days before Rubio dropped out, pegged Cruz at 42 percent , Trump at 21 percent, Rubio at 17 percent and Kasich at 13 percent. Sen. Mike Lee and Glenn Beck campaigned around the state for Cruz this weekend, warning Utahns that a vote for Kasich is a vote for Trump.

The Trump campaign has basically written off Utah; their goal is just to prevent Cruz from getting past 50 percent. "I wouldn't say this a place where we are expected to perform exceptionally well," spokeswoman Hope Hicks told the AP .

Just how bad is Trump’s Mormon problem? The Deseret News, which is owned by the Mormon Church, ran a story on the front page of the Sunday paper saying that Hillary Clinton would probably carry Utah if he wins the Republican nomination. "I believe Trump could lose Utah. If you lose Utah as a Republican, there is no hope," former Utah Gov. Mike Leavitt (R) told the paper.

It's more than immigration: Mormons, while not monolithic, also resent Trump's lack of decorum and manners. "His blatant religious illiteracy, his penchant for onstage cursing, his habit of flinging crude insults at women, his less-than-virtuous personal life and widely chronicled marital failures — all of this is anathema to the wholesome, family-first lifestyle that Mormonism promotes," Coppins notes in his BuzzFeed piece . "And demographically speaking, Mormons tend to reside outside Trump's base of support anyway. They have higher-than-average education levels, whereas Trump does best among voters without any college education; they are more likely to be weekly churchgoers, while Trump performs better with Christians who attend services infrequently."

Campaigning in Salt Lake City on Friday night, Trump questioned Romney's faith. "Are you sure he's a Mormon? Are we sure?" he asked one of his smallest crowds in a while.

Cruz toured the U.S. border with Mexico near Douglas, Arizona, on Friday. (Reuters/Sam Mircovich)

-- Laying a marker: Cruz could definitely score an upset in Arizona. The public polls this month have put Trump up double digits (+12 and +14), but they had small samples.

Here are five factors that keep Arizona in reach for Cruz:

1. It's become essentially a two-man race: Because it's winner-take-all, Kasich has not really campaigned in the state. So we've got the closest thing to a head-to-head match-up of any primary this year. In national polls, when GOP voters are forced to pick between Trump and Cruz, Cruz often wins.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

2. Cruz has a superior ground game. Neutral observers say his team is a lot more organized than Trump. His state director elected many Republican members of the legislature.
3. It's a closed primary, meaning only Republicans can vote. Trump has struggled in closed primaries.
4. Cruz has scored a bunch of late endorsements: Rep. Matt Salmon announced his support last night.
5. Cruz is still perceived as strong on border security. He visited the border with Mexico on Friday and pledged to secure it as president. (He just doesn't use the kind of racially-insensitive language that Trump does and he did embrace his proposed ban on Muslims.) Although the bulk of GOP base voters very much want to crack down on undocumented immigrants, and the issue works to Trump's advantage, it bears mentioning that both of Arizona's senators, John McCain and Jeff Flake, support comprehensive immigration reform and were part of the Gang of Eight.

-- But early voting, and high turnout, is a problem for Cruz. Trump has very likely locked in a sizable lead when Rubio and others were still in the race. "In Maricopa, the state's largest county, the number of early voters in 2016 is already nearly 90 percent of the county's total GOP turnout in the primary four years ago," Politico reports. "Constantin Querard, Cruz's Arizona state director, noted the campaign had gained momentum since Rubio dropped out but added, 'We don't know how much of a deficit we have to overcome.' … In Maricopa County, which includes the Phoenix area and accounts for 60 percent of Arizona's total population, 249,702 of the 708,941 registered Republicans had returned their ballots as of Friday. In Pima County, Arizona's second largest and home to Tucson, more than 60,000 voters had cast ballots by Friday — roughly 85 percent of the 2012 turnout."

-- The stakes: A Cruz sweep, with all the delegates from Arizona and Utah, would make it meaningfully harder for Trump to secure the Republican nomination before the convention in July. It would also give the Texas senator meaningful momentum going into Wisconsin the week after next and then a relatively quiet period on the calendar after that.

-- Ahead of an FEC filing deadline at midnight, the presidential campaigns reported February fundraising. The highlights , via Matea Gold and Anu Narayanswamy:

- Trump put $6.9 million more of his personal money into his presidential campaign. "Since he began his White House bid last year, the billionaire real estate developer has lent or given his campaign nearly $25 million, according to Federal Election Commission reports. Although he maintains that he is self-funding the effort, his supporters have contributed $9.5 million, including $2 million in February.
... He raced through nearly $9.5 million (in February), largely on media buys ($3.46 million), printing and design services ($1.1 million) and event production ($587,000). Trump campaign manager Corey Lewandowski's New Hampshire-based consulting company was paid $75,000 for the month, including $25,000 the day after the Iowa caucuses."
- "Cruz sped through $17.5 million in February, his costliest month so far , running down his cash reserves. The senator raised $11.9 million last month, up from the $7.6 million his campaign collected in January. But Cruz entered March with $8 million in the bank, down from the $13.6 million he had at the beginning of February."
- "Kasich faces a more dire financial predicament. He pulled in only $3.4 million last month, leaving him with just $1.25 million as he headed into the March primary contests. The governor spent $3.6 million in February, more than he raised, a rate that puts him on track to quickly run out of cash unless his fundraising ramps up significantly."
- "Sanders outraised Clinton for the second month in a row, pulling in $43.5 million to her $30.1 million ... But the new figures also indicate that he plowed through far more cash, spending $40.9 million to her $34.3 million. That left the senator with $17.2 million in the bank as March began, while Clinton had $30.8 million."

- Jeb Bush put $407,000 of his personal money into his failing campaign during its final weeks so it could pay the bills.

SCOTUS STANDOFF

-- Sen. Mitch McConnell ruled out the possibility of a lame-duck vote to confirm Merrick Garland, dismissing speculation that Republican senators might rush him through if Hillary wins on multiple Sunday shows.

-- Harry Reid predicted McConnell will cave because GOP members don't "want to go over that cliff." "This is going to break," the minority leader said he told Garland when they met privately. "You're going to become a Supreme Court justice."

-- Vice President Biden will make a forceful call for Garland's confirmation in a Thursday speech to students and faculty at Georgetown University Law Center. In a Medium post shared with The Post before its release, Biden previews his remarks, saying "all 100 senators have a duty to provide advice and consent on nominees [to] determine who sits on our nation's highest court … The full Senate must be able to work its will." More from Mike DeBonis : "Writing on a day when activists across the country are planning protests of the GOP blockade, Biden says the speech touches on 'real-life consequences' of an eight-member court divided 4-4 along ideological lines: 'It's dangerous. Every single American needs to know what it would mean.' He also plans to speak 'squarely to his colleagues.' 'Take a look at the argument you're making. Consider, truly, whether it's good for the country,' Biden writes. 'The track you're on is a loss for the American people … Do the right thing.'"

-- The New Yorker's Jeffrey Toobin has a smart take on what the Garland pick says about Obama: "Presidents reveal themselves, and often replicate themselves, in the Justices they nominate to the Supreme Court. When Obama nominated Garland, he illuminated both the strengths and limitations of his Presidency. Like Obama's two previous nominees, Garland possesses impeccable, very traditional qualifications for the job … [These] nominees, all fine choices, reflect Obama's boundless faith in the meritocracy. … The Garland nomination also revealed the President's distaste for vulgar realities of politics. A court vacancy gave Obama a chance to inject himself into this year's elections. He could have chosen a nominee to rally core supporters, thus assisting his party up and down the ballot. But this President prefers technocrats to Democrats … The underlying rationale for Garland's nomination appears to be: if this sober, reasonable choice is right for the President it will be right for his party as well."

-- George F. Will said in his Sunday column that the GOP obstruction is "indefensible." The conservative thought leader praised the judge's record of deference, including in the Heller case. "If Republicans really think that either their front-runner or the Democrats' would nominate someone superior to Garland, it would be amusing to hear them try to explain why they do," the conservative writes.

-- Trump promised last night to release a list of five to 10 possible justices he'd nominate to the Supreme Court this week, seeking to ease concerns that he would appoint liberal justices should he become president. "I'm going to get judges that everybody respects, likes, and totally admires," Trump said in a speech to the Palm Beach County Republican Party. "I guarantee it personally … like we do in the world of business."

DRIVING THE DAY IN D.C.: The American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) is holding its annual conference.

Joe Biden (Molly Riley/AFP/Getty Images)

-- Vice President Biden, speaking yesterday, passionately defended Obama's policy toward Israel and took a direct shot at Trump's divisive rhetoric. "As the Jewish people know, any action that marginalizes one religious or ethnic group imperils us all," Biden said to loud applause. "It is incumbent on all of us to stand up against those who traffic in pernicious stereotypes, who seek to scare and divide us for political gain." Biden also said he was "pessimistic" about Israeli-Palestinian peace talks, acknowledging insufficient political will on both sides and calling on Netanyahu to stop continued expansion in occupied territories. (Greg Jaffe)

-- Hillary Clinton will speak later this morning, followed by Trump, Cruz, and Kasich later in the day. Sanders is the only presidential hopeful skipping this year's conference, saying he's too busy campaigning in the west.

-- The Anti-Defamation League is "redirecting" the $56,000 it has received from Trump over the past decade. The prominent Jewish religious organization issued a sharp rebuke of the GOP front-runner last night and said it will send his money to anti-discrimination education programs. (Jose A. DelReal)

THE DEMOCRATIC RACE

-- The Clinton campaign is building an oppo book to attack Trump after Cleveland, via Anne Gearan and Abby Phillip : "Clinton will attempt to do what GOP rivals couldn't: show that Trump's business dealings and impolitic statements make him unfit to be commander in chief. According to Clinton allies, Trump isn't Teflon: Republicans simply waited too long to go after him, and went about it the wrong way. 'What Republicans did was too little too late,' said pro-Clinton super PAC leader David Brock. 'It was petty insults … it wasn't strategic.' The former secretary of state plans to counter Trump with high-road substance, policy and issues … showcasing her readiness for the job without lowering her into Trump's 'gutter.' [But] given Trump's willingness to attack his opponents — and his pivot to going after Clinton in recent days — one clear presumption has emerged about the fall contest: It will be ugly."

Bernie Sanders greets supporters at Seattle Center yesterday. (Matt Mills McKnight/Getty Images)

-- Sanders drew more than 30,000 people to three Washington State rallies yesterday, a last-minute surge of support before the caucuses there next Saturday. The state is a must-win for Sanders. He needs to net 58 percent of delegates in the remaining states in order to catch up to Clinton. (John Wagner)

-- In Arizona's Democratic primary: In a testament to the primacy of the immigration issue in Arizona, Sanders also visited the border Saturday (though to decry inhumane treatment of migrants and to pledge he would halt deportations if elected). Clinton, who leads in public polls, carried the state over Barack Obama in 2008, and she's running ads touting the support of ex-Rep. Gabrielle Giffords. From today's Arizona Republic: "Sanders is betting big on the Grand Canyon State, where 75 of 85 Democratic National Convention delegates will be proportionally distributed based on the statewide vote and the vote in each of Arizona's nine congressional districts. In addition to appearances in downtown Phoenix, Tucson, Mesa and the Navajo Indian reservation near Flagstaff, Sanders is investing at least $1.5 million in Arizona television ads, at least three of them highlighting his support from Rep. Raul Grijalva, D-Ariz., one of the most liberal members of Congress."

DAYBOOK:

On the campaign trail: Trump, Cruz and Kasich speak at the AIPAC Policy Conference in Washington, D.C. Trump also meets with influential Republicans at Jones Day around lunchtime and holds an event at the Old Post Office building. The candidates from both parties participate in an evening town hall on CNN. On the Democratic side:

- Clinton goes to Phoenix.
- Sanders: Flagstaff, Ariz.; Salt Lake City, Utah

At the White House: In Cuba, President Obama will participate in a wreath-laying ceremony, tour the Jose Marti memorial, hold meetings with President Raul Castro and attend a state dinner. Vice President Biden travels to Seattle to attend a fundraiser luncheon for Sen. Patty Murray and tour the Riddell Lab at the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center. Later, he'll travel to Cincinnati.

On Capitol Hill: The Senate is on recess. The House meets at 2 p.m. for legislative business, with six suspension votes scheduled for 6:30 p.m.

At the Supreme Court: The court takes up a long-running political fight about whether Virginia lawmakers redrew the state's congressional map to protect the commonwealth's lone African American congressman — or to make sure he was not joined by a second. "The court will consider whether Republican lawmakers packed African American voters into Democratic Rep. Robert C. 'Bobby' Scott's district to comply with the Voting Rights Act or to make surrounding districts more hospitable to white candidates ... A panel of federal judges [previously] said the commonwealth's plan veered from partisan gerrymandering aimed at protecting incumbents into racial gerrymandering, which the Constitution forbids," Robert Barnes and Jenna Portnoy report . "The questions for Virginia are 'how much can you think about race in construction of districts, and is the use of race in aid of partisan gerrymandering problematic?' If SCOTUS upholds the lower court decision, law professor Persily said Virginia might provide a real-life answer to theoretical musings about how changing district lines affects results."

QUOTE OF THE DAY:

"It's kind of mutually assured destruction: Both sides line up their nukes. It's going to be just ugly and nasty and icky," a Democrat with longtime ties to the Clinton family said of a Donald vs. Hillary general election . "The winner will not be the least bad of the two. The winner will be the one in the contest of that mutually assured destruction who also has a vision and a message about the future that is both inspiring and credible for the rest of the country."

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

Ahead of his visit to Cuba, Obama recorded a skit with popular Havana-based comedian known as Pánfilo, whose show is widely watched on the island. In the video, Panfilo regularly tries to call the White House — but to no avail. He then inadvertently reaches the Oval Office when he is trying to get the weather forecast for Tuesday's exhibition game between Cuba's national team and the Tampa Bay Rays. Hey guys -- following up on comms' round up of what the press is saying just a few minutes ago, I'm put together an email for progressives with a bit of what the campaign has produced today. This first email would be lengthy as it includes launch reactions from progressives and the media as well as a few really great moments from Launch Day and the announcement email appended to the bottom.

I wanted to share with you first and get your feedback. Anything I am missing? Should cut? Let me know.

Hello all --

What a day! In case you missed it, Hillary Clinton announced her candidacy for President of the United States with a wonderful video that stresses where our focus will be: fighting for everyday Americans and for every vote. Watch the video below:

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=0uY7gLZDmn4

In the video, a diverse array of everyday Americans speak of their futures -- launching a family business, getting married, starting a family. Hillary concludes the video with an invitation to join her on this new journey. A groom-to-be featured in the video later tweeted an invitation of his own to Hillary:

@JaredMilrad
Thanks for inviting us to your big day @HillaryClinton. We're returning the favor & inviting you to ours. #wedding

The response to the announcement has been incredible. As of 8:30pm tonight:

Hillary's announcement on Twitter : 83,674 retweets, 76,770 favorites, and viewed over 3 million times in a single hour, per Twitter .

Facebook post with the video: 1,211,358 views.

YouTube video : 870,449 views.

Friend not in politics says she "literally cried" during Clinton video. After she checked to make sure it wasn't an ad for something else.

Associated Press :
"...rather than follow it with a splashy rally, she instead plans to head to the early-voting states of Iowa and New Hampshire, looking to connect with voters directly at coffee shops, day care centers and some private homes. [...] This voter-centric approach was picked with a purpose, to show that Clinton is not taking the nomination for granted. Only after about a month of such events will Clinton will give a broader speech outlining more specifics about her rationale for running."

Wall Street Journal :
"It is upbeat, with humor, music and images of everyday Americans talking about challenges and opportunities in their lives. This time, she says, with considerably more humility: 'I'm hitting the road to earn your vote.'"

New York Times' Patrick Healy :
"It's definitely a hopeful, optimistic video — talking about spring, new jobs, new homes, a gay couple getting married. Very forward-looking — and no references to her own past, and certainly not to the Clinton era of the 1990s. [...] She is portraying herself as a fighter — not against a Democratic rival or a Republican opponent. [...] But against greater forces that a lot of Americans feel are keeping them down."

New York Times' Maggie Haberman :
"This video is very much about the Democratic coalition of today — as you say, a gay couple getting married as a campaign centerpiece would have been unimaginable even in the President Obama re-elect in 2012."

John King, CNN:
"It's very cleverly constructed. It's a very smart political argument about what this is about. 'I want families to be able to get ahead. I want to help you fight. You've come back a little bit, but there's more to go. The government is not on your side. The deck is stacked against you.' So it's Hillary Clinton saying essentially, 'I will fight for you.' It's populist."

Perry Bacon, MSNBC:
"I was really struck by the fact that -- I watch the video, and for the first minute and a half, you didn't see Hillary Clinton's face at all. And it really went to the point, that this is a, the idea being, that this is a campaign about voters, not about me."

Julie Roginsky, Fox News:
"It's her saying, 'Look this isn't about me, I'm not being entitled, it's about you and I'm here to earn your vote.' That's a much more humble Hillary Clinton than we've seen in the past, and I hope it continues."

Jeff Zeleny, CNN:
"This video is exactly what her advisers said she wanted to announce like this. She knew that she could not announce the exact same way she did in 2008 by giving sort of a speech on a sofa as she did in 2008. She's going to listen to voters. She's going to start that on Tuesday in Iowa in a very small setting"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Vox :
"Hillary Clinton's opening message: It's not about me, it's about you.
...
Instead, the video suits a new kind of campaign - and certainly a new kind of campaign for Clinton - that emphasizes the needs and aspirations of voters."

POLITICO :
"Instead, the video captured messages central to her campaign by featuring regular Americans starting new phases of life: a mother going back to work after years spent raising her kids; a young woman applying for her first job after college; two Spanish-speaking brothers starting their own business together; two men getting married."

Daniel Halper, Weekly Standard, on Fox News:
"We also saw a lot of kids and a lot of seniors and I think that's the demographic, that's the coalition that Hillary Clinton is going to try to build. That is the big signal as to who she is going to try to appeal to - to cobble together enough voters to become the president of the United States. I think it actually is revealing in its own right and she wants to be, you know she doesn't want to be at the forefront. It's about the voters, it's about the American people. She'll come last and help bring people. I think that's what that advertisement is trying to tell us."

And finally, praise from an unexpected place

Friend --

I'm running for president.

Watch our first video to hear why -- then tell me you'll be with us.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I was raised with the belief that living in this country was one of the greatest blessings anyone could have.

Today, for so many families, the path to lasting prosperity is unclear.

Families have fought their way back from tough economic times. But it's not enough -- not when the average CEO makes about 300 times what the average worker makes.

Everyday Americans need a champion, and I want to be that champion.

I've spent my entire life standing up for women, children, families, and anyone who needed a little help along the way. That's what this campaign will be about, and that's what I'll do every single day as your president.

It's time for us to fight for people like my dad, who ran a small business and committed himself to building a better life for his family. People like my mom, who relied on the kindness of others to get through a tough childhood -- and like my baby granddaughter, who deserves to grow up in a country where every single kid has the opportunity to live up to her or his potential.

This won't be easy. And I won't take anything for granted. I'm going to work my heart out to earn every single vote, because I know it's your time.

Watch our video -- then add your name to let me know you're with me:

Subject:	[big campaign] Seattle Post Intelligencer op-ed piece by doctor on McCain's health, need to release his medical records

http://seattlepi.nwsource.com/opinion/382409_mccainhealth09.html

Consider McCain's health as well as candidate's age
By RICHARD E. SEROUSSI
GUEST COLUMNIST

As a physician, I am concerned that presidential candidate John McCain has not been willing to release his medical records for public scrutiny. While I can appreciate that the senator is a "very young" 72-year-old man, he is clearly at an age where his mortality is significantly more likely than for a younger man. The country should understand if he is at significant risk for a disease process that would carry enough morbidity to make him unable to perform the position of president for the next four years.

McCain has never issued a full public release of his medical records though this is standard practice for presidential candidates. He did, however, release 1,173 pages of his records for three hours so that a group of reporters and doctors could evaluate them. As doctors had to review a massive amount of documents in that time, it is impossible that they could have evaluated whether he is healthy enough to be president.

CNN correspondent Dr. Sanjay Gupta recently told The Huffington Post, "We were given three hours to go over 1,200 pages of records. That is a lot to go through. It was very sort of cloak and dagger and I'm sure they had their reasons. Given that I had my medical training, I was able to hone in on what it thought was important more quickly. But the pages weren't numbered, so I had no way of knowing what was missing. ... As a reporter I can only comment on what I saw but I can't say by any means that this was complete. ... As far as the secretiveness of it, what they said to us is that you can't take anything out of the room, but you could make notes. So it was a lot to go through in a short period of time."

The little we do know about McCain's records raises questions about his past melanoma. McCain has had four bouts with melanoma. The Mayo Clinic deemed the cancer resected from his temple in 2000 to be a stage IIA melanoma. The Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, however, reviewed the same slides and concluded that the lesion was "highly suggestive of a metastasis of malignant melanoma and may represent a satellite metastasis."

This suggests a far more advanced stage of cancer and would be a stage IIIB melanoma.

If he is at significant risk for mortality, for example from the spread of melanoma, a potentially deadly form of skin cancer that he has had documented in his prior medical history, this will impact our confidence in his ability to complete the mission of presidency. Predicted mortality from melanoma is highly dependent upon staging of the cancer, something the public should understand. This is highly complex, but can be simplified if accurate medical data are provided from McCain's medical records.

If he had early staging of melanoma, his mortality risk from that highly deadly form of skin cancer is likely pretty low. With more information about the staging of his melanoma, physicians and the general public can have a better sense of how healthy he is, as well as how likely it is he will need cancer treatment while in office. Those medical records should be made available to the voting public, in order for citizens to make a more informed decision about McCain's ability to complete his presidency, were he elected.

Richard E. Seroussi, M.D., is board-certified in physical medicine and rehabilitation, pain medicine and electrodiagnostic medicine. He is on the clinical faculty at an area medical school.

Who are Today's Supermanagers and Why Are They So Wealthy?

By Carter C. Price Posted on July 16, 2014 at 10:06 am

SHARE

What explains the changes in top-earning occupations over the past four decades? Perhaps the most intriguing argument about the current state of income inequality in the English speaking economies that Thomas Piketty makes in his bestseller "Capital in the 21st Century" is this—"the vast majority (60 to 70 percent, depending on what definitions one chooses) of the top 0.1 percent of the income hierarchy in 2000-2010 consists of top managers." He goes on to argue on page 302of his book that the rise in labor income "primarily reflects the advent of 'supermanagers,' that is, top executives of large firms who have managed to obtain extremely high, historically unprecedented compensation packages for their labor."

This really begs the question as to how and why these supermanagers came into existence. Nobel Laureate Robert M. Solow points out in The New Republic that this is primarily an American outcome. And Henry Engler at Thomson Reuters Accelelus' Compliance Complete recently published an excellent piece on Piketty's supermanagers in the United States and the United Kingdom. Both writers agreed with Piketty that these supermanagers were being vastly overly compensated given their questionable contributions to productivity.

I hope to shed a little more light on this issue by examining the change in professions comprising the top 0.1 percent of tax filers between 1979 and 2005. The purpose: to examine whether the changing composition of this super elite reflects changes in our economy that may explain the link between rising economic inequality and anemic economic growth over this period.

To do so, I used data from the April 2012 white paper "Jobs and Income Growth of Top Earners and the Causes of Changing Income Inequality: Evidence from U.S. Tax Return Data," by economists Jon Bakija of Williams College, Adam Cole of the Office of Tax Analysis at the U.S. Department of the Treasury, and Bradley Heim of Indiana University. They used tax data on the top 0.1% of filers to identify the top earning professions. The infographic below tells the tale, charting the change in occupations at the tippy top of the income ladder in 1979 and 2005.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The biggest change in the distribution of top earners is in the types of executives, managers, and supervisors at non-financial firms. In 1979, most of these people worked for large, publicly traded firms but by 2005 more were working in closely held firms. There is not enough information to provide a clearer picture as to who exactly these people are, but chances are they are employed by firms that are owned by private equity firms—the growth in the private equity industry over this period of time was substantial—and because financial professionals saw large gains, too. The share of people in the top 0.1 percent working in finance also increased substantially, to 18 percent in 2005 from 11 percent in 1979.

These findings are consistent with Piketty's analysis in his new book. But there are alternative explanations. One is presented in George Mason economist Tyler Cowen' s latest book, "Average is Over." He claims a skill biased-technological change is responsible for the shift in top occupations over roughly the same period. He argues that technology allows top performers to capture more of the market and thus earn substantially more than average performers. He and many other people hypothesize that this is a driver of increased economic inequality.

But if technology were a primary driver of inequality, then one would expect that skilled trades would have larger incomes and would have become a larger share in the top 0.1 percent. While there are slightly more technical types and entertainers among top earners (as can be seen in the data presented in our interactive) the biggest gains in both percentage terms and magnitude were among privately held business professionals.

Thus, the so called "average is over" argument—that that the top performers in each field will capture a bigger share of the pie—may be a driver of inequality, but it does not appear to explain the bulk of the changes in occupations at the top of the income ladder. Instead, the supermanagers appear to be capturing greater share of the wealth as is argued by Piketty and others. More detailed data would be required to assess who these people are and how workplace dynamics changed from 1979 to 2005 that would explain the change in income. The Washington Center for Equitable Growth will be examining this data in more detail in forthcoming publications.

John,

I have a rule never to ask anyone for anything, but because I have commitments I must make to Princeton I am, at the risk of presumption, writing to enquire if the new Administration intends to speak with me about a possible position.

Best,

We need more fairness in this country, so all the wealth and opportunities don't just go to those at the top. But we can't stop there. We also need more growth in our economy, so you can find that new job, get that raise, start a small business – so you can get ahead and stay ahead. America grows when your paycheck grows. Not when multimillionaires get another tax cut.

I know what it takes to make real change in the real lives of real people -- because I've been doing it my whole life. And I'm just getting warmed up. Iowa, I'm listening you. I'm fighting for you. And I'm going to deliver.

Dear all:

A number of email addresses I was sent did not go through - such as Kathy Whalen and others. I request that if you look over the list and there is someone missing, please forward the email rather than back to me to update. Thanks.

We are on for Dec 13 but if I don't get RSVP (andremember - also invited is your spouse, partner, companion, or significant other -- I won't be able to plan on food and drink at Rumors and at earlier get together at Levick.

PLESASE email Maddie Melendez -- MMelendez@lannyjdavis.com -- with RSVP number of people. Thanks -- all credit to Cheryl Mills for unintentionally inspiring this idea.

> Jeremiah Denton bravely served his country as a naval aviator in Vietnam and went on to represent the people of Alabama in the U.S. Senate. After his aircraft was shot down by enemy fire in North Vietnam, he spent nearly eight years as a prisoner of war. One of the highest-ranking officers to be taken prisoner in Vietnam, he endured torture, starvation, and years of solitary confinement with extraordinary fortitude. The valor that he and his fellow POWs displayed was deeply inspiring to our nation at the time, and it continues to inspire our brave men and women who serve today. As Senator, he served as a strong advocate for our national security. He leaves behind a legacy of heroic service to his country, and Michelle and I send our condolences to the Denton family.

Dan, I wrote the overview quickly but it could use some grander language. Could you all edit this and track your changes since I will be gathering input from all four of you? We are scheduling a call with the larger group tomorrow to review this so could you send me your edits by mid-day tomorrow, if not sooner if possible. Thanks, Kristina

KIRKPATRICK FOR ★ ARIZONA

John --

The Arizona Republican primary election is in exactly 15 days.

When the dust settles, we'll know which opponent Ann will face in the general election.

- ONE has a business linked to the Kochs.
- ONE led the push for the discriminatory bill, SB 1062.
- ONE supports a deeply anti-woman agenda.

Ann needs your support to overcome their attacks. It's the only way we can keep their extreme agenda out of Arizona.

We're trying to reach 100 online donations in the next 24 hours. But according to our records, you haven't contributed online to help Ann in 2014.

John, can we count on you to step up for Ann before midnight tomorrow?

Decks for NV and SC analytics attached. Let us know if you want a call, but I think it's all fairly straightforward. One quick flag--African American support looks low in NV, but we think this is because our race model there isn't particularly good (they aren't required by VRA to report race on their voter file). We largely target by name and census block, but Vegas is actually one of the most integrated cities in the country, so the data can be misleading. In other words, there are a lot of white voters in the "african american" universe. We are going to investigate further to confirm this.

Attached are results from our analytics surveys in NV and SC. We are doing quite well in both states (driven by especially strong support from Latino and black voters). Toplines:

- In Nevada, we are leading Sanders 64 to 19
- In South Carolina, we are leading Sanders 76 to 8

If there is interest, we'll set up a call later this week or next to review the findings.

This is bad news, John.

We're just hours away from the final budget deadline we'll face before the GOP votes to override President Obama's veto and defund Planned Parenthood, and we still have about $9,000 left before we hit our goal.

John, we can't tell you how bad it would be if Democrats didn't get the support they need to stop the GOP's latest attack on Planned Parenthood.

Subject:	Catching up!

John-
Happy New Year! I am sure you are swamped, so I will get right to the punch. I had lunch with Agnes Gund(assume you know her) in New York last month, who was one of Peter's close friends, dating back to the McGovern campaign in Cleveland. She wondered why there hadn't ever been a memorial to Peter in NY, and I explained that the family did not seem interested in anything beyond Cleveland, but I also mentioned that you and I had spoken about trying to put together a small soiree in DC, and I mean very small- a half a dozen people (you, me, Bob Kerrey, Anthony Romero, Neera, Aggie Gund)where we can let down our hair and give Peter a cheer. He'd certainly be amused - and aghast at the current state of everything. If you still want to do this, I'd rely on you for a date. You call the shots, since your schedule may not allow time for this anyway.
I have finished the first draft of the white paper commissioned about Peter's management advice and site visits to his favorite nonprofits. I am still hoping to speak to you about his site visit to CAP when you were CEO, and more. I did discuss Peter's site visit with Neera and have quite a bit on CAP, based on that conversation, my old notes from our site visits and from emails from Peter himself. It needs the work of a good editor now, but I think it conveys Peter's sure spitfire, principled beliefs, and the anecdotes and experiences that formed those constants and discipline. I will be in DC this Monday and Tuesday to work with the editor.
It's been a tough few years for me since Peter died, for all the wrong reasons....will explain some other time. So here's to Hillary and 2016. And Peter always....
Best always,
Jenny

Terrific. You should soon be receiving a check for $3.5MM ($2.0MM for the challenge, and $1.5MM additional). It's being processed on an expedited basis to reach you before yearend.

Thanks.

Steve

Hi Steve,

I write with good news from CAP - as of late Friday evening, we successfully met the Sandlers' Challenge grant for 2008.

As we've discussed, the challenge has been a useful tool for us as we sought to meet our ambitious fundraising goals for 2008. The attached spreadsheet has the list of donors, the size of their contributions and whether it was new or enhanced support for CAP. You will also see additional pledges that were made as a result of the challenge -- we expect this support before the end of the year as well.

We are proud and pleased to have met this challenge from Herb and Marion. Please let me know if you have any questions.

Warm regards,

Debby

Subject:	Energy Future Coalition: March 29 and future meeting dates
Attachments:	Energy Future Coalition Steering Committee Meeting Notes_cs rd.docx

As a reminder, the next meeting of the Steering Committee will be on Tuesday, March 29. We will meet as usual from 10 am to noon in the 12th floor board room at our offices, 1750 Pennsylvania Ave., NW.

We will focus on opportunities to remove carbon dioxide from the atmosphere, restore soil carbon, and deliver ecosystems services through improved agricultural practices – a topic that is sure to rise in prominence as the world seeks to slow climate change and move toward a net carbon balance (between emissions and sequestration) in the second half of this century. We have planned our agenda with Ernie Shea, our longtime collaborator with 25x'25 and Solutions from the Land, and we look forward to a lively and enlightening discussion of soil and the role the terrestrial resource base can play. Joining us:

Robert Bonnie will discuss the capacity of agricultural working lands to sequester carbon, as well as work under way in USDA to improve soil health. As Under Secretary for Natural Resources and Environment, he oversees the Forest Service and Natural Resources Conservation Service, working closely with the Farm Service Agency. He previously served as Senior Advisor to Secretary Tom Vilsack for environment and climate change. Prior to joining USDA, he was vice president for land conservation for the Environmental Defense Fund, where he focused on developing incentives to reward farmers, ranchers and forest owners for stewardship activities on private lands.

Wayne Honeycutt is the inaugural President and CEO of the Soil Health Institute , recently established by The Samuel Roberts Noble Foundation and the Farm Foundation to safeguard and enhance the vitality and productivity of the soil. Previously he served as Deputy Chief for Science and Technology in USDA's Natural Resources Conservation Service, leading its soil health campaign.

Rod Snyder is President of Field to Market , the Alliance for Sustainable Agriculture – a diverse group of grower organizations, agribusinesses, food, fiber, restaurant and retail companies, conservation groups, universities and agency partners. With a mission of continuous improvements in productivity, environmental quality and human well-being across the agricultural supply chain, the Alliance focuses on promoting, defining and measuring the sustainability of food, fiber and fuel production. Previously Rod was director of public policy with the National Corn Growers Association.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ray Gaesser, Chairman and past President of the American Soybean Association, will join us to listen and comment, and we have also invited Michael Doane, newly installed as director of working lands at the Nature Conservancy – formerly the Director of Sustainable Business Solutions at Monsanto.

As related reading (focused more on forests than agriculture), we recommend the recent article in The Washington Post entitled "The solution to climate change that has nothing to do with cars or coal ." Featuring Tom Lovejoy and his longtime research in the Amazon, it notes, "Of all the components of the recent Paris accord on climate change, the one that probably got the least attention but could have the most immediate potential involves the world's forests." Tom last month was named one of five new U.S. Science Envoys by the State Department.

Looking ahead, please note for your calendars the following meeting dates later this spring– all from 10 am to noon, as usual – and tentative topics:

Monday, April 25 – following up on our carbon pricing conversation with a focus on impacts on the U.S. coal industry, its workers and their communities.

Tuesday, May 3 – a special session amplifying our recent discussions of ocean acidification. (Mike Finley recommends watching the video on this web site , "Ocean Acidification – Changing Waters On The Oregon Coast ," noting, "There is one solid figure just for oysters of $110 million in losses. This is just the leading edge. There are many more dire impacts in the pipeline.")

Tuesday, June 7 – TBD

Our February meeting featured a valuable conversation on distributional effects of a carbon tax – with Eric Toder of the Urban-Brookings Tax Policy Center, Chad Stone of the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, and Michael Obeiter, representing Sen. Brian Schatz. Some notes are attached, if you were unable to attend. (As always, these notes are not verbatim and not for distribution or attribution, please.) Mike Finley also wanted to share a relevant New York Times article, Does a Carbon Tax Work? Ask British Columbia.

We hope you can join us on Tuesday, Feb. 23 – from 10 am to noon in the 12th floor board room at our offices, 1750 Pennsylvania Ave., NW. As always, we welcome RSVPs to Caitlin Shubick at cshubick@energyfuturecoalition.org or by phone at (202) 778-1638.

With best regards,
Reid

James O'Keefe, the face of "conservative journalism"

January 27, 2010 5:01 pm ET by Eric Boehlert

Andrew Breitbart continues with his best who's-James-O'Keefe?routine in the wake of the prankster's arrest in New Orleans, where O'Keefe and his conservative pals allegedly went undercover as telephone repairmen and were charged by federal authorities after entering Sen. Mary Landrieu's Louisiana office.

Breitbart, who championed O'Keefe's ACORN work at every chance he's had over the last four months, who's been helpingraise money for O'Keefe's previously established defense fend, who routinely holds O'Keefe up as a role model for the new type of activist "conservative journalist" that Breitbart wants to empower, and who in the past has insisted that reporters who wanted to pose questions to O'Keefe had to ask them through mentor-Breitbart, now acts like he hardly knows the guy. (RW talker Hugh Hewitt tried to help Breitbart build his wall of deniability: "HH: Did you talk to him about bugging any offices? AB: No." Priceless.)

The truth is, O'Keefe is a product --a creatures-- of the right-wing media culture that now eagerly pushes partisan propaganda as a placeholder for "journalism."

Indeed, O'Keefe was clearly star-struck by the all the right-wing media doors doors that were opened by his dubious ACORN caper, which he filmed with Hannah Giles. And O'Keefe clearly believed that more outlandish acts would help his RW media career [emphasis added]:

> The more bold you are, the more opportunities will be open to you. The less bold you are, the less opportunities in life will be open to you. The less calculated risk you take in college, the more you're going to be looking for a job.
> But the more you put yourself out there and you take those calculated risks--the contrary of what people actually think is going to happen--you're actually going to get opportunities. Especially with someone like Hannah [Giles], who is a college student in Florida, you know, everyone telling her 'Oh, don't dress up like a [explicit]. Don't do that, you're going to ruin your career.'
> Well, now she's working for Andrew Breitbart! And she's a journalist for Breitbart doing investigative journalism for the new site BigJournalism. So, I would encourage everyone to take on the challenge in college of being as assertive as you can possibly be in going after the truth.

The good news for Breitbart is he (claims) he knew nothing about O'Keefe's master plan for New Orleans, even though, yes Breitbart pays O'Keefe a salary. (Ouch.) But the idea that Breitbart, or Fox News, or the entire GOP Noise Machine, which vouched for, celebrated and encouraged O'Keefe and his shoddy brand of "journalism" for months can now turn around and say they have nothing to do with him, just doesn't compute. Why? Because O'Keefe's recent actions in New Orleans, where he treated journalism like a joke, and treating an elected Democrat like a common criminal, are in prefect sync with the ethos of today's "conservative journalism."

And make no mistake, O'Keefe views himself as a journalist:

> I focus on content more than labels. I happen to call what I do shoe leather journalism and not advocacy journalism. So, I would consider it just journalism.

"Just journalism"? See, that's the problem. It's not just journalism to dress up in a costume, go undercover, videotape people surreptitiously (esp. if local laws forbid such action), capture hidden camera footage, and then post the raw clips online or give it to Fox News to hype. It's not journalism to pretend to be somebody you're not, record people without telling them, and then hit the play button so everyone can watch.

Has 60 Minutes or 20/20 ever aired an undercover sting story that consisted of nothing more than 18 minutes of raw footage? Of course not. Journalism means putting information in context, letting 'the other side' have a say, etc. And of course it's not journalism when legitimate discrepancies arise about the videos for film makers to then refuse to release all the unedited clips. And it's not journalism to deceptively edit out exculpatory material without telling anyone.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But with the Breitbart model, wildly promoted by Fox News, none of that fairness stuff matters. Instead, vilification is the driving force and facts are optional. That, in turn leads "conservative journalists" to hatch B-movie plots to finagle their way into a senator's office and mess with her phone.

Eric Garcetti FOR MAYOR 2013

Dear Friend,

We only have two days left until our end of quarter deadline. We are grateful for all the support we have received from our donors and we have only $2,950 remaining to raise to meet our grassroots fundraising goal!

We can still be outraised and outspent by our opponents. That is why this deadline is so critical to the campaign. Soon we must buy TV ads in one of the nation's most expensive TV markets to reach the city's voters.

Please give $40 today and help us meet our grassroots goal.

We only have two days left to meet our goal. We know that the special interests are preparing to spend money in this race. Help keep this a grassroots campaign with your donation.

Donate $40 to the campaign today.

I am the progressive candidate that wants to move Los Angeles forward, but I can only do that with your help.

Thank you,

Eric

P.S. Our deadline is only two days away, please donate $40 today before it is too late!

Since you're my only contact, I need to ask you if you can help get this invite to whoever is running the transition after tomorrow. We are having our post election meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council on Nov 13 from 9:30-1:30 in our building and would like to have to the transition chair come speak to the union presidents. Flexible on time; Sweeney will host. We expect about 100 people. Thanks.

HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON
REMARKS ON COLLEGE AFFORDABILITY AND STUDENT DEBT
EXETER, NEW HAMPSHIRE
MONDAY, AUGUST 10, 2015

It's wonderful to be back in Exeter. Thank you, Danny, for that introduction. And thank you all for coming out today. I've been traveling all over New Hampshire, and everywhere I go – from Dover to Nashua to Glen to Windham – people ask great questions. It must come from being the first primary state. So today, I want to talk for just a little bit, and then I want to hear what's on your mind.

This election is about the choices we have to make as a country, and how they'll shape our children's and grandchildren's futures. I believe that, in America, if you work hard and do your part, you should be able to get ahead and stay ahead. That's the basic bargain that's always set our nation apart. And I want to make sure we keep that bargain and strengthen it, so it holds true for this generation and the next.

Thanks to your hard work – and the hard work of people across the country – America has come back from the worst recession of our lifetimes. We're standing again. But we're not yet running the way we should. Corporate profits are near record highs – but most paychecks have barely budged. Costs for everything from childcare to prescription drugs are rising faster than wages. It's no wonder so many Americans feel like the deck is stacked in favor of those at the top.

We've got to do better. We've got to get incomes rising again, so more hard-working families can afford a middle-class life. We need strong growth… fair growth… and long-term growth. That's how we'll achieve lasting prosperity – by building an economy that we all have a stake in, and that works for everyone.

If we can do that, we'll make being middle class mean something real and important again. If we can do that, we'll restore the middle class as a place where aspiration thrives, instead of a place where, too often, dreams are dashed because opportunity is out of reach. And we can start by putting one of the most important opportunities – the shot at a high quality college education – back into the hands of everyone who wants to work for it. Today, I'm announcing my plan to make college affordable and available to every American.

For millions of Americans, a college degree has been the ticket to a better life. My grandfather worked his entire life in a lace mill – but my dad made it to college and was able to start his own small business, and that made a huge difference in our lives. Then my parents scrimped and saved for years, so they could send me to a school across the country. They knew that they were setting me on the path to a better future. College still holds that promise today. A lot has changed in this country – but that hasn't.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Across America, parents who never had a chance to go to college themselves dream of that aspiration the moment their kids are born. High-schoolers – even middle-schoolers – are taking college prep courses and studying for the SAT. Full-time workers are spending time at night taking course on-line to earn certificates or badges, or going to community college at night, to increase their knowledge and skills so they can move up the job ladder, even if that means heading straight from an eight-hour shift to a pile of homework. If that's what it takes to get a better job – to give their kids better than they had – then they'll do it.

But here's the problem. States are slashing education budgets. Colleges keep raising prices. In-state tuition and fees for public colleges increased by 55 percent between 2003 and 2012. But your incomes didn't rise by that much, did they? So families are left facing a painful choice. Either you say, "We just can't afford it," and pass up on all the opportunities that a degree can offer – or you do whatever it takes to pay for it, even if that means going deeply into debt.

And while the return on investment of a college degree is still worth it over a person's lifetime, more and more, student debt is holding people back from getting a strong start. Forty million Americans have student loans. Together, they owe more than a trillion dollars. New Hampshire's students are carrying the highest debt in the country. And millions of Americans are delinquent or in default. Even if they're doing everything they can to pay their loans, they just can't keep up.

The cost of this debt is real – not just on balance sheets, but in people's lives and futures. I've talked to people who have so much student debt, they've put off buying a house, changing jobs, starting a business – even getting married. I've met parents and grandparents who've co-signed loans and end up draining their savings or ruining their credit – all because they did what parents and grandparents are supposed to do – help out the next generation.

There are students who take out loans to pay for an expensive degree from a for-profit institution – only to find little support to help them complete the degree or they graduate and discover that, when it comes to finding a job, their degree isn't worth what they thought it was.

The 40 percent of students who never finish college are left with debt and no degree to show for it – the worst of both worlds. And that non-completion rate should trouble to all of us. It's the highest in the developed world. It is time for us to show some tough love with our colleges and universities that year after year allow more of their students to fail than to graduate.

College is supposed to help people achieve their dreams. But more and more, it's pushing people's dreams further out of reach. And that's just wrong. It's a betrayal of everything college is supposed to represent – and everything families have worked so hard to achieve.

This is also about our national competitiveness. The rest of the world is working as hard as they can to out-do us. China plans to double the number of students enrolled in college by 2030, which means they'll have nearly 200 million college graduates. That's more than our entire workforce! American workers can out-work and out-innovate anyone in the world – as long as they get the training and education they need to compete.

So we need to make some big changes. We need to transform how much higher education costs – and how those costs get paid. For too long, the burden has been left to families to bear the crushing cost of soaring prices, underinvestment, and too little accountability.

It's time for a new college compact, where everyone does their part. We need to make a quality education affordable and available to everyone willing to work for it – without saddling them with decades of debt.

I've been traveling the country for months, talking to students and families, educators, legislators, and experts of every stripe – including young progressive activists who've put the issue of debt-free college and college affordability at the top of the national agenda.

And today, I'm announcing my plan to put college within reach for everyone. We're calling it the New College Compact. And we're posting it on our website, Facebook, Medium, Snapchat – just about everywhere we can think of. I hope you'll check it out. But for now, here are the basics.

Under the New College Compact, no family – and no student – will have to borrow to pay tuition at a public college.

Schools will have to control their costs and show more accountability to their students.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

States will have to meet their obligation to invest in higher education.

The federal government will make a major new investment in this promise and will never again profit off student loans.

And everyone who has student debt will be able to refinance it at lower rates.

That's my plan. It's ambitious – and we should be ambitious. But it's also achievable. And it would make a big difference in people's lives.

My College Compact comes down to two main goals.

First, we'll make sure that cost won't be a barrier.

Under my plan, students will never have to take out a loan to pay for tuition at an in-state public university to get a 4-year degree. Tuition will be affordable for every family. We will make sure the federal government and the states step up and pay the costs, so the burden doesn't fall on families alone.

But these days, tuition isn't enough. The cost of living at college has been creeping up too. So students who qualify for Pell Grants will be able to use them for living expenses and students that have to take out loans to pay for living expenses will be assured that the rates will be reduced because the federal government will no longer be allowed to profit from their student loans.

For those who go to community college, it will be free– that's President Obama's plan and we're making it ours too. If students start at a community college and then transfer to a 4-year school, we'll make sure their credits count towards a 4-year degree and the transition is seamless. We're also offering special help to college students who are parents, because when you help a parent with the supports they need to get an education, including quality child care, you're helping their kids, too through a two-generation approach to learning.

We're going to work with historically black colleges and universities, because they serve some of America's brightest students, who need the most support and too often have gotten the least of it. And we're going to help pay for college for students who agree to national service. If you're willing to tutor America's kids or clean up our parks, the least we can do is support your education.

Our second big goal is to make sure that debt won't hold anyone back.

For the millions of Americans who already have student debt, my plan will give you the chance to refinance at lower interest rates. If you can refinance your mortgage or your car loan, you should be able to refinance your student loan. It's just wrong that people are locked into college loans at 8, 9, even 10 percent.

If you do still end up taking out a loan – for example, to go to a private college or graduate school– we'll cut your interest rates, so the government never makes a profit off your loan.

We'll make it easier to enroll in income-based repayment programs, so you'll never have to pay more than 10 percent of what you make.

We're going to help borrowers who are in default get back on their feet. And we'll crack down on predatory schools and lenders and bill collectors. If you defraud students, overcharge veterans, or mislead borrowers, we're going to do everything we can to stop you.

There's a lot more in my College Compact – from encouraging innovations like online learning and apprenticeships, so students can earn their degree in less time and move straight into a job, and can refresh their skills throughout their lifetimes … to strengthening the G.I. Bill, so more of our veterans can get their degree... to making sure colleges spending federal dollars on things that benefit students, like teaching and research – not marketing campaigns or big salaries for administrators.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I plan to make college affordability a major issue in this campaign – because it's a major issue for millions of American families. Here's the bottom line. An education shouldn't be something just for those at the top. And it shouldn't be a burden. An education should be affordable – and available – to everyone.

I remember how proud my parents were when I graduated college. I remember how proud Bill and I were to see Chelsea graduate – I'll never forget how grown-up she looked that day. And even though my new granddaughter is already growing up faster than I'd like, I can't wait to see her walk across a stage someday and receive her diploma. And I know that mothers and fathers and grandparents across the country feel the exact same way.

I want every young person in America to have their shot at that moment. I want every hard-working parent out there to get the chance to see his or her child cross a stage – or to cross it themselves. America should be a place where those achievements are possible for anyone who's willing to work hard to do their part. That's the country I want to help build – for this generation and all the generations to come.

Thank you very much. And now, let's hear from you.

I think Jim's expansion risks sounding like an entitlement program too much.

I think we have to make our language true to the core of her plan and who she is in demanding responsibility and accountability from everyone participating and wanting to participate in the college system.

I don't think it's bad at all to say where Everyone does their part.
Compact works because it demands things from multiple place and echoing language of basic bargain still feels right here.
And this isn't an entitlement so I think the affordable for everyone willing to work for it gets at responsibility - which I think is a substantive difference implicitly with Sanders and pushing against "free".

America should be a place where those achievements are possible for anyone who's willing to work hard to do their part. That's the country I want to help build – for this generation and all the generations to come.

Thank you very much. And now, let's hear from you.

SJD - IAH - DCA
Departs SJD at 2:16 pm (30 mins later than your current itinerary)
Layover at IAH is 1 hr 20 mins
Arrives DCA at 11:05 pm (30 mins earlier than your current itinerary gets you into IAD)
Seats look great; 37.5k per person, just like your current return

Thoughts on switching to a comparable, and slightly better timed DCA itinerary, or would you rather keep the IAD itinerary?

And I hope you at least savored the look of 2 million miles before you made the purchase! So cool.

Hi Sara,

I am sorry I missed you on my last trip to HQ. I looked for you after my meeting with the Sara, Vivek and others on the tech team, but you weren't at your desk. Next time!

So everybody is really looking forward to our event tomorrow in the Bay area with John. Carrie and I are so glad he will be there.

I was hoping you could tell John for me (I don't have his email) that very sadly, I have had a longstanding commitment to be in DC. The organization I chair, Mobile Future, has our annual event to honor this year's winners of our national Mobileys competition, which honors the bests social impact mobile innovations in the nation, and I am the Master of Ceremonies. So I absolutely have to be in Washington. Really Bummed.

Please tell John I am incredibly grateful he is making the effort and taking the time to join us. We are so glad to host him, and intro him to a great group of Bay area supporters, friends, policy and political thought leaders, activists, and tech/innovation leaders.

If it is at all helpful for John, I drafted these tech/innovation surrogate talking points below which I think will work well for our event. I wrote them with John in mind after he headlined his last Bay area event with Ann O'Leary and Steph Hannon, who asked me to help them come up with a more concise tech/innovation messaging framework for surrogate like them to use. Please tell John he should feel free to use them.

Also, any reference he can make to the recent infrastructure/universal broadband access policy goals of providing universal broadband access to all Americans by 2020 would go over extremely well with this crowd...

Last, I also think he should take a quick look at the attached the op-ed I wrote for Re/Code rebutting/ redirecting the criticisms on the email server issue. At the Silicon Valley event, he got a bunch of nasty questions on this...

Again, I am sad I can't be there. But I know John will do a spectacular job.. and so will Carrie in intro'ing him! BTW -- the CA finance team, including Lindsay Lassman and Lindsay Reitman, have been a HUGE pleasure to work with. They are real pros!

I send you my best. We miss you.

Joe Eyer will be coming too, (he also worked with us at the Clinton white house, and later with me and Whouley and Charlie Baker at Dewey Square). On the young people and families point, we did ask about this in our Pittsburgh groups last week with the youngest of the groups (17-24), and they were embracing of the word. They had a very expansive definition of family, going beyond blood relatives, but they all were accepting of the word and felt it applied to them. Nobody said they felt single/individual, or that they felt left out from the "families."

Two things which may seem inconsistent: First graph, use and placement of everyday Americans seems forced and political. Second, are we overusing families to the exclusion of people, particulary young people, who see themselves on their own. Rest seems fine to me.

People have fought their way back from tough economic times but the deck is still stacked for those at the top. I'm running because families and everyday Americans need a champion and I want to be that champion. When our families are strong, America's strong.

Its not enough that CEOs are raking in record profits, your family needs to be able to get ahead too. People need to have a little more so you can worry a little less.

Now, I know its not going to be easy. We face some pretty powerful forces. But I've spent my whole life fighting for children, for families, standing up for America. I think people know that I don't quit.

For me, it isn't enough for American families to just get by, you deserve to get ahead and stay ahead. It's your time.

I think this is worth spending some time on here. I think there are some nuances that are important as well some big things --- like their aspiration for a sense of "financial freedom" that ladders up a bit to bigger goals i.e. getting ahead along is not enough – they want to get ahead and stay ahead. I know Jim hates "last prosperity" but after years of feeling that their gains were impermanent and there was no solid footing they seem to be reaching for more. .

Most important things to look at are Q 5 ,6 on optimism/pessimism and more confidence than anxiety.

Battery on factors for M.C. life that is on p. 15-16 with summary table on 17. – Focus on p. 15 and top 5 items – all are over 49% on 7s and 71+ on 6+7; then next tier down which are at 43+ and 60+.

Econ attitudes on page 21 – Not that top 6 items have a focus on the future for most part and may steer towards sounding a little bigger and less incremental – there is an aspiration here for "financial freedom" that lets them look ahead a little more. – Not the last item in battery on p. 57 is that they have low optimism for next generation but batter on page 15 makes clear that being able to give your child choices about their future is an extremely important factor in middle class life.

See you shortly.

Subject:	Agenda for Thursday Meeting

All,

We have a meeting scheduled on Thursday to discuss next steps on Bernie Sanders and the Republicans. Tony will be sending around the Sanders research later today. While we will do a brief summary at the top of the meeting, we'd like for everyone to come having reviewed the material and ready to discuss which hits and themes we want to deploy. On the Republicans, we are still working on the research, but wanted to have a conversation based on the current state of the race--defining our short-term objectives before we have oppo and opinion research. See below for an agenda--and let us know if you have any questions.

Sanders Agenda:

Review of top hits

Discussion of how we'd like to frame Bernie

Top stories we need to land

Campaign stance on hitting Bernie/tone

Tactics for deploying research

Republican Agenda:

Priority targets

Goals for message and framing: who do we want to lift up, who should we try to push down

Tactics on attacks: what should go through HRC, surrogates, DNC, CTR

Framing around the next debate

I just got out of a meeting with Ali and the rest of the team.

Why? Because next week, we're going to go out with another round of ads in our targeted races all across the country.

The poll released yesterday means that with this momentum, Democrats have hope of not getting their agenda decimated by Speaker Boehner and his Tea Party. But only if we expand our TV buy before midnight tonight. The only way to do that is if our grassroots supporters help us raise $10,004 before midnight to expand the buy.

ORGANIZING for ACTION

John --

As we get Organizing for Action off the ground, we have a lot of decisions to make about how we structure ourselves and how we take action.

Those are decisions that supporters like you, who've been so important in building this movement, should make. In the next few weeks, volunteers in your neighborhood are hosting an Action Planning Session -- and you should be there.

This is your chance to get in on the ground floor of planning what OFA will do over the next few months.

Here are the details -- can you make it?

What: Action Planning Session

RSVP NOW

You'll be able to sit down with neighbors and help lay the foundation for your prospective OFA activities -- organizers will provide materials to guide the conversation, but they'll be turning over the brainstorming, creative thinking, and ambitious planning to you.

Whether you've been a part of the local grassroots movement in your community for years or you're just getting involved now, you have something to contribute to the conversation. Don't miss out on this opportunity to have a say in what happens next.

RSVP now for the Action Planning Session near you:

http://my.barackobama.com/Action-Planning-Session

Thanks,

Sara

Backbone Campaign

Thank you Friend,

The Backbone Campaign has been your community-supported voice for a sustainable and humane world for nearly 13 years. We continually strive to express your creativity, values and vision and be a vehicle for manifesting the world you long to see.

Now, we need your help to channel all the inspiring actions, the invigorated passion of change agents new and old, and the lessons learned into new victories.

Our bold, cutting edge work is hard to fund and Backbone needs to grow beyond our tiny 2 1/2 staff. In order to remain nimble, able to take initiative when opportunity presents itself, and provide generous support to causes you care about, we need you and your friends to re-commit. Stand with Backbone Campaign ALL year long by joining the Lumbar Club.

Our Lumbar Club Angels give from $5-200 a month to keep Backbone standing tall and working hard. Please take this opportunity to make sure you are part of that important Club. Become a Lumbar Angel TODAY!

Be Part of The Bold Action from Kayaktivism to the TPP

You gave us the capacity to:

- Train 400+ people to take direct action on the water to stop Shell
- Organize 14+ powerful Kayaktivist actions that earned international headlines.
- Confront one of the world's most powerful oil corporations and WIN
- Inspire Kayaktivism across country and planet
- Design and deploy imagery for the DC World Rising Week of Action against the TPP

Invest in Visionary Solution-Oriented Organizing Like Solutionary Rail

Your shared our vision to:

- Give our movement a "YES!" in a world of "NOs"
- Expand Alliances amongst Workers (RWU), environmentalists, and Rural Power Cooperatives
- Publish the Solutionary Rail Book Coming Soon!

Per your request, attached is a memorandum outlining a possible unifying approach for the Administration when it comes to climate (TS may have sent you this doc last night -- but believe he may have sent a slightly earlier draft so please use this one)... Please note that the specific material requested (a range of so-called "frames") is found on pages 6-7 and written so as one could just cut and paste and lift out... In addition, the document seeks to provide some strategic thinking on the politics of climate informed by our experiences to date... and, finally, at the back end, we provided a possible model of how the effort could be organized within the Administration based on a calendar that factors in various external events (which we also discussed last week)... We hope this is helpful and stand ready to support whatever you may need... Break a leg (or a hand, as the case may be) tonight...

I know your inbox is overflowing with emails like these, but please take 30 seconds to read this:

-- the election is 7 days away
-- Republicans are spending $8 million to defeat Brad
-- and every piece of data shows his race deadlocked with Bob Dold

John, Brad has been a mentor and friend to me since we first got down to Washington. He's an example of the very best in public service -- someone who puts the people back home first and doesn't let partisanship get in the way of progress.

I refuse to see someone like Brad fall to GOP special interests because we didn't do enough when we had the chance.

So I'm asking: Will you join me in supporting Brad's progressive campaign for Illinois?

Torture Needs to Be Illegal

It's not enough for presidents just to make promises.

By DANIEL BENJAMIN

December 22, 2014

Could the clash over the Senate Intelligence Committee's Study on the CIA's Detention and Interrogation Program have gone any more dismally? The fracas deepened divisions and reopened old wounds without advancing one whit the national debate over the use of torture as an instrument against terrorism. With Democratic senators demanding CIA Director John Brennan's resignation and Republicans lawmakers and former CIA chiefs decrying the tome as a partisan witch-hunt against a program that, they contend, saved American lives, a national consensus on the subject appears more elusive than ever.

The damage, however, was not just to the public discourse: It threatens to significantly weaken our long-term counterterrorism efforts and, by extension, our national security. That's because, despite the public image propagated by Zero Dark Thirty and other depictions, counterterrorism is not just about stealthy helicopter raids and turning hardened militants into intelligence sources.

Indeed, because in policy circles it is widely accepted that we "cannot shoot our way out of" the terrorism challenge, reforms in societies that produce large numbers of jihadists has become a central goal of American policy. At the forefront of this effort to blunt drivers of radicalization has been the work to press other countries to abandon the repressive practices such as indefinite incarceration, unrestricted police authorities and torture.

Although debate about the factors that cause violent extremism continues, no one disputes that jihadism was born in grim prisons and torture chambers in such places as Gamal Abdel Nasser's Egypt and Hafez al-Assad's Syria and that many of its soldiers joined up because they were abused by the governments in their own nations. Many more of its supporters are motivated by solidarity with those who have been abused and by their hatred of the repressive "apostate" regimes that carried out these acts.

Thus, it is not just that US hypocrisy has been on display in the last week, undermining this broad-based effort. More damagingly, we have not persuaded partners around the world that this episode was an aberration borne of extreme circumstances that is now in our past. To do that, the United States must quickly legislate clear prohibitions on the "enhanced interrogation techniques" that have caused so much controversy.
Because US efforts to get countries out of the business of abusing human rights involve diplomacy, training of foreign partners and financial support , not Special Ops raids or cloak and dagger work, they get little attention. For most journalists, these are MEGO (Mine Eyes Glazeth Over) stories. But these far-reaching initiatives involve not just the State Department but also Defense Department, the CIA and others, and their goals are central to much of what the US government does in regions beset by terrorism.

A few examples: US efforts to build counterterrorism capacity with partner countries routinely integrate human rights training. When the State Department funds an Anti-Terrorism Assistance program, it regularly incorporates materials on human rights compliance in its courses for the other country's forces.

Whether the US is training civilian forces or military ones, "Leahy Vetting," an audit of the human rights record of units to be trained named for its architect Vermont Senator Patrick Leahy, is necessary. Frequently, the US withholds funding for these programs when a partner country refuses to clean up its act, as has been the case for example in Nigeria, where that country's refusal to restrain its often brutal military has led many Muslims in the north to join or support Boko Haram. "Leahy issues" may not always lead countries to comply rapidly with US demands, but they create a framework and incentives for going forward.

Promoting a rule-of-law approach has led to dramatic results in some countries. In Indonesia, for example, US and Australian efforts to train high-end police coupled with intensive legal reforms has produced remarkable improvements. A country that little over a decade ago quaked from the terrorist attacks has become vastly more competent at thwarted attacks, investigating those that do occur and conducting terrorism trials for those apprehended. Consequently, Indonesia has had sustained, broad-based success its jihadist enemies.

During the Obama administration, the effort to move partners toward rule-of-law policies has deepened substantially. In June, the International Institute for Justice opened its doors in Valetta, Malta, to provide human-rights compliant police and legal training for countries interested in more effective counterterrorism policies. This new academy was the result of an initiative by the US-backed Global Counterterrorism Forum, which has sought broader adherence to rule-of-law practices since the US led the effort to establish it in 2011.

All this work will be put at risk if America's position on torture does not move beyond where it is now. With retired top CIA officials insisting that enhanced interrogations worked—and by implication were appropriate—and former Vice President Cheney repeating incessantly that he would authorize again such programs, other countries may wonder if America will practice what it preaches. (The fact that torture was outlawed because of its moral repugnance, not its uncertain efficacy, seems to have been lost in the discussion; by making it a central issue, the Senate investigators blundered badly.)

A question mark hangs over the issue of whether the United States will again use the harsh interrogation practices it did from 2002 to 2007. CIA Director John Brennan, with whom I worked closely as coordinator for counterterrorism at the State Department (2009-2012) and who I respect greatly, can likely not imagine a return to the enhanced interrogation techniques of the past. But when he said at his December 11 press conference that he, as an intelligence chief, would "defer to the policymakers in future times when there is going to be the need to be able to ensure that this country stays safe if we face a similar type of crisis," he reminded us, perhaps unintentionally, that the safeguards against a recurrence are weak.

In truth, the only barrier today is President Obama's January 2009 Executive Order Ensuring Lawful Interrogations. Of course, executive orders can be rescinded at a moment's notice, and a successor to President Obama will do as he or she pleases in this area. Yes, the Torture Act and the UN Convention Against Torture criminalize torture, but so long as government lawyers define specific acts as being something other than torture, a White House can do what it wants.

Given humanity's boundless ability to innovate new ways to inflict pain, there may be no foolproof way to prevent future US governments from employing torture. But an essential step now is to enact legislation specifically banning such practices as waterboarding, "walling," extreme sleep deprivation and the like. Only that will prevent future presidents from repeating the mistakes of the Bush Administration.

Legislation of this kind is the minimum for restoring US credibility as it seeks to promote human-rights compliant policies. Those who question whether our credibility is frayed should consider the riposte last Friday from the Kenyan leadership after US officials criticized that country's new counterterrorism law. A statement on the president's website—the same president who had been indicted by the International Criminal Court—declared, "[O]ur law is better than the American Patriot and Homeland security Acts that give rogue powers to security agencies. In the US, FBI and intelligence officers have a carte blanche in the fight against terrorism and biological warfare, but our law has provided checks by courts of law. What is more, Kenya has no Guantanamo Bay!"

New legislation is also critical for maintaining the counterterrorism partnerships we have with others around the world—relationships that are essential for thwarting imminent plots as well as for achieving long-term change. The US does many things to advance its interests that arouse emotions ranging from concern to hatred around the world. These practices, which include the use of drones and aggressive surveillance, are justifiable in my view, but if they are seen as being part of package with torture, America's ability to sustain them and preserve its partnerships will be undercut.

The Obama administration has sought to avoid partisan warfare over its predecessor's misdeeds in detention and interrogation. That may be smart politics. But leaving open in the minds of allies and partners around the world that we may torture again is too big a price—for U.S. leadership and for effective counterterrorism policy—for this kind of political benefit.

BY JAMES HOHMANN

THE BIG IDEA:

NASHVILLE—Ted Cruz refrains from publicly attacking his GOP rivals in the presidential race, most notably Donald Trump, invoking the 11th commandment to not speak ill of other Republicans.

His father Rafael, an ordained minister who keeps an aggressive travel schedule speaking to conservative groups, apparently does not feel quite the same way. And it was Rafael who spoke to the National Federation of Republican Assemblies here Sunday, the morning after their convention voted to recommend its members support Ted's campaign. (Harry Reid's 2010 challenger, Sharron Angle, is the organization's president).

In a 45-minute talk, the 76-year-old criticized his son's leading rivals for inconsistencies on immigration, abortion and education. He decried the Supreme Court for "calling homosexuality a civil right," accused the Republican Party of "relegating God to the basement" for the sake of "inclusion," and defended Ted against questions from conservative birthers.

"The battle is not November of 2016. The battle is the primary," Cruz said during a prayer breakfast, conveying apologies from his son that he was not able to make it. "Stop listening to their rhetoric and start looking at their record. Jesus put it this way: You shall know them by their fruit. It's about time we do some fruit checking."

Cruz senior, wearing a pinstripe suit and raising his hand in praise as the crowd sang "Amazing Grace," zeroed in on the 10 Republicans who appeared on the main stage for the Fox News debate.

"I personally know there were at least three on that stage that, even though they tell you they're against amnesty, they've been promoting amnesty for years," he said, not naming names. "There were at least three on that stage that say they're against Common Core, but they've been promoting Common Core for years and years and years. They tell you they're pro-life. One of them, I've seen a video of this candidate where he starts by saying, 'I'm pro-life but the decision is between a woman and her doctor.' If the decision is 'between a woman and her doctor,' you are pro-abortion. You're not pro-life."

That last point is an unmistakable knock on Scott Walker for his campaign ad last fall, aired in Wisconsin during a tough reelection race, defending a law that required mandatory ultrasounds before women could obtain abortions. Walker recently defended the spot, saying he was only making the point that the bill ultimately left the decision to a woman and her doctor.

During the run-up to the primaries, as Sen. Cruz makes a hard play for evangelicals, his dad is an asset. He has spoken at more than 100 pastors' conferences over the past two years. The native of Cuba (who fought for Fidel Castro in his youth) recounts his own inspiring personal story about finding Christ, defeating alcoholism and returning to his wife and son after abandoning them. He will publish a book by the end of this year on the role that pastors played in the American Revolution. "The Bible is quite clear on who we have to elect," he said Sunday.

But during a general election, Cruz senior's history of bombastic rhetoric could become a serious liability.

Cruz senior complained that 38 million evangelicals sat out the 2012 presidential election. "We get what we deserve," he said. "Don't come with these platitudes that God put Obama in power. God didn't put Obama in power — we the church did that by sitting on our rear ends in our pews singing Alleluia."

Rafael sounded like a public figure from a bygone era as he attacked the June Supreme Court decision on gay marriage. "I think the Devil overplayed his hand this time," he said. "They're calling homosexuality a civil right. The next obvious step is that they're going to come to your church and demand to be hired!"

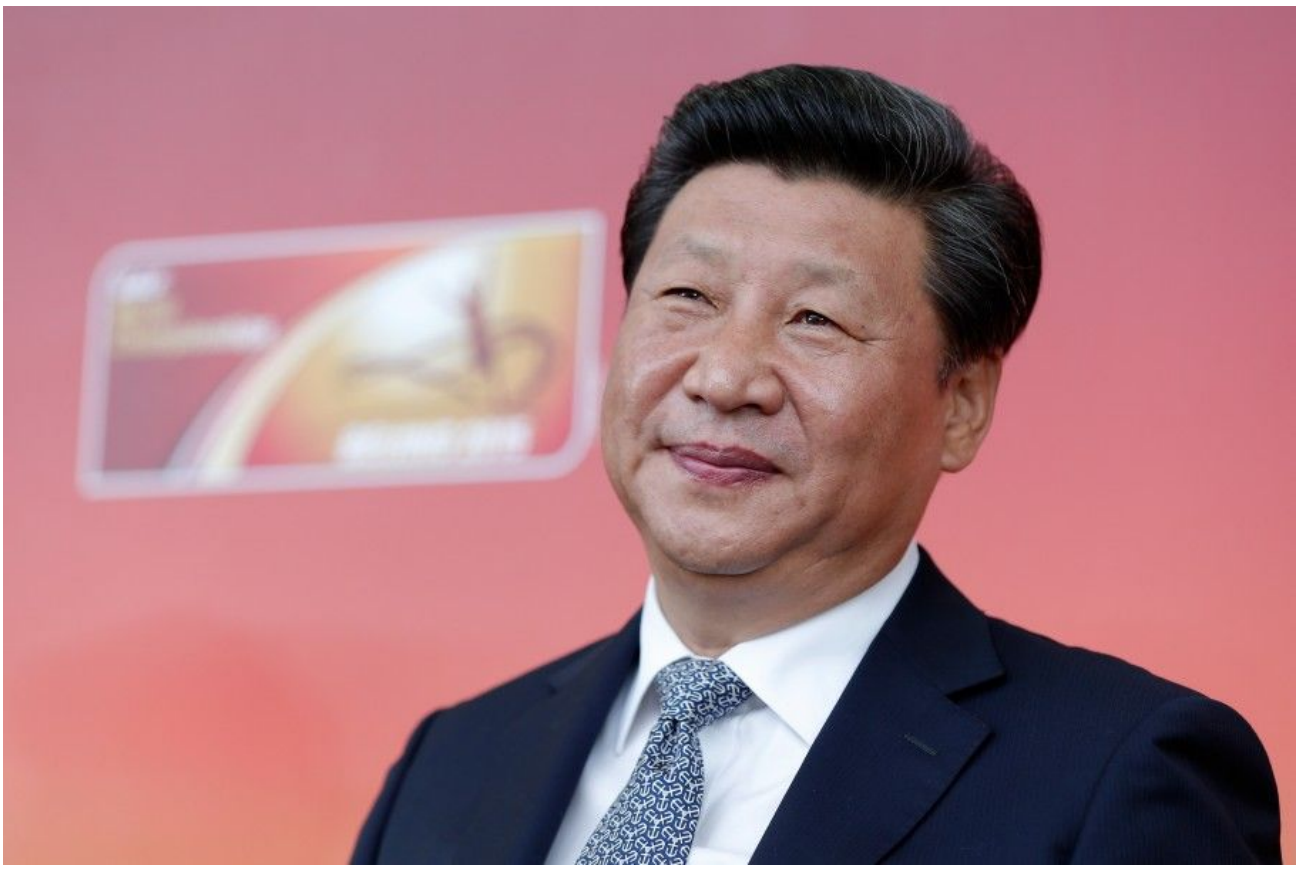

After blaming a 1962 Supreme Court decision banning prayer in public schools for leading to skyrocketing teen pregnancy and violent crime the following year, he predicted that the same-sex marriage ruling has been a "catalyst" for social conservatives. "It's becoming the spark to wake up the sleeping giant," he said.

— The U.S. government is working on a package of "unprecedented" economic sanctions aimed at Chinese companies and individuals in retaliation for cybertheft of state secrets, according to the Post's Ellen Nakashima (her story is leading the front page). Although the government hasn't decided whether to implement them, the "final call" will be made in the next two weeks. It would represent a "significant expansion" of the public response to what officials say is theft of "everything from nuclear power plant designs to search engine source code to confidential negotiating positions of energy companies." The sanctions could come at a "particularly sensitive" time for both countries as Chinese President Xi Jinping is scheduled to visit Washington next month on an official state visit.

— China and Russia are aggressively capitalizing on recent hacks to target U.S. spies. The Los Angeles Times this morning quotes American officials accusing the two governments of "aggregating and cross-indexing hacked U.S. computer databases — including security clearance applications, airline records and medical insurance forms — to identify U.S. intelligence officers and agents." Three alarming nuggets from the story:

- "At least one clandestine network of American engineers and scientists who provide technical assistance to U.S. undercover operatives and agents overseas has been compromised as a result, according to two U.S. officials."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- "U.S. intelligence officials have seen evidence that China's Ministry of State Security has combined medical data snatched in January from health insurance giant Anthem [records on 80 million people!], passenger records stripped from United Airlines servers in May and the OPM security clearance files."
- "According to U.S. officials, Russian hackers linked to the Kremlin infiltrated the State Department's unclassified email system for several months last fall. Russian hackers also stole gigabytes of customer data from several U.S. banks and financial companies, including JPMorgan Chase & Co., last year."

— Scott Walker attacks Jeb Bush as soft on Iran in a fresh web video. The 60-second video is built around a clip of the former Florida governor saying that he's not going to rip up the Iran nuclear agreement on his first day in office. Then Walker is shown promising that he will rip it up on day one. "Unlike others, I don't need months or years to mull this over," he says. Watch here .

Hamas is officially on the outs with Iran — and has been for several years. Whether a newly ascendant Iran, flush with petrodollars and free from economic sanctions, would bring Hamas back into its orbit as a client sub-state is one of the great unanswered questions bedeviling military analysts and intelligence agencies in the Middle East."

He stuck out by carrying a briefcase on campus while most students toted books under their arms."

— The Economist, "Horrific tragedy reinforces Europe's escalating migration crisis:" "On August 28th, Austrian police said they had found 71 dead migrants in a refrigerated lorry…Beyond its immediate horror, the discovery highlights two worrying developments in Europe's migrant crisis. The first is the increasing sophistication of people-smuggling organisations within Europe…A second, related development is the use of private vehicles to circumvent police and border officials who have stepped up their checks of buses and trains along well-trodden migration routes…Both developments stem from the same problem that leads to migrants being tear-gassed at Greece's border with Macedonia, or occupying filthy camps in Calais: the clash between the wish of many asylum-seekers to reach particular parts of Europe and governments' jealous preservation of their own national migration and asylum policies."

> OVERVIEW OF CPRIT SCANDAL
> In 2007, the Texas Legislature passed a law calling on the state of Texas to create the Cancer Prevention Research Institute of Texas (CPRIT). Backed with $3 billion in taxpayer-approved bonds, CPRIT is the second-largest distributor of cancer research funding in the country. Yet a series of investigative reports by the Dallas Morning News and Houston Chronicle have shown that Texas Governor Rick Perry and Lieutenant Governor David Dewhurst's CPRIT appointees have directed taxpayer funds to Perry & Dewhurst donors. In the process, CPRIT ignored required scientific review and grant approval processes, which led to Nobel laureates and many of the CPRIT scientists - including the chief scientific adviser - resigning. Just this week the Executive Director of CPRIT resigned.
> The biggest bombshell broke when it was discovered that an $11 million grant from CPRIT was awarded without review to a company whose top donor, Peter O'Donnell, has contributed over $579,000 to Perry, Dewhurst, and Texas Attorney General Greg Abbott. Abbott is a potential successor to Governor Perry and has announced his office will investigate CPRIT, even though Abbott sits on CPRIT's oversight agency. The donor, O'Donnell, also contributed $1.6 million to CPRIT's Foundation from 2009 to 2011, which supplements the staff salaries of CPRIT's key decision makers.
> Weeks ago, as stories of the controversy first broke, Progress Texas PAC called for an independent investigation by the Texas Public Integrity Unit into the mismanagement of funds at CPRIT. Yesterday, the Public Integrity Unit announced they will be investigation the situation, creating an independent examination into the CPRIT controversy. Additionally, Progress Texas has launched a petition calling for an end to Perry's "Corporate Gifts" funds, including CPRIT, which has gathered over 4,500 signatures to date.

Texas Prosecutors Open Criminal Investigation into Cancer Prevention Research Institute of Texas

"It is a growing scandal that could forever change Texas politics"

(TEXAS) – Republican Gov. Rick Perry and his cronies in and out of public office have diverted funds intended for cutting-edge cancer research into the campaign pockets of Perry and Lt. Gov. David Dewhurst. Proceeds from millions in taxpayer-backed bonds awarded by the Cancer Prevention Research Institute of Texas (CPRIT) have been misappropriated and misused to institute a policy of political payback instead of working in the best interest of Texans and science.

"It's essential that any destruction of evidence and other obstructions to the investigation be halted," said Glenn Smith the Director of the Progress Texas PAC.

Acting on a complaint filed by Progress Texas PAC, Texas prosecutors in Austin on Tuesday opened a criminal investigation. Smith praised the action and said, "An immediate, independent investigation is absolutely necessary."

Smith added, "It is a growing scandal that could forever change Texas politics. As national political players look toward turning red Texas blue, something that would put the Electoral College out of Republicans' reach for years, many see the scandal as the beginning of the end of GOP dominance in Texas."

John --

Amazing: We've already surpassed our goal of reaching 25,000 donations this week for the By the People Fund.

But we need to raise the bar. Fox News' parent company, News Corp., just handed over a seven-figure check to Republicans to help beat Democrats across the country this fall.

When a supposed news organization jumps into the 2010 elections with a huge donation like this, I take it as a direct challenge to this movement. These conservative special interests seem to think they can buy their way into power.

We've bumped up our goal to 40,000 donations by midnight tonight -- that means we need 122 more donations from Washington.

Can you donate $3 or more today?

Subject: 235 donations from Washington

Friend --

Powerful special interests are pledging to spend $200 million to help elect conservatives this fall.

But President Obama has advocated for a different kind of politics since he launched his campaign, and it's because of supporters like you that we've never let special interests buy their way to victory.

This November, it's the same game plan. Instead of asking for checks from PACs and lobbyists, we're counting on 3 million grassroots donations to elect strong allies for President Obama.

We need just 25,000 donations this week to be on track to meet that goal -- and are counting on 235 donations from Washington.

Can you donate $3 today and add your name to the By the People Fund?

Organizing for America supporters like you set this movement apart -- and together, we're changing politics.

With your help, we're going to run a real, grassroots, on-the-ground campaign to win in November -- knocking on doors, making calls, and talking to neighbors in every single state.

As we saw in 2008, no amount of special-interest money can compete with that.

Please donate $3 or more today:

3 Vulnerabilities in Obama's Strategy to Fight ISIS–and How to Address Them

By Brian Katulis

More debate is urgently needed about President Barack Obama 's evolving strategy to defeat the Islamic State in Iraq and al-Sham, or ISIS. If the vulnerabilities in Mr. Obama's strategy are not addressed, they could inflame a bad situation and, ultimately, the ripple effects could wreck the rest of Mr. Obama's national-security agenda.

The president's strategy has three components. In Syria, the policy is a reinvigorated effort to support third-way opposition forces to counter ISIS while also fighting Bashar al-Assad. In Iraq, the plan is to continue security assistance to Iraqi leaders, based on steps toward building a more inclusive government, while conducting targeted airstrikes against ISIS. The third plank is building a regional and international coalition to counter ISIS on multiple fronts: military strikes, support to various actors fighting the militants on the ground, targeted intelligence operations, and counter-propaganda efforts. Taken together, the components add up to a major strategic shift (in contrast to the president's actions earlier this summer in Iraq).

Mr. Obama's strategy places a premium on partnership and getting others to pull their weight, and it wisely seeks to avoid a costly military engagement involving ground troops. Few have offered better alternatives.

But each component of the president's approach has major vulnerabilities.

The weakest plank remains U.S. policy on Syria, which still does not form a coherent strategy. The administration has yet to define a longer-term framework for the likely end state in Syria, one that can produce a sustainable political agreement ending the conflict. This is critical. Even ramped-up efforts to support Syria's beleaguered opposition will take time , and implementation will be tough given those forces' internal divisions and weak capacity. Without viable ground forces to help target possible airstrikes and conduct follow-up operations–as has been done in areas of Iraq–it will be difficult to define metrics for impact and success .

The strategy's strongest components are those that apply to Iraq–which is saying a lot because the pathway forward in Iraq is by no means clear. The approach leans heavily on getting Iraqi leaders to produce a more politically inclusive government, one that addresses the grievances of Iraq's minority Sunnis. This sounds good–but the experiences of the past 10 years suggest, unfortunately, that this may be wishful thinking. It is encouraging that Nouri al-Maliki stepped down as prime minister and that political negotiations continue, but recent challenges filling key defense and interior posts in the new government underscore the difficulties ahead. And that doesn't include the potential challenges in reforming Iraq's security services.

The Obama administration should continue pressing for greater inclusiveness in Iraq and a more unified national response to ISIS, but it should also have a team sketching out alternatives. The U.S. should know by now that things don't always work out as planned in Iraq–and we should anticipate Iraqis operating on their own timetable.

The third strategic component–efforts to build a coalition–is key: If successful, it could demonstrate that this is a shared battle against extremists by more pragmatic forces in the region. Early assessments of the likely partners point to some significant challenges in the coalition's ability to produce tangible impact. The Middle East is riven by not only Shiite-Sunni divisions between regional heavyweights Iran and Saudi Arabia but also by divides among Sunni-majority states such as Turkey and Qatar on the one hand and the United Arab Emirates and Saudi Arabia on the other. This regional Cold War has been playing out in Egypt and Libya among other places.

President Obama has taken a good step in appointing John Allen , the retired four-star Marine general, as his envoy to the global coalition, and Gen. Allen has a strong deputy in Ambassador Brett McGurk , who knows Iraq well. Unlike in 1991, when an international coalition was built to expel Iraqi forces from Kuwait, this conflict is more multifaceted. In addition to the regional divisions, there are capacity gaps among key coalition members.

Fighting ISIS will require dexterity and complicated action on multiple fronts. Moving efficiently and responding to changing dynamics is a challenge for any administration, especially one led by a president who is wisely deliberative and cautious. The U.S. will need to play a central quarterback role in the nascent coalition, which will require the White House to trust and empower its team to implement the game plan without too much micromanagement. There are advantages to the Obama administration's distaste for rash moves. But sometimes its interagency process can be sluggish.

If the Obama team doesn't move swiftly to address such vulnerabilities as the lack of trust between coalition partners and streamline its mode for implementing policy, its approach could inflame regional tensions. How the administration implements this strategic shift in its approach to the Middle East has consequences for the region and America's role in the world.

The challenges inherent in executing this complicated strategy underscore the problem with Congress's truncated debate on Mr. Obama's strategy to fight ISIS. It's not enough for America to discuss aid for Syria's rebels . We need a broader debate about how all the pieces of Mr. Obama's strategy fit together.

Subject:	The Metropolitan Revolution has arrived!
Attachments:	Metro Revolution E-Galley.pdf

Dear Neera and John,

The Metropolitan Revolution has arrived – at least in electronic form.

As you know, Jennifer Bradley and I spent the last year writing a book about the work of metropolitan leaders who are grappling with major economic and social challenges in the absence of federal leadership. These leaders understand the harsh reality of our times: cities and metropolitan areas are, for the most part, on their own. Our book, The Metropolitan Revolution, available on Monday, June 17th, documents the good news: mayors, educators, philanthropists, and business and community leaders are doing the hard work to grow more jobs and make their regions prosperous. In places as diverse as Denver, Houston, Cleveland and New York, they are investing in transformative infrastructure, making manufacturing a priority, linking small businesses to global markets, and training workers for the skills they need.

One of the book's goals is to raise the profile of these success stories and innovators, share their lessons, and inspire change. Given our mutual goals of catalyzing action across the country, we hope that you will help us spread the word about the book and, more importantly, the ideas of city- and metro-led solutions.

First, would you forward an email to your friends and colleagues so that they can learn more about the ambitious metro innovations underway in the country? A sample email is provided below.

Second, would you mention the book via your social media channels?

Third, would you consider purchasing the book for your organization's leaders and staff, at a discounted rate?

I have attached the e- galley of The Metropolitan Revolution and am eager to hear your thoughts. We will send you a complimentary copy once it is published.

I've copied Karen Slachetka, who can help answer any questions and provide more information. Karen will also send you the updated links in advance of the book launch.

Thank you for your continued support of the Metro Program's work, and I look forward to working with you in the future.

Best,

Bruce

Dear [First Name]:

I just read a compelling new book I think you will want to read. The Metropolitan Revolution, by Bruce Katz and Jennifer Bradley of the Brookings Metropolitan Policy Program, chronicles the successes of metro leaders across the country who face major economic and social challenges and recognize that Washington is not coming to their rescue.

Katz and Bradley share the good news: mayors, educators, philanthropists, and business and community leaders are doing the hard work to grow more jobs and make their regions prosperous. In places as diverse as Denver, Houston, Cleveland and New York, they are investing in infrastructure, making manufacturing a priority, linking small businesses to global markets, and training workers for the skills they need. The Metropolitan Revolution documents how this is happening and how anyone who cares about their community can participate.

The Metropolitan Revolution profiles these success stories, shares their lessons, and catalyzes action. Metro innovations are contagious and I believe that, after reading this book, you will find new ways to shape the future of cities.

You can buy the book or e-book here ;

- Download the I-Pad app , which contains original interactive content and multimedia;
- And, if you are as excited about this as I am, you can use social media to spread the word and share the book with your own networks.

I hope you'll read the book and look forward to hearing what you think.

Hi John-

Here's the intel on what's coming for each of these meetings. The only final paper as of now is the attached debate prep PPT. Jen and Oren will both send us their memos when they're finalized.

This is all the information that the secretary is getting in her book tonight.

One flag: Jake and Comms are currently working on a memo for HRC to describe the developing issues with Wall Street folks (aka Perry's group). I'm going to ask Jake to call you tonight to download on it in light of your AM meeting with him. I'll also make sure you get any paper that comes out of their conversations. They may ask you to do a round table with Perry's folks with Jake and Gary Gensler later this week. I will keep you posted.

Thanks,
Milia

PROPOSED MEDIA PLAN – JULY THROUGH SEPTEMBER

Press Engagement Theory: Our goals are to 1) increase overall visibility and ability to make our case; 2) engage with outlets watched by primary voters and coalition voters; 3) cultivate serious print reporters and columnists; 4) use non-traditional outlets that will showcase HRC's personality.

- Goal of one HRC national press interaction once a week.
- Ongoing interaction with locals.
- Focus on serious print reporters and columnists.
- Begin non-traditional interviews - Daily Show, Skimm &digital platforms (need to add).

I would include President Clinton's name in the last paragraph of the first email. My one concern is by saying we used the salary review to "determine" their 2012 salaries are we leaving them with the false impression that we have corrected all inequities. Would it be better to say that the salary review was "taken into consideration" in setting their 2012 salaries?

Bruce and John:

In our call last week, we discussed 2 communications for employees:

(1) an email from Bruce on the total compensation benchmarking that was conducted this year to confirm to employees that we had conducted a formal benchmarking process on salaries this year as we had previously represented, and that the information was used to determine 2012 salary amounts; and to set the stage for the 2012 detailed benefits benchmarking and any resulting design changes; and

(2) the employee letter confirming his/her individual bonus amount.

Below please find the draft of (1) and attached is the draft of (2). Please let me know your comments. We would like to finalize the bonus letter today so we can begin production of the letters in time for a Monday, Dec. 19th distribution. The target distribution date for the total compensation email from Bruce is Monday, Dec. 19th (subject to any further discussion), so we would like to finalize the email by the end of the week.

Please don't hesitate to let me know if you have any questions. Bruce, I will forward the list of bonuses for your approval shortly. Thanks.

Draft Email from Bruce

Subject: Total Compensation Benchmarking

This year, the Foundation began a formal review of our total compensation programs so that we can continue to attract and retain a highly talented staff to carry out our various initiatives. Total compensation consists of two parts: cash compensation (salary and bonus) and benefits program coverage.

During 2011, we focused on measuring how the cash compensation we pay our employees compares to salaries of employees in comparable positions at other non-profit organizations. In addition to other factors such as job performance, we used the results of this salary review to determine the 2012 salary amounts for employees. In early January, we will be communicating the 2012 salary increases which, due to a scheduling delay, have not yet been reviewed and approved by the Board of Directors.

To complete our total compensation review, during 2012 we will focus on measuring the competitiveness of our benefits program, with a target of implementing any design changes in 2013. We will provide you with more information on the benefits review later in the year.

On the part of myself and the Board, I'd like to thank each of you for your work which contributed to our many successes in 2011, and wish you all a very happy holiday.

sorry so last minute
this isnt replacing the session on thursday jake and i discussed doing continuation of the call yesterday which by everyones account was good for your planning purposes, she will have a hard stop at 1pm.
Ron, i realize you may not be able to join with the holiday so flagging for everyone else that we may not have one of our leaders!

Dear All,

I am pleased to announce that Marshall Taylor will be joining us on Tuesday, February 16th as HR's Associate Vice President and Deputy to the VP.
Marshall comes to us, most recently, from the NAACP where he served as General Counsel and, prior to that, as Senior Associate General Counsel at Howard University. With significant legal, managerial and HR related experience, he has worked in close partnership with HR on issues ranging from labor and employment law matters, recruitment and retention strategies, talent management initiatives, EEO policy, and diversity initiatives. Marshall holds a J.D. from UCLA School of Law and a B.A. in Political Science from Bucknell Univeristy. Please join me in welcoming Marshall to Georgetown University and our Human Resources family.

Best,
From the desk of Brenda Malone

I know that you are speaking with Secretary Clinton later today. As we discussed, I am offering some thoughts here, on framing an investment-led agenda on climate and infrastructure investment.

I wrote this memo for you to pass on as an initial thought piece to HRC, or if it makes more sense to use as a backgrounder for yourself. Either way, we can develop a more thoughtful memo in coming days as appropriate.

Please know that I remain available as a resource in thinking through this opportunity, and that I am committed to developing a program that provides Secretary Clinton with a strong leadership platform on clean and resilient infrastructure investment.

Many thanks, and let me know if I can be of further help on this.

In that context, I mention that some WH officials have had ties to advocacy groups and activists before entering the WH even if they weren't formally lobbyists. I mention that John accepted donations from Hansjorg Wyss and Tom Steyer when he headed CAP, and obviously they care about environmental issues. Mexican Genetics Study Reveals Huge Variation in Ancestry

UCSF/Stanford Team Uncovers Basis for Health Differences among Latinos

In the most comprehensive genetic study of the Mexican population to date, researchers from UC San Francisco and Stanford University, along with Mexico's National Institute of Genomic Medicine (INMEGEN) have identified tremendous genetic diversity, reflecting thousands of years of separation among local populations and shedding light on a range of confounding aspects of Latino health.

The study, which documented nearly 1 million genetic variants among more than 1,000 individuals, unveiled genetic differences as extensive as the variations between some Europeans and Asians, indicating populations that have been isolated for hundreds to thousands of years.

These differences offer an explanation for the wide variety of health factors among Latinos of Mexican descent, including differing rates of breast cancer and asthma, as well as therapeutic response. Results of the study, on which UCSF and Stanford shared both first and senior authors, appear in the June 13, 2014 online edition of the journal Science.

"Over thousands of years, there's been a tremendous language and cultural diversity across Mexico, with large empires like the Aztec and Maya, as well as small, isolated populations," said Christopher Gignoux, PhD, who was first author on the study with Andres Moreno-Estrada, first as a graduate student at UCSF and now as a postdoctoral fellow at Stanford. "Not only were we able to measure this diversity across the country, but we identified tremendous genetic diversity, with real disease implications based on where, precisely, your ancestors are from in Mexico."

For decades, physicians have based a range of diagnoses on patients' stated or perceived ethnic heritage, including baseline measurements for lung capacity, which are used to assess whether a patients' lungs are damaged by disease or environmental factors. In that context, categories such as Latino or African-American, both of which reflect people of diverse combinations of genetic ancestry, can be dangerously misleading and cause both misdiagnoses and incorrect treatment.

While there have been numerous disease/gene studies since the Human Genome Project, they have primarily focused on European and European-American populations, the researchers said. As a result, there is very little knowledge of the genetic basis for health differences among diverse populations.

"In lung disease such as asthma or emphysema, we know that it matters what ancestry you have at specific locations on your genes," said Esteban González Burchard, M.D., M.P.H., professor of Bioengineering and Therapeutic Sciences, and Medicine in the UCSF schools of Pharmacy and Medicine, who is co-senior author of the paper with Carlos Bustamante, PhD, a professor of genetics at Stanford. "In this study, we realized that for disease classification it also matters what type of Native American ancestry you have. In terms of genetics, it's the difference between a neighborhood and a precise street address."

The researchers focused on Mexico as one of the largest sources of pre-Columbian diversity, with a long history of complex civilizations that have had varying contributions to the present-day population. Working collaboratively across the institutions, the team enlisted 40 experts, ranging from bi-lingual anthropologists to statistical geneticists, computational biologists and clinicians, as well as researchers from multiple institutions in Mexico and others in England, France, Puerto Rico and Spain.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The study covered most geographic regions in Mexico and represented 511 people from 20 indigenous and 11 mestizo (ethnically mixed) populations. Their information was compared to genetic and lung-measurement data from two previous studies, including roughly 250 Mexican and Mexican-American children in the Genetics of Asthma in Latino Americans (GALA) study, the largest genetic study of Latino children, which Burchard leads.

Among the results was the discovery of three distinct genetic clusters in different areas of Mexico, as well as clear remnants of ancient empires that cross seemingly remote geographical zones. In particular, the Seri people along the northern mainland coast of the Gulf of California and a Mayan people known as the Lacandon, near the Guatemalan border, are as genetically different from one another as Europeans are from Chinese.

"We were surprised by the fact that this composition was also reflected in people with mixed ancestries from cosmopolitan areas," said co-first author Andres Moreno-Estrada, MD, PhD, a life sciences research associate at Stanford. "Hidden among the European and African ancestry blocks, the indigenous genetic map resembles a geographic map of Mexico."

The study also revealed a dramatic difference in lung capacity between mestizo individuals with western indigenous Mexican ancestry and those with eastern ancestry, to the degree that in a lung test of two equally healthy people of the same age, someone from the west could appear to be a decade younger than a Yucatan counterpart. Burchard said this was clinically significant and could have important implications in diagnosing lung disease.

Significantly, the study found that these genetic origins correlated directly to lung function in modern Mexican-Americans. As a result, the research lays the groundwork for both further research and for developing precise diagnostics and possibly even therapeutics, based on these genetic variations. It also creates a potentially important tool for public health policy, especially in Mexico, in allocating resources for both research and care.

"This can shape public health and public policy," Burchard said. "If you're testing a group of kids who are at risk for asthma or other health conditions, you want to do it in an area where the frequency of the disease gene is highest. We now have a map of Mexico that will help researchers make those clinical and public health decisions."

Burchard, a pulmonologist whose work focuses on the impact of genetic ancestry on children's risk of asthma and response to asthma medications, has wanted to study the Mexican population since 2003, both as a medical context for Mexican-Americans and as an opportunity to understand Native American genetics. To do so, he reached out to Bustamante,who directs the Stanford Center for Computational, Evolutionary and Human Genomics.

"We were particularly motivated by the fact that the vast majority of genetic studies have focused on populations of European descent," Bustamante said. "We think there are lots of opportunities for understanding the biology, as well as understanding differences in disease outcome in different parts of the world, by studying the genetics of complex disease in different populations."

Over the past few years, researchers have begun to understand that genetic variation has a very peculiar structure, Bustamante said. Some common genetic variants reach appreciable frequencies (e.g., 30-50 percent) in many of the world's populations. Most of these appear to have existed in the human gene pool at the time of the great human diasporas, including the migrations out of Africa. However, Bustamante said a "huge flurry" of other mutations have arisen since then, as human populations grew due to the advent and adoption of agriculture. These are much rarer, occurring in about 1- to 2 percent of the population, and are thought to be both more recent and relevant to health and disease. These rare variants make up the bulk of genetic alterations we see in human populations.

Many of these genetic differences already are known to have a direct impact on our risk for certain diseases, such as the BRCA gene in breast cancer, or our ability to metabolize medications. But before we can develop more precise therapies or prescribe them to the right patients, we need far more knowledge of what those variants are across diverse populations, and how they affect health.

"This is driving the ball down the field toward precision medicine," Burchard said. "We can't just clump everyone together and call them European Americans or Mexican Americans. There's been a lot of resistance to studying racially mixed populations, because they've been considered too complex. We think that offers a real scientific advantage."

Complete results and a full list of authors can be found in the paper, which appears online at Sciencemag.org . A representative chart of a diverse genome, reflecting varied heritage across one individual's genes, can be found on the Burchard Lab website.

The study was supported by the Federal Government of Mexico, Mexican Health Foundation, Gonzalo Rio Arronte Foundation, George Rosenkranz Prize for Health Care Research in Developing Countries, UCSF Chancellor's Research Fellowship, Stanford Department of Genetics, National Institutes of Health (grants GM007175, 5R01GM090087, 2R01HG003229, ES015794, GM007546, GM061390, HL004464, HL078885, HL088133, RR000083, P60MD006902 and ZIA ES49019), National Science Foundation, a Robert Wood Johnson Foundation Amos Medical Faculty Development Award, Sandler Foundation, America Asthma Foundation and the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences.

Americans Say Second Amendment Guarantees Right to Own Gun...

- Nearly three-quarters (73 percent) say the second amendment guarantees the right of all Americans to own guns. [USA Today/Gallup , 2/11/08]
- Forty-two percent of Americans have a gun in the household. Twenty-five percent have a handgun at home, 23 percent a shotgun, 27 percent a rifle. [The Numbers , 6/26/08]

...But the Public Says Gun Control is More Important than Gun Ownership

- Fifty-eight percent think that controlling gun ownership is more important than the right to own guns (37 percent). [Pew , 5/14/08]
- Nearly half (49 percent) would like gun laws to become stricter while 38 percent say they should remain as they are and only 11 percent say gun laws should be less strict. [USA Today/Gallup , 2/11/08]
- Yet just 36 percent favor banning the sale of handguns. [Pew , 5/14/08]

Court rules in favor of Second Amendment gun right

By MARK SHERMAN – 28 minutes ago

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court says Americans have a right to own guns for self-defense and hunting, the justices' first major pronouncement on gun rights in U.S. history.

The court's 5-4 ruling strikes down the District of Columbia's 32-year-old ban on handguns as incompatible with gun rights under the Second Amendment. The decision goes further than even the Bush administration wanted, but probably leaves most firearms laws intact.

The court had not conclusively interpreted the Second Amendment since its ratification in 1791. The amendment reads: "A well regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed."

The basic issue for the justices was whether the amendment protects an individual's right to own guns no matter what, or whether that right is somehow tied to service in a state militia.

Justice Antonin Scalia, writing for four colleagues, said the Constitution does not permit "the absolute prohibition of handguns held and used for self-defense in the home."

In dissent, Justice John Paul Stevens wrote that the majority "would have us believe that over 200 years ago, the Framers made a choice to limit the tools available to elected officials wishing to regulate civilian uses of weapons."

He said such evidence "is nowhere to be found."

LCV Action Fund Endorses Hillary Clinton for President

Nashua, NH: Hillary Clinton will join the League of Conservation Voters (LCV) Action Fund President Gene Karpinski and Board Chair Carol M. Browner today in Nashua, NH to receive the environmental group's endorsement for President of the United States—its earliest endorsement of a Presidential candidate in the history of the organization and the first endorsement ever made before any votes are cast.

"When it comes to fighting the climate crisis, the stakes couldn't be higher—and we are confident that Hillary Clinton is the right person for the job," said Gene Karpinski, President of LCV Action Fund. "With her proven history of leadership, strong environmental record, and a campaign committed to building a clean energy future, Hillary Clinton is without a doubt the most effective leader to stand up to Big Polluters and push forward an aggressive plan to tackle climate change and get it done."

Hillary Clinton has a long history of strong environmental leadership. As a Senator, Clinton supported a number of important climate and clean energy bills, including reducing carbon and other pollutants from power plants, repealing Big Oil tax handouts, and investing in renewable energy. Clinton also proposed several environmental justice initiatives. As Secretary of State, she made climate change a top priority. Clinton appointed the first-ever Special Envoy for Climate Change who serves as the Administration's point person for climate negotiations, including the recent, historic bilateral climate agreement with China and formed the Climate and Clean Air Coalition, a partnership with dozens of other countries to reduce short-lived climate pollutants like black carbon and methane. In 2009, Clinton made a breakthrough announcement committing the U.S. to help jointly mobilize $100 billion by 2020 to help communities across the world deal with the ravages of climate change. This commitment helped reinvigorate stalled negotiations and led to an agreement in Copenhagen.

“As a presidential candidate, Hillary Clinton has made the need to grow a sustainable, clean energy economy and tackling climate change a major part of her conversation with voters,” said Carol M. Browner, Board Chair of LCV, former EPA Administrator and Director of the Office of Energy and Climate Change Policy under President Obama. “With a history of leadership on the international stage and a commitment to protecting public health, Hillary Clinton is the leader we need to meet the climate crisis head-on.”

Clinton has pledged that by 2027 the U.S. will generate enough renewable energy to power every home (roughly 33% of US energy). She also pledged that by the end of her first term there would be more than 500 million solar panels installed across the country, a 700% increase from 2014 levels. Her energy plan will incentivize investment in renewable energy sources by increasing the number of government grants for clean energy, extending federal clean energy tax incentives and expanding renewable energy on public lands. She is also opposed to the dirty and dangerous Keystone XL pipeline and offshore drilling in the Arctic Ocean.

This is the earliest presidential endorsement in the history of LCV Action Fund. Until today, the earliest endorsement was of John Kerry in January of 2004. The Political Committee of LCV’s Board of Directors reviewed questionnaires and conducted in-person interviews with each pro-environment candidate—and the full Board of Directors voted to endorse Secretary Clinton following a recommendation from the Political Committee. LCV will now launch its Greenroots program to mobilize members in early primary states to volunteer for Secretary Clinton’s campaign.

Clinton will also now be featured on LCV Action Fund’s GiveGreen website,http://www.givegreen.com , the only bundling website devoted exclusively to raising money for environmental champions and candidates.

The League of Conservation Voters Action Fund (LCVAF), the connected federal political action committee (PAC) of the League of Conservation Voters, works to elect candidates who will implement sound environmental laws and policies, and defeat those who stand in the way of progress.

LCV ACTION FUND

Tiernan,

As a valued LCV member and fellow environmentalist, I'm eager to deliver an important announcement to you, Tiernan.

We are at a critical juncture for our climate, our environment, and our families' future. Thirty-five years ago, I devoted my career and my life to fighting the most pressing issue of our time: climate change. Back then, I never could have imagined how far we would come — or the kind of outrageous opposition we would face. Opposition that some would argue has never been more challenging than it is now.

I've worked in several administrations to build solid environmental policy and progress — including serving as the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency from 1993 to 2001 under President Clinton and as the director of the White House Office of Energy and Climate Change Policy under President Obama. I'm immensely proud of what we've accomplished over the past 20 years for clean air, clean water, and the health of our communities. And as President Obama continues to prioritize climate change through this year and next, I know we must continue that legacy into the next White House.

Today, as Chair of LCV's Board, I'm honored to announce that the League of Conservation Voters Action Fund is endorsing Hillary Clinton to be the next President of the United States.

As an environmentalist and a woman, I feel the full gravity of what this election will mean. With your support, we will elect the first woman and a true environmental champion to the White House. Please know that LCV's Board of Directors carefully considered each candidate, and I'm 100 percent confident telling you that Hillary Clinton is the best candidate for the job.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Here's why:

1. From Senator to Secretary of State, Hillary Clinton has made the environment and climate change a top priority. She has consistently championed clean water, clean air, and repealing Big Oil tax handouts to invest in clean energy.
2. Hillary Clinton laid the groundwork for international climate agreements. With President Obama, she forged international commitments to reduce climate pollutants like carbon and methane.
3. Hillary Clinton opposes dirty drilling and wants to break Big Oil's chokehold on our country. She has publicly opposed the dirty and dangerous Keystone XL tar sands pipeline and drilling in the Arctic Ocean.
4. We will achieve the clean energy future with Hillary Clinton. She has pledged that the U.S. will install more than 500 million solar panels by the end of her first term and generate enough renewable energy to power every home in America by 2027.

Hillary Clinton is a fighter — there's no doubt about that. And as vicious as the opposition can get, we know that she has the fortitude and tenacity to take them on and come out on top.

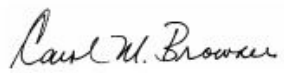

The next president will be key in determining where we go from here — do we bow to Big Polluters who are destroying our planet, or do we give everything we've got to confront the climate crisis? We know that once Hillary Clinton is in the White House, she will continue her excellent environmental record and build upon President Obama's work to make the U.S. a global leader in the fight against climate change.

Nonetheless, we can be sure that Hillary Clinton's opponent next November will be downright dangerous. Not only will he or she lack a solid plan to fight climate change, he or she will also almost certainly deny the indisputable science that proves it's happening.

We need your help to elect Hillary Clinton, a proven climate leader. Please support her campaign by donating to Hillary for America today through LCV Action Fund's GiveGreen program. Every contribution goes straight to her campaign and lets her know that the environmental community supports her candidacy and urges her to continue to prioritize an environmental agenda. Please make a generous gift today.

We value your membership and all that you've done with LCV. Together, we can secure a strong environmental future.

Thank you,

Carol Browner

Wall Street Journal: "Hillary Clinton Focuses on the Policy, Not the Personal"

By Peter Nicholas

September 29, 2014, 11:29 a.m. EDT

NEW YORK—When he first ran for president, Barack Obama's themes were "hope" and "change." Hillary Clinton, appearing at a conference last week, trumpeted what she called "evidence-based optimism."

That isn't a phrase that lends itself to a campaign slogan, but these days it captures the unsentimental approach Mrs. Clinton is bringing to policy debates ahead of the 2016 presidential contest.

Already one of the country's best-known figures, Mrs. Clinton is playing down her personal story and instead keeping issues front and center. Her message is that she would bring to American politics a competence and analytical rigor.

Mrs. Clinton's office declined to comment for this article. But to the degree she is revealing much of anything about her private life, it is to gush over her growing family. Her daughter, Chelsea, gave birth Friday to Charlotte Clinton Mezvinsky, making Mrs. Clinton a first-time grandmother at 66 years old.

In a Saturday tweet—accompanied by a picture of her cradling the baby—Mrs. Clinton wrote that she and her husband were "over the moon to be grandparents!" She also has begun emphasizing her roots in the Midwest, a region that can be a political bellwether.

But while some potential 2016 Republican presidential candidates are showcasing their personalities as a reason to like and trust them, Mrs. Clinton for the most part is making clear she would rather talk about something else.

If the material is distinctly dry and unsexy, Mrs. Clinton doesn't seem to mind. Mr. Obama defeated her in the 2008 Democratic primary in part because voters found his message and life story inspiring. But Mrs. Clinton doesn't seem to be betting that charisma will decide things in 2016. She is bemoaning what she calls the "evidence-free zone" in American politics while celebrating "data" as the indispensable tool in choosing the best options.

"Data, data, data," she said at a Clinton Global Initiative panel discussion—another phrase not likely to find its way onto a bumper sticker.

She talked about brain "hardware" and "neural connections" during one panel about childhood development and mused about new ways to measure gross domestic product during another appearance.

"We obsess over metrics, get excited about data," Mrs. Clinton said in a closing speech at the conference.

Her focus insulates her to some degree from Republican attacks in the run-up to her announcement on whether she'll be a candidate once more. It is hard to muster an attack based on a call for better data in American policy-making.

What's more, when she has ventured into details about her personal life, she has gotten into trouble. Some of her former advisers cringed earlier this year when the former first lady, U.S. senator and secretary of state said she hadn't driven a car since 1996–a result of her being under constant Secret Service protection.

And she garnered little sympathy when she told a TV interviewer in June that she and her husband were "dead broke" when they left the White House in 2001.

"Once she leaves the policy space and moves into personality, she just opens herself up to a broad range of attacks," said Tad Devine, who worked for the presidential campaigns of Democrats Al Gore and John Kerry, among others. "It is much harder for opponents to deal with you as long as you occupy the policy space."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Her comfort zone is talking more about policies and ideas than it is talking about herself and who she is," said Peter Peyser, a longtime Democratic lobbyist.

If she runs for president, Mrs. Clinton eventually will need to present herself as more than a vessel for certain policy ideas, analysts say. Voters want to feel a connection to presidential candidates, and Mrs. Clinton would need to give them one.

"She can be wonkette for some time, but running for president requires more than being a propeller head," said Bill Whalen, who worked for former Republican President George H.W. Bush's campaign in 1992. "You also have to propel a personality."

On the Republican side, prospective candidates are doing just that. New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie is emphasizing his bluntness and candor. Another potential GOP candidate, Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky, is underscoring his independent streak—a willingness to part ways with fellow Republicans who are quicker to call for U.S. military intervention.

In recent weeks, Mrs. Clinton has dropped hints about the pieces of her personal life she is likely to showcase on the campaign trail.

Family is emerging as major theme. In addition to talking about her new grandchild she also has been sharing stories about the hardships her late mother endured as a child.

Expect Mrs. Clinton to invoke such biographical bits in pressing for policies that help shore up American families, one member of her circle said.

"One of the themes you're going to see a lot of is these issues around family," this person said. "She can talk about that, and in a way, she's living that."

Chicago Sun-Times blog: Politics: "Hillary Clinton hitting Illinois to stump for Gov. Quinn"

By Lynn Sweet

September 29, 2014, 9:00 a.m. CDT

Former Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, raised in north suburban Park Ridge, will be stumping for Illinois Gov. Pat Quinn, I've learned.

Quinn is locked in a tight race with GOP nominee Bruce Rauner. This comes as President Barack Obama hits Chicago on Thursday for Quinn and first lady Michelle comes home on Oct. 7. Clinton, mulling a 2016 presidential run, does not need the headache of a GOPgovernor in Illinois if she makes her bid.

Clinton had been on the calendar for Oct. 8--though the birth of her granddaughter on Friday may change her schedule.

CNN: "Obama subtly pushes back against Clinton, Panetta on Syria"

By Dan Merica

September 29, 2014, 12:46 p.m. EDT

President Barack Obama, over the last two years, has seen his top two former national security Cabinet officials critique his foreign policy decision in Syria.

Now the President has gently pushed back.

In an interview with CBS' "60 Minutes" that aired on Sunday, Obama said that arming Syrian rebels in 2012 in their fight against President Bashar al-Assad "would have been counterproductive."

"This is in response to the mythology that has evolved that somehow if we had given those folks some guns two and a half years ago, than Syria would be fine," Obama said about the 2012 plans. "For us to just go blind on that would have been counterproductive and would not have helped the situation. It also would have committed us to a much more significant role inside of Syria."

Earlier this month, the President authorized a plan to arm and train rebels in Syria fighting against ISIS, a terrorist group that has swept into power in areas in both Syria and Iraq. Obama's plan also authorizes airstrikes against ISIS targets.

Former top Obama administration officials, including former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton and former Secretary of Defense Leon Panetta, have publicly disagreed with the president on Syria.

Clinton wrote in her memoir "Hard Choices" that she split with Obama on Syria and urged the president to arm the rebels.

In an interview with The Atlantic in August, Clinton said, "The failure to help build up a credible fighting force of the people who were the originators of the protests against Assad ... the failure to do that left a big vacuum, which the jihadists have now filled."

And just last week, at the annual meeting of the Clinton Global Initiative, the former secretary of state dodged a question on whether arming the rebels was coming too late, given the recent rise of ISIS in Syria.

"Whatever the debates might have been before, this is a threat to the region and beyond," Clinton said. "I can't sit here today and tell you that if we had done what I had recommended we would be in a very different position. I just can't. You can't go and prove a negative."

Clinton does support Obama's plan to arm rebels and launch airstrikes against ISIS in Syria.

Panetta echoed Clinton's Syria sentiments and knocked the president in an interview with "60 Minutes" earlier this month.

"I think that would've helped," the former defense chief said about arming rebels. "And I think, in part, we pay the price for not doing that in what we see happening with ISIS."

The Press Trust of India (in The Economic Times): "Prime Minister Narendra Modi meets Bill and Hillary Clinton"

[No Writer Mentioned]

September 29, 2014, 9:54 p.m. IST

NEW YORK: Former US President Bill Clinton and his wife Hillary Clinton today called on Prime Minister Narendra Modi here and discussed Indo-US relations.

The Clinton couple had a 45-minute meeting with Modi, who was accompanied by External Affairs Minister Sushma Swaraj.

Both the Prime Minister and Swaraj warmly welcomed the Clintons and wished them on becoming grandparents. Swaraj warmly hugged Hillary.

Chelsea, the daughter of Bill and former Secretary of State Hillary, gave birth to daughter Charlotte last week.

Known for their love for India, Bill and Hillary were expected to discuss Indo-US engagements and the priorities of the new government in this regard.

The meeting comes in the backdrop of reports that Hillary may contest the US Presidential elections in 2016.

Washingtonian: Capital Comment: "In Virginia's 10th District, It's Hillary Clinton's Race to Lose"

By Harry Jaffe

September 29, 2014

[Subtitle:] Why all local politics in Virginia have become national.

For more than a year, one name has trumped all others in Virginia politics: Hillary.

"Hillary Clinton's first test," was how Politico characterized Governor Terry McAuliffe's campaign last summer, suggesting it was merely a dry run for the consultants, pollsters, bundlers, and other moving parts of Hillary's 50-state 2016 vehicle. Or as another website asked: Is McAuliffe "nothing more than Hillary's stalking horse?"

Now comes the congressional race in Virginia's 10th District, in which the Republican candidate, Barbara Comstock, a flame-throwing conservative Republican state delegate, embellished her primary win by bashing the Clintons and vowing to "get to the bottom of the truth in Benghazi." Meanwhile, Comstock's opponent, Fairfax County supervisor John Foust, is getting help from '90s-era Bill Clinton aide Paul Begala, who's been issuing poison tweets about Comstock.

Virginia's politics isn't being stalked; it's been kidnapped.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The increasingly national flavor of the Commonwealth's local elections is partly a function of its DC suburbs. McAuliffe, Comstock, and Begala—as well as GOP strategist Ed Gillespie, running for the US Senate against Mark Warner, and Newt Gingrich, a longtime supporter of Comstock—call Northern Virginia home.

When they run for office, they end up squaring off against old federal-level foes. As an aide to Representative Frank Wolf in the early 1990s, Comstock made her name investigating the Clintons. She triggered the minor scandal known as Travelgate and had a hand in Filegate and Monicagate. "It's as if these old Beltway grudge matches are being rehashed where so many of these players now live," says David Wasserman, with the Cook Political Report.

Another reason national politics has intruded is that Virginia increasingly looks like the nation. Once "solid South," the state has become a bellwether. "There's no better laboratory," says a Democratic Party operative.

The 10th District is Virginia in microcosm. Spanning the urban-oriented enclaves of Fairfax and the apple orchards around Winchester, it leans left on its eastern end and squats solidly Republican in the west. The area in between, around Dulles and the exurbs of Leesburg, bulges with Asian and Hispanic newcomers. "If you want to take the temperature of the country," says Kyle Kondik of the University of Virginia's Center for Politics, "this might be a good district to pick."

Those demographics mean the fight for the district's seat will produce more partisan heat than its constituents bargained for. The Democratic and Republican congressional campaign committees have set aside more than $2 million each to contest this small scrap of battleground.

But the 10th's political diversity may guarantee residents the local election they deserve. Already, Comstock has ditched her anti-Clinton rhetoric to appeal to moderate suburbanites. "I'm a doer and not interested in continuing these fights," she told Washingtonian.

Foust is still trying to stick Comstock with the GOP's entire '90s tally—"She spent four years and over $80 million to investigate the Clintons and found basically nothing," he says—but to win in November, he'll also need to address jobs, health care, and traffic.

Not that he'd refuse if Hillary showed up to campaign for him. Says Foust: "I definitely would welcome that."

Al Jazeera America opinion: Mark Weisbrot, co-director of the Center for Economic and Policy Research: "Hard choices: Hillary Clinton admits role in Honduran coup"

By Mark Weisbrot

September 29, 2014, 6:00 a.m. EDT

[Subtitle:] Clinton's embrace of far-right narrative on Latin America is part of electoral strategy

In a recent op-ed in The Washington Post, former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton used a review of Henry Kissinger's latest book, "World Order," to lay out her vision for "sustaining America's leadership in the world." In the midst of numerous global crises, she called for return to a foreign policy with purpose, strategy and pragmatism. She also highlighted some of these policy choices in her memoir "Hard Choices" and how they contributed to the challenges that Barack Obama's administration now faces.

The chapter on Latin America, particularly the section on Honduras, a major source of the child migrants currently pouring into the United States, has gone largely unnoticed. In letters to Clinton and her successor, John Kerry, more than 100 members of Congress have repeatedly warned about the deteriorating security situation in Honduras, especially since the 2009 military coup that ousted the country's democratically elected President Manuel Zelaya. As Honduran scholar Dana Frank points out in Foreign Affairs, the U.S.-backed post-coup government "rewarded coup loyalists with top ministries," opening the door for further "violence and anarchy."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The homicide rate in Honduras, already the highest in the world, increased by 50 percent from 2008 to 2011; political repression, the murder of opposition political candidates, peasant organizers and LGBT activists increased and continue to this day. Femicides skyrocketed. The violence and insecurity were exacerbated by a generalized institutional collapse. Drug-related violence has worsened amid allegations of rampant corruption in Honduras' police and government. While the gangs are responsible for much of the violence, Honduran security forces have engaged in a wave of killings and other human rights crimes with impunity.

Despite this, however, both under Clinton and Kerry, the State Department's response to the violence and military and police impunity has largely been silence, along with continued U.S. aid to Honduran security forces. In "Hard Choices," Clinton describes her role in the aftermath of the coup that brought about this dire situation. Her firsthand account is significant both for the confession of an important truth and for a crucial false testimony.

First, the confession: Clinton admits that she used the power of her office to make sure that Zelaya would not return to office. "In the subsequent days [after the coup] I spoke with my counterparts around the hemisphere, including Secretary [Patricia] Espinosa in Mexico," Clinton writes. "We strategized on a plan to restore order in Honduras and ensure that free and fair elections could be held quickly and legitimately, which would render the question of Zelaya moot."

This may not come as a surprise to those who followed the post-coup drama closely. (See my commentary from 2009 on Washington's role in helping the coup succeed here, here and here.) But the official storyline, which was dutifully accepted by most in the media, was that the Obama administration actually opposed the coup and wanted Zelaya to return to office.

The question of Zelaya was anything but moot. Latin American leaders, the United Nations General Assembly and other international bodies vehemently demanded his immediate return to office. Clinton's defiant and anti-democratic stance spurred a downward slide in U.S. relations with several Latin American countries, which has continued. It eroded the warm welcome and benefit of the doubt that even the leftist governments in region offered to the newly installed Obama administration a few months earlier.

Clinton's false testimony is even more revealing. She reports that Zelaya was arrested amid "fears that he was preparing to circumvent the constitution and extend his term in office." This is simply not true. As Clinton must know, when Zelaya was kidnapped by the military and flown out of the country in his pajamas on June 28, 2009, he was trying to put a consultative, nonbinding poll on the ballot to ask voters whether they wanted to have a real referendum on reforming the constitution during the scheduled election in November. It is important to note that Zelaya was not eligible to run in that election. Even if he had gotten everything he wanted, it was impossible for Zelaya to extend his term in office. But this did not stop the extreme right in Honduras and the United States from using false charges of tampering with the constitution to justify the coup.

In addition to her bold confession and Clinton's embrace of the far-right narrative in the Honduran episode, the Latin America chapter is considerably to the right of even her own record on the region as secretary of state. This appears to be a political calculation. There is little risk of losing votes for admitting her role in making most of the hemisphere's governments disgusted with the United States. On the other side of the equation, there are influential interest groups and significant campaign money to be raised from the right-wing Latin American lobby, including Floridian Cuban-Americans and their political fundraisers.

Like the 54-year-old failed embargo against Cuba, Clinton's position on Latin America in her bid for the presidency is another example of how the far right exerts disproportionate influence on U.S. foreign policy in the hemisphere.

The Hill blog: Ballot Box: "O'Malley in NH: Nation wants 'new leaders'"

By Peter Sullivan

September 29, 2014, 9:52 a.m. EDT

Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley (D), who is considering a 2016 presidential bid, said in New Hampshire that people want to hear from "new leaders."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The remark will be seen as a criticism of Hillary Clinton, who has been on the national stage for years, and would be the Democratic frontrunner if she enters the race.

The trip to New Hampshire, “reinforced the hunch I had that people want to hear a new perspective, that they want to hear from new leaders,” O’Malley told New York magazine in a story published Sunday night. “I think that reality is very much out there," he added.

O'Malley spoke at the Portsmouth, N.H., Democrats' annual dinner on Friday. The appearance in the home of the nation's first presidential primary featured a video touting O'Malley's work to turn around Baltimore, as mayor, and Maryland, as governor.

O'Malley has made no secret of the fact that he is considering a presidential run. He has sent staff to help on campaigns this year in states including Iowa and New Hampshire, and has made repeated trips to both early-voting states.

At this stage, though, polls give him just one or two points of support, compared to well over 50 percent for Clinton.

New York Times: “A Record of Resilience at Vanguard of American Presidential Politics”

By John Harwood

September 28, 2014

WASHINGTON — Obscured in all the talk about Hillary Rodham Clinton and the 2016 race is a historical achievement unrelated to gender.

Twenty-two years after he won the White House and six years after his wife’s near miss for the Democratic nomination, former President Bill Clinton again stands in the thick of the competition for the nation’s highest office.

That makes Mr. Clinton, who addressed his first national convention at age 33 and on Friday became a grandfather at 68, the most durable high-stakes player ever in American presidential politics.

It does not make him the most successful or influential president, and he tops no academic lists of the all-time greats. Unlike Presidents Franklin D. Roosevelt and Richard M. Nixon, each of whom appeared on five national ballots, Mr. Clinton stood for election nationwide only twice.

His stature on leaving office, in contrast to President Ronald Reagan’s, proved insufficient to secure the election of his vice president to the White House. He never won a majority of the popular vote, as President Obama has done twice. And he is one of only two presidents impeached by the House of Representatives. (Andrew Johnson — who had been Lincoln’s vice president, and never elected to the top job at all — was the other, more than century earlier.)

Yet Mr. Clinton’s Cal Ripken-like determination to keep showing up, and a White House record that glows brighter in memory, have sustained his appeal across a turn of centuries, three decades and multiple generations of swing voters. As he played host last week to the current president and perhaps the next one (his wife) at the Clinton Global Initiative, one historian likened him to a rare creature built for longevity at high altitudes.

“He’s been a snow leopard longer than any other president,” the historian, Douglas Brinkley of Rice University, said. “There’s been nobody like Bill Clinton who’s played that long at the very top.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Barring a constitutional amendment, Roosevelt will remain the only American to win the presidency more than twice. But he died in office 13 years after the first of his four victories in 1932.

Mr. Reagan electrified conservatives on the campaign trail in 1964 on behalf of the Republican nominee, Senator Barry M. Goldwater of Arizona. But Mr. Goldwater lost big, and Mr. Reagan did not win the presidency until 1980. Fourteen years later, he announced he had Alzheimer's disease.

Mr. Nixon ran as Dwight D. Eisenhower's vice president in 1952, and 1956. He lost the White House to John F. Kennedy in 1960 before winning in 1968 and 1972 (and resigning in 1974). That run draws comparisons to Mr. Clinton's longevity.

Mr. Clinton "wouldn't like to hear this, but in a lot of ways he's like Nixon in that raw determination to keep moving forward," said Kenneth L. Khachigian, a former Nixon aide.

The dawning of both Clintons' careers makes that comparison all the more striking. In 1974, the year before the Clintons married, Hillary Rodham worked for the House committee pursuing the impeachment of Mr. Nixon, and Mr. Clinton fell short as a Democratic congressional candidate seeking to capitalize on the Watergate scandal.

Mrs. Clinton approaches her decision to run on firmer ground than any nonincumbent in years. As senator from New York and then secretary of state, she has built a substantial independent standing and appeal. But Mr. Clinton has profoundly shaped her ability, as well as that of any modern Democratic nominee, to compete.

He modernized the aging Roosevelt coalition shattered by Mr. Reagan, showing Democrats how to win the White House after a 12-year drought. The economic growth he presided over has produced such nostalgia that Republicans now invoke him to disparage Mr. Obama.

"Like Reagan's, Clinton's historical significance, his consequence, has become more apparent with the passage of time," said Richard Norton Smith, founding director of the Abraham Lincoln Presidential Library and Museum.

Presidents can influence contests for the White House in many ways after they have moved out of it. Mr. Smith, whose book "An Uncommon Man" chronicled Herbert Hoover's post-presidency, notes that Democrats used Mr. Hoover for decades as a cudgel against Republicans. Yet during the 31 years he lived after returning to private life, Mr. Hoover headed two presidential commissions on the federal government, and the eponymous institution he founded at Stanford University influenced the resurgence of conservatism.

On the other side, former President Jimmy Carter, who turns 90 on Wednesday, was a consistent Republican target after his 1980 loss to Mr. Reagan. Mr. Carter has now been an ex-president longer than any in history — surpassing Mr. Hoover's record — and he spent the decades focusing on human rights and the resolution of international conflicts. He won the 2002 Nobel Peace Prize.

Former President George Bush was unpopular enough within the Republican Party when he left office that his own son President George W. Bush kept his political distance. The younger Mr. Bush, himself, has taken up painting.

Mr. Clinton still savors life on the big stage and the nuts and bolts of politics. He has courted Reagan Democrats, soccer moms, baby boom yuppies, tech workers and millennials on his own behalf and for his wife.

His scorecard, despite scandal and strife during his tenure, remains robust. An NBC News/Wall Street Journal poll this month showed Mr. Clinton with a 56 percent favorability rating.

Mr. Brinkley credited it to "a combination of ambition, will, narcissism and talent."

Paul Begala, a former Clinton aide, cites the lip-biting empathy that Mr. Clinton displays, and that late-night comics once mocked, reasoning that Americans return the apparent concern and affection he has extended to them.

The ex-president benefits, too, from simply having served during the first Silicon Valley boom. “Those of us who aren’t Clintonites credit most of it to the fact that a whole new source for our economy was created — and not by him,” Mr. Khachigian said.

Mr. Clinton himself has since grown wealthy. Yet even adversaries do not believe that is why he stays in the game.

“He’d probably give it all up,” Mr. Khachigian said, “if he could have a permanent microphone and an office in the West Wing.”

The Veterans' Trust Fund

by TOM ANDREWS
Thu Nov 11, 2010 at 08:08:42 AM PST

What are you doing on Veterans Day? Taking the day off? Sleeping in? Catching a parade? Going shopping?

How about taking five minutes to make a difference in the lives of veterans wounded in Iraq or Afghanistan while making it less likely that US soldiers of the future will be sent into similar military quagmires?

Check out a very short film (less than 5 minutes) that has been released this Veterans Day that describes an idea whose time has come – the Veterans' Trust Fund – and how you can make it a reality. Then declare your support by signing up at www.standwithvets.org .

* Watch the film at http://bit.ly/b0YhdF ****

What's a Veterans' Trust Fund? It will require Congress to take responsibility for the true costs of warfare whenever they vote to go to war or extend a war. That will mean appropriating funds upfront so that those injured or wounded in the course of their military service will be guaranteed proper care and support when they come home.

Why do we need a Veterans' Trust Fund? Because when Congress votes for wars, like funding the invasion of Iraq or the escalation in Afghanistan, it doesn't debate the true cost of those wars or take responsibility for the cost of meeting the future needs of those who are sent to do the fighting. Caring for those injured in battle is pushed off until later. When later comes, wounded veterans find themselves competing in the political give and take of Washington DC. The result has been tragedy, neglect and a system overwhelmed with needs it is ill equipped to meet. Consider this:

- Last year, there were more than 1,800 suicide attempts by veterans of the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. The VA is more than 1,000 short of the counselors, therapists and specialists needed to meet the mental health needs of veterans.
- 565,000 veterans of the Iraq and Afghanistan wars have filed disability claims for conditions directly related to their combat. The backlog for processing claims at the Veterans Administration exceeds 700,000, and despite robust efforts at the VA, that number continues to grow.

When I described the idea of a Veterans' Trust Fund to a Member of Congress, he said: "Do you know how high this will drive the cost of going to war?" Precisely. Going to war will become that much more expensive up front and therefore that much more difficult to support particularly by those who are worried about the ballooning federal deficit. Fact is, since 2003 nearly 25% of the federal deficit can be attributed directly to the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

The reason that creating a Veterans' Trust Fund will increase the cost of going to war is because up to now

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Congress has been passing the buck for these costs to those who can least afford it – our wounded warriors and their families. It's time we tell Congress: If it is worth going to war, it is worth standing by those who are sent to do the fighting.

Major General John Batiste, who commanded forces in Iraq and now serves as the Chair of the New York State Veterans Affairs Commission, describes the Veterans' Trust Fund as "a moral imperative". He told a Congressional hearing in September –

"Why are we discussing a Veterans' Trust Fund nine years into these wars? We might very well have decided if we'd done the strategy right that the ends, ways and means are not in balance and therefore this was not a good idea. That, at the end of the day, is the bottom line."

If you are looking for a truly meaningful way to observe Veterans Day, watch our short film and then visit www.standwithvets.org to declare your support for the Veterans' Trust Fund.

Happy Veterans Day.

Huma and John:

I just hosted an event for Emerge and the special guest was Wendy Davis. She is speaking around the country about the 'dog whistle' discrimination that she faced during her campaign. She is extremely persuasive, while having a positive message and likable delivery style.

She said she is in the process of setting up a C3 and C4 to organize around the effort to elect more women to office. While I think this is a great thing to do, Andrea Dew Steele commented after Davis left that it would be great if Wendy used her message and persuasive lecture to get out on the campaign trail for Hillary. Clearly, Davis has the bandwidth for a full-time job. So I thought this was something that might be useful for you to know.

Subject:	Daily Media Report 6.5.15

National:

-- Report on HRC's voting rights speech; reported HRC called out Republicans by name for making it harder for people to vote; reported HRC's policies were backing up her words; interviewed Nina Turner; Turner said she was leaping for joy at HRC's comments; showed footage of Perry on Fox and Friends; Turner said HRC was standing up for fundamental rights; Turner said HRC stood up and talked about the Supreme Court dismantling the Voting Rights Act. MSNBC's The Ed Show , 6.5.15

-- Discussion about HRC's voting rights speech; used footage from HRC's speech; showed footage of Kasich and Christie contesting HRC's speech; Greg Gutfeld said HRC was playing the factions; Dana Perino noted that New York didn't allow early voting. Fox News' The Five , 6.5.15

-- Larger report on China potentially hacking into US databases; panel included Glenn Thrush; Thrush went on a tangent about HRC's tenure as Secretary of State pushing a "pivot to China"; Thrush said on the debate stage that it was entirely legitimate for Republicans to ask HRC why she didn't get tougher or spearhead more of a policy with China. MSNBC's Now With Alex Wagner ,6.5.15

-- Report that TSU sent reporters an email saying HRC's speech would be the interview; interviewed Ed Henry; Henry said reporters were outraged by TSU's email, said the outrage didn't change anything; Henry explained why he tried to shout out at these events; Henry said it was not likely TSU sent out the email on its own without preapproval of HFA because that's not how messages like this usually work. Fox News' Your World With Neil Cavuto, 6.5.15

-- Led with HRC's voting rights speech; used footage of HRC naming names of GOP governors; reported on Perry's response, Walker's response, and Christie's response; panel with Howard Dean, Jonathan Alter; Jake Silverstein, and Joy Reid; Dean said HRC's voting rights stance was perfect, said it was absolutely the best day of HRC's campaign; Alex Wagner said this felt like the first day of HRC's campaign; Reid tied HRC's voting rights speech to HRC's criminal justice speech, said it speaks to the heart of the Obama coalition; Reid said HRC's proposal was hard to argue with; Silverstein noted HRC made her voting rights speech the same day Rick Perry announced; Wagner said HRC baited the Republicans; Reid said HRC's actions recently are revelatory of the men she's running against. MSNBC's Now With Alex Wagner , 6.5.15 [Part Two]

-- Report on HRC's voting rights speech; interviewed Chris Wallace; Wallace said HRC called out GOP governors for limiting the length of early voting; Wallace reported that New York had no early voting; Wallace said the NYT's editorial supported HRC but did not note that New York had no early voting; Wallace said HRC was trying to change the subject from her scandals. Fox News' Shepard Smith Reporting , 6.5.15

-- Report on China allegedly hacking the OBM; interviewed Ed Henry; shifted into discussion about whether the White House was defending HRC's use of a private server; showed footage of Henry questioning Josh Earnest at the White House; shifted into report about HRC's voting rights speech; panel with Alan Colmes and John Gallagher; Gretchen Carlson noted HRC called out her GOP candidates; Colmes commended HRC for her voting rights stance; Colmes said the universal voter registration was a good thing; showed footage of Rick Perry's response to HRC on Fox News. Fox News' The Real World With Gretchen Carlson , 6.5.15

-- Discussion about how the media is covering GOP presidential candidates; interviewed Katie Pavlich; Pavlich said even though Marco Rubio had speeding tickets that HRC had not driven a car since the 1990s; Pavlich said HRC was getting a free pass from the media; Pavlich said HRC's van was going 92 miles per hour through Iowa according to The Daily Mail. Fox News' The Real Story With Gretchen Carlson , 6.5.15

-- Report on polling that shows a majority of Americans do not view HRC as honest and trustworthy; interviewed Howard Kurtz; Kurtz said the confluence of scandal stories about HRC was hurting HRC in the polls; noted HRC had not been giving interviews. Fox News' Happening Now, 6.5.15

-- Discussion about HRC's voting rights speech; noted Republicans said universal enfranchisement at age 18 could lead to more voter fraud; used footage of HRC's voting rights speech; showed Rick Perry's response to HRC's voter fraud comments; Julie Roginsky noted out of more than a billion votes cast since 2000 only 31 instances of voter fraud related to IDs had been discovered; Roginsky said HRC was absolutely right on voter IDs; Andrea Tantaros said HRC's attack was racist and nasty; Judge Alex Ferrer asked why HRC was spending money on lawyers when she could use to bus people to get photo IDs. Fox News' Outnumbered ,6.5.15

-- Interview with Dan Pfeiffer; discussion about HRC naming names of her GOP opponents; Pfeiffer said it was politically smart for HRC to start naming names; Pfeiffer said HRC's Texas speech was good policy and good politics. CNN's Wolf , 6.5.15

-- Discussion about HRC's voting rights speech; panel with Jonathan Capehart and Julie Pace; used footage of HRC hitting GOP opponents on voting rights; Pace noted HRC seemed to push voting rights forward and called out Republicans by name; Pace said it was clear HRC saw voting rights as an issue that could rally the base. MSBNC's Andrea Mitchell Reports , 6.5.15

-- Report on how the media was doing covering 2016; panel with Judith Miller and Ellen Ratner; Ratner said the media was giving HRC a pass, said her advice for HFA would be for HRC to talk to the press; Miller said the media's decided 2016 would be a Bush v. Clinton race; Miller said HRC's refusal to speak to the press was unacceptable; Ratner questioned why the press was even covering HRC if she wouldn't talk to them. Fox News' Happening Now, 6.5.15

-- Discussion about HRC's voting rights speech; Ari Melber said HRC's campaign fundamentally changed on Thursday, said HRC did the first truly campaign-level speech; used footage from HRC's voting rights speech; Krystal Ball called HRC's automatic registration proposal very bold. MSNBC's The Cycle , 6.5.15

-- Interviewed Jon Huntsman; Huntsman said HRC was hardworking and professional as Secretary of State; Huntsman said as a registered and committed Republican that he would be finding the best candidate in that field. CNN's At This Hour With Berman and Bolduan , 6.5.15

-- Report on HRC's voting rights speech; interviewed Mark Murray; Murray noted HRC called out Republicans by name; Murray said this was a sign that HRC would rather go head-to-head with the GOPas opposed to Democrats. MSNBC's NewsNation With Tamron Hall , 6.5.15

-- Report on HRC's voting rights speech; panel with Philip Bump and Christopher Bedford; used footage of Rick Perry responding to HRC's voting rights comments on Fox News' Fox and Friends; Bedford said HRC was in trouble, said HRC was emailing out about topics that people outside of NYC and LA don't care about (like LGBT high school issues); Bedford said HRC needed to talk about the economy and populist issues, needed to punch down at Republican candidates; Bump said in-person voter fraud was virtually non-existent; Bump said HRC was fighting for voting rights made sense politically. Fox News' Happening Now , 6.5.15

-- Report on HRC's voting rights speech in Texas; showed footage of HRC talking about voting rights and hitting GOP candidates by name; panel with Larry Sabato and Jason Johnson; Johnson said HRC latched onto an issue that there's no good GOP response to, said talking about voting rights was HRC's smartest move in weeks; Sabato said HRC was right on the policy but that HRC's move is political; Sabato said this was the first time HRC had named names; Johnson said the voting rights issue was a hugely symbolic issue; Johnson said HRC had a one-two punch with voting rights. CNN's CNN Newsroom With Carol Costello , 6.5.15

-- Discussion about HRC's voting rights speech in Texas; interviewed Alex Seitz-Wald; Seitz-Wald noted this was one of the most energetic and political speeches he'd heard HRC give; Seitz-Wald noted HRC went after Republicans by name; Seitz-Wald said HRC cares a lot about voting rights, said Marc Elias had preemptively launched lawsuits in Ohio and Wisconsin to take on voting rights cases. MSNBC's The Rundown With Jose Diaz-Balart, 6.5.15

-- Report that HRC was suing the state of Ohio over voter restrictions; cut to footage of Kasich saying that HRC was getting into demagoguery and dividing the country; interviewed Chris Stirewalt; Stirewalt said that HRC intentionally drew blood from Republicans to distract from the scandals around her; Bill Hemmer noted that the issue of voting came up early in 2016; Stirewalt said HRC was accusing Republicans of racism. Fox News' America's Newsroom with Bill Hemmer and Martha MacCallum, 6.5.15

-- Report on HRC accusing the GOP of launching a crusade on voting rights; interviewed Michael Smerconish; Smerconish said he did not think the problem was registering voters, said the problem was that people didn't vote; showed footage of HRC hitting specific Republicans for making the ability to vote harder; Smerconish said HRC elevated Christie and Perry by mentioning them.CNN's New Day , 6.5.15

Hi -- Governor Hassan is announcing a new initiative on substance abuse this morning. The details are in a release copied below.

Mike wants to add a line to HRC's remarks at politics and eggs today touching on the Governor's plan. I think we are likely to get asked about it on the local interviews as well.

Republicans are pushing back saying the governor is ignoring a mandatory six month public input period before enacting her proposed changes. This is their response to that attack.

While the Governor's Office and the Attorney General are working closely with the Board of Medicine to develop stronger, more explicit and more up-to-date rules on the prescribing of opioids, there has been some resistance within the medical community to these changes. Despite this pushback, we cannot afford to wait, and the Governor will continue to work with all stakeholders, including physicians, to address the overprescribing of opioids that we know is connected to heroin use in order to save lives.

Addressing Londonderry Rotary, Governor Hassan Calls for Comprehensive, Expedited Substance Abuse Legislation

LONDONDERRY – At this morning's Rotary Club of Londonderry meeting, Governor Maggie Hassan called on the legislature to take up comprehensive substance abuse legislation as quickly as possible in order to strengthen the state's efforts to combat the heroin and substance abuse crisis.

Over the past several months, Governor Hassan has been meeting with legislative leaders from both chambers to outline legislative changes that she believes need to be made to help New Hampshire better address the opioid epidemic. Governor Hassan said that she believes the legislation should be taken up during a special session of the State Legislature by the end of the year, and barring that, an expedited bill should be sent to her desk by January 22 during the next legislative session.

"People are dying nearly every day, and we must act quickly to give patients, providers, parents and law enforcement better tools to combat this epidemic," Governor Hassan said. "Comprehensive substance abuse legislation should be the legislature's number one priority, and I believe the legislature should reconvene for a special session to address this crisis. Barring that, the legislature should have an expedited bill on my desk for signature by January 22. In addition, I continue to encourage the legislature to reauthorize our bipartisan health care expansion plan as quickly as possible, and before April when insurers must file to be in New Hampshire's marketplace."

Governor Hassan said one of the most important steps the legislature can take is reauthorizing the bipartisan New Hampshire Health Protection Program, which has already provided treatment services for substance abuse and behavioral health to thousands of Granite Staters, so that providers have the certainty that they need to safely invest in expanding treatment capacity.

In addition, items that Governor Hassan said need to be considered include:

- Cracking down on fentanyl: Fentanyl is currently a major cause of overdoses death in New Hampshire, but state law does not reflect that reality. The Governor is calling for matching the penalties for selling and distributing fentanyl with those for heroin.
- Supporting law enforcement response: Governor Hassan recently announced two grants to support local law enforcement in high-risk communities like Manchester in combating the heroin and opioid crisis.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Governor is calling for providing additional resources to the Department of Safety so that they can expand the pilot program with Manchester to assist on the ground with arresting street-level dealers and seizing illicit drugs in other hard-hit communities.

- Streamlining insurance coverage for treatment: Governor Hassan's proposal would help ensure that patients have timely access to treatment by requiring all insurance companies to use the same evaluation criteria (ASAM) – making it easier for patients to get into hospital detox beds without prior authorization and ensuring that the Department of Insurance has the tools that it needs to enforce parity.
- Updating prescriber practices to increase awareness of the risks of opioids: Governor Hassan continues to work with the medical community to develop stronger, more explicit and more up-to-date rules to prevent opioid abuse. Her proposal would require all prescriber medical boards to adopt updated rules to ensure that patients and providers are warned adequately of the risks of opioids, to follow best prescribing practices, and to ensure that prescribers are receiving appropriate medical education on prescribing opioids and best pain management exercises. Stopping addiction before it starts is a critical component to a comprehensive approach, and it is clear that the overprescribing of opioids plays a role in the crisis, but right now, the Board of Medicine rules are out of-date, linking to a statement that say opioids have a low risk for addiction, among other issues.
- Limiting duration for emergency room prescriptions: As part of updated prescribing practices, Governor Hassan proposes considering a limit on emergency room opioid prescriptions for a period of five to seven days so that patients are getting a long-term treatment plan from their primary care providers.
- Expanding drug courts: The Governor continues to support funding for a statewide drug court plan.
- Strengthening the Prescription Drug Monitoring Program (PDMP): Governor Hassan worked to launch the PDMP in October 2014 and signed bipartisan legislation earlier this year to facilitate data-sharing with other states. Governor Hassan proposes continuing efforts to strengthen the functionality and technology of the PDMP so that more prescribers can use it in a timely fashion.
- Other potential measures: The Governor would also support legislation that would require the Department of Justice and the Department of Health and Human Services to develop new rules for licensing and regulating pain and methadone clinics, as well as adding a pain management specialist to the Board of Medicine.

"There is no excuse for inaction as we continue our ongoing efforts to combat the heroin and substance abuse crisis, and I remain committed to working with the legislature to develop and finalize this important legislation," Governor Hassan said. "We will have to continue to fight together – each and every one of us, every single day – to build on our efforts to combat this crisis."

On Background-- not really accurate. I was not for accelerating to the fall. I thought we could wait until 2015, but I wanted her to make a decision to run and dispense with an "exploratory phase", and I wanted to give her time to think and and make a clear decision to run, but that could happen in 2015. Her clock dictated the April start.

Dear John –

Thanks so much for your email. I should have updated you yesterday with the news that Judge Leon and I talked just after he got the email below. I understand that he is does not want to expand the course. We will keep everything as is for this semester. We also talked about pushing the class size limit down to 18 for next year and possibly adding some prerequisites to the course. He is going to reach out directly to you to talk about that.

Best,
Sally

The seminar should have been enrolled with full-time and part-time students having equal priority. If the system had worked as it should have, graduating full-time and the part-time students would have had the highest priority overall in both the enrollment and waitlist process. Unfortunately, the registration system did not work as it should have. As a result there are nine 3Ls who are waitlisted for the course and a few non-graduating part-time students who were enrolled in the seminar. I've gone into this detail as background for our request, which is: would you be willing to expand your class by 2 or 3 students to allow us to help a few of the graduating students who are so keen to take your seminar? This is a gentle ask. I'm also hesitant to make it! We recognize how busy you both are with very demanding full-time work. It's a privilege to be able to have you teach at all so we certainly understand if you feel that you are at capacity. Please feel no hesitation if you have no desire to expand the seminar. You do have 21 students currently enrolled and your classroom (588) can seat up to 24 students at the table.

Subject:	SPEAKER INVITATION: 2016 Food Tank Summit in Washington, D.C.

Dear John,

On behalf of American University and Food Tank, we are delighted to invite you to be a keynote speaker at the second annual Food Tank Summit to be held in Washington, D.C. on April 20-21, 2016. The event will take place at The Greenberg Theatre and will be shown via livestream at special watch events all over the world.

The focus of the Food Tank Summits are to highlight creative and innovative ways to cultivate a better food system. This year, Food Tank is quadrupling the number of summits. In 2015, Food Tank hosted the 1st annual summit in partnership with The George Washington University. The event sold out within minutes, bringing together 400+ in person attendees and more than 15,500 livestream viewers. We are thrilled to expand this platform to Sacramento, Chicago, and Sao Paulo, Brazil this year, in addition to Washington, D.C. again.

Food Tank Summits bring together policymakers, academics, youth, members of the funding and donor community, and advocates to inject new energy into the international dialogue around alleviating hunger and obesity, preventing food waste, recognizing the role of women and youth in the food system, and ensuring access to safe, affordable, and nutritious food for all.

The Summit will be two inspiring days, the first will be filled with interactive discussion, including a variety of speakers from around the world. The first day of events will include dynamic panel discussion and exciting keynote speakers. The second day will be experiential, creating opportunities for networking, advocacy, touring urban farms, workshops, seasonal, local food, and lots of fun.

We think your extraordinary commitment to sustainability in the food system will make you an ideal speaker for the Summit, and we are sure the audience will be thrilled to hear from you. We will be thrilled if you will consider speaking at the Summit.

Each speaker will be part of a panel made up of five to seven leading experts who will each have exactly five minutes to explore the challenges and solutions they find in their work. We find that this format allows speakers to distill their thoughts in a creative way, while also giving the audience an opportunity to hear from a wide cross-section of the food movement. The panel discussion will be followed by a question and answer session with the audience.

Please let us know if you are interested and can make the time to join us. You can email me at Danielle@foodtank.com or call 202-590-1037 if you have any questions. I would be incredibly honored for you to join us! Read more about the 2016 Food Tank Summits HERE .

Sincerely,

Danielle

Subject:	Hillary's Email Article as promised when we spoke in CA. Michelle

John,

As promised here is the Huff Po article written back in March called "Hillary's Blackberry ." This article was an attempt to explain (in my Huff Po snarky voice) that Hillary's decision on email while Secretary of State was not a bad one. Rather, it was a thoughtful choice made to keep her data and correspondence safe and protected.

Yes, I know that it was hoped that the email issue would fade away, but at least in Silicon Valley it is alive and well as evidenced last Monday evening. A simple one or two page of fact bullets at least out here -- might go a very long way..

Frankly, if we can get ahead of the narrative on this email issue then we can shape the discussion on trust. I know it's not as simple as explaining it all away with her use of the secure Blackberry/Exchange Server environment, but it could frame the dialogue and be a launching point for other issues.

Please know that I can suggest a draft or comment on staff work, if you want me to do so. This is your strategic wheel house so I defer to your advice and counsel.

I'm also including a piece on the strategic use of social media at the launch for your review. This one got a great deal of traffic on Twitter.

I am here and happy to help and assist.

Kind regards, Michelle

John--

Earlier this week, I asked you to help me reach my online fundraising goal of $25,000 before the FEC filing deadline on Tuesday evening. You blew past that number contributing $40,299, with hundreds of donations in the final hours of the quarter!

Not only did we surpass our online fundaising goal, but thanks to all of your support, we have had our strongest quarter ever! Your support is allowing us to run the campaign we need to win on November 4th.

There are only 33 days left until Election Day and we are pulling out all of the stops to make sure we do our part to turn Virginia blue on November 4th, starting with the Tenth District. We have just over a month to make history nationwide, and I am excited for the challenge and thankful for all of your support along the way.

Thanks so much for all you do,

Judy Feder

OK before this spins out of control she or somebody needs to say the following:

Nancy Reagan in fact helped start a national conversation about HIV and AIDS but as we all know it was far too little and way too late. When Bill Clinton ran for president in 1992 it was on a platform that was highly critical of the Republican response to the HIV crisis. It had been a record of neglect. As first lady and as senator and as Secretary of State Hillary has been a champion for increased funding and raising awareness.

She understands the devastation the Reagen era AIDS policies caused and is committed to never repeating them.

I've tried to do a number of things here: more clearly define the choice, cast her record and agenda in moral justice terms, ground everything in her life's work and values, and at places give it more edge and contrast. See what you think...

I totally agree w/jake.
Let's not start evasive.
Let's just say we'll respond soon. Pretty busy day.

I'm fine deferring but I do think that on no-brainers like this we shouldn't let the questions build.

Rather than give punt language that sounds like a dodge just say you'll get back to him when you can. We did just start.

Jesse --

Ruby told me that you are the person to reach: Previously Sec. Clinton has been ambiguous, to my knowledge, on whether she believes same-sex couples have a constitutional right to marriage. Does Sec. Clinton believe states can ban same-sex couples from marrying, or does she believe such bans are unconstitutional?

Thanks --

Agree with the less definitive statement. Or maybe even "a terrorist element is a real possibility here."
